The feature of the trade is the tremendous quantity of Russian and Siberian bacon that is being shipped to the English market. This, together with the immense killings in Denmark, promises to fill up the scarcity of American. At the time of writing Canadian sides are making 72s. a cwt., and at this price, English, Irish and Danish can be had in all selections.

"THE BETRAYAL"

BY E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

She came in unaccustomed garb to me. She wore a grey dress of some soft material, and a large, black hat with feathers. Her skirts were gathered up in her hand, and I heard the jingling of harness at the corner of the avenue where her carriage was waiting. I opened the door, and she entered with a soft swish of silk and a gentle rustling. The room seemed instantly full of perfume of Neapolitan violets, a great bunch of which were in her bosom.

She looked swiftly around, and I fancied that it was a relief to her to find me alone.

"Is Colonel Ray here?" she asked.

"He is waiting for you," I answered "on the sands. I promised to call him directly you came."

I moved toward the door, but she checked me with an imperative gesture.

"Wait," she said.

I came slowly back and stood by my table. She was sitting with her hands clasped together, looking into the fire. She looked very girlish and frail.

"I want to think—for a moment," she said. "Everything seems confusion. My father has commanded me to break my engagement with Colonel Ray."

I remained silent. What was there, indeed, for me to say?

"In my heart," she went on slowly, "I know that my father is wrong and that Colonel Ray is right. He has simply done his duty. Blenavon was being sorely tempted. He is better away—out of the country. Oh, I am sure of that."

"Colonel Ray has done what he believed to be his duty," I said slowly. "It is hard that he should suffer for that."

"Often," she murmured, "one has to suffer for doing the right thing. My father has made himself a poor man because of his sense of what was right. I do not know what to do."

I glanced out of the window. For many reasons I did not wish to prolong this interview.

"He is waiting," I reminded her.

"I must do one of two things," she murmured. "I must break my faith with my father—or with him."

Then she lifted her eyes to mine.

"Tell me what you think, Mr. Ducaine?" she asked.

I opened my lips to speak, but I could not. Was it fair that she should ask me? My little room was peopled with dreams of her, with delightful but impossible visions. My nerves were full of the joy of her presence. It was madness to ask for my judgment, when the very poetry of my life was an unreasoning and hopeless love for her.

"I cannot," I muttered. "You must not ask me."

She seemed surprised. After all, I had guarded my secret well, then?

"You will not refuse to help me," she pleaded.

I set my teeth hard. I longed for Ray, but there were no signs of him.

"Your father has ordered you to break your engagement with Colonel Ray," I said, "but he has done so under a misapprehension of the facts. You owe obedience to your father, but you owe more—to—the man whose wife you have promised to be. I do not think you should give him up."

She listened eagerly. Was it my fancy, or was she indeed a little paler? Her eyes seemed to gleam with a strange softness in the twilight. Her head drooped a little as she resumed her former thoughtful attitude.

"Thank you," she said, simply. "I believe that you are right."

I caught up a bundle of papers from my desk, and stole softly from the room. Ray was close at hand, and I called to him.

"She is in there waiting for you," I said. "I have some transcribed matter, which I am taking up to the safe."

Ray nodded abruptly, and I heard the door of my cottage open and close behind him.

CHAPTER XXX.

MOSTYN RAY'S LOVE STORY.

In a dark corner of the library, sitting motionless before a small writing desk, I found the Duke. The table was littered all over with papers, a ledger or two and various documents. I had met Mr. Hulshaw, the agent to the estates, in the drive, so I judged that the two had had business together.

The Duke had not greeted me on my entrance, and he seemed to be asleep in his chair. But at the sound of the electric bell, which announced the opening of the safe, he turned sharply round.

"Is that you, Ducaine?"

"Yes, your Grace," I answered.

"What are you doing there?"

"I have brought up the first batch of copy, sir," I answered.

"You have sealed it properly?"

"With Lord Chelsford's seal, sir," I told him.

He turned round in his chair sharply.

"What's that?" he asked.

"Lord Chelsford gave me an old signet ring before he left, sir," I said, "with a very peculiar design. I wear it attached by a chain to an iron bracelet round my arm."

"Let me see it," the Duke ordered.

I took off my coat, and baring my arm, showed him the ring hanging by a few inches of strong chain from the bracelet. He examined the design curiously.

"How do you detach it?" he asked.

"I cannot detach it, sir," I answered. "The bracelet has a Bramah lock, and Lord Chelsford has the key. He used to wear it many years ago when he was Queen's messenger."

The Duke examined the ring long and searchingly. Then he looked from it into my face.

"You mean to say that you cannot take that off?"

The Duke shrugged his shoulders.

"Chelsford's methods seem to me to savour a little of opera bouffe," he remarked drily. "For my own part I believe that these marvellous documents would be perfectly safe in the unlocked drawer of my desk. I do not believe any of these stories which come from Paris about copies of our work being in existence. I do not wish you to be careless, of course, but don't overdo your precautions. This place is scarcely so much a nest of conspirators as faddists like Chelsford and Ray would have us believe."

"I am glad to hear that you think so, sir," I answered. "Our precautions do seem a little elaborate, but it is quite certain that the Winchester papers were disturbed."

"I do not choose to believe it, Ducaine," the Duke said, irritably. "Kindly remember that."

"Very good, sir," I answered. "There is nothing else you wish to say to me?"

"There is something else," the Duke answered coldly. "I understand that the police, yesterday, on a sworn affidavit, were granted a search warrant to examine your premises for stolen property. What the devil is the meaning of this?"

"I think, sir," I answered, "that the stolen property was a pretext. It seems that during the last few days has come to light that the man whose body I found on the sands was not washed in from the sea, but was a stranger, who had arrived in Brasterthe previous evening, and had made inquiries as to where I lived. It seems to be the desire of the police, therefore, to connect me in some way with the affair."

The Duke looked at me searchingly.

"I presume," he said, "that they had something in the nature of evidence, or they would scarcely have been able to sweat the affidavit for the search warrant."

"They have nothing more direct, sir, than that the body was found close to my cottage, that he had presumably left Brasterto see me, and that I was foolish enough to persuade the person, of whom the dead man made these inquiries in Brasterto come forward at the inquest."

"Stop! Stop! the Duke said irritably. "You did what?"

"The young woman of whom he inquired was close at hand when I discovered the body of the man," I said. "She told me about him. I was a little upset, and I suggested that there was no necessity for her to disclose the fact of having seen him."

"It was a remarkably foolish thing of you to do," the Duke said.

"I am realizing it now, sir," I answered.

"Did this person call on you at all?" the Duke asked.

"No, sir. You may remember that it was the night of Colonel Ray's lecture. He called to see me on his way back and found me ill. I believe that this person looked in at the window and went away. I saw no more of him alive after this."

"You have some idea, I presume, as to his identity?"

"I have no definite information, your Grace," I answered.

The Duke did not look at me for several moments.

"I am afraid," he said stiffly, "that you may experience some inconvenience from this most ill-advised attempt of yours to suppress evidence which should most certainly have been given at the inquest. However, I have no doubt that your story is true. I have some inquiries now before me from the police station. I will do what I can for you. Good evening, Ducaine."

"Good evening, sir," I answered. "I am much obliged to you."

I walked homewards across the park. The carriage had gone from the private road, and Ray was alone when I entered. It was impossible to tell what had happened from his expression. He sat stretched out in my easy chair, smoking furiously, and his face was impassive. Grooton served us with dinner, and he ate and drank with only a few curt remarks. But afterwards, when I was deep in my work, he suddenly addressed me.

"Boy," he then said, "turn round and listen to me."

I obeyed him at once.

"Listen well," he said, "for I am not given to confidences. Yet I am going to speak to you of the secret places of my life."

I laid down the pen which I had been holding between my fingers, and turned my chair. I judged that it was not necessary for me to speak, nor apparently did he think so.

"I have been soldiering all my days," he said, "since I was a child almost. It is a glorious life. God knows I have never grudged a single month of it. But when one comes back once more to dwell amongst civilians one realizes that there is another side to life. It is so with me. I am not given to doubts or to asking advice from any man. But the time has come when I have the one and need the other."

He paused, knocked out some ashes from his pipe, and relighted it.

"I have loved two more in my life Guy," he went on slowly. "The first was your mother."

I started a little, but I still held my peace. He looked hard into the ashes of the fire, and continued.

"I tried my best," he said, "to be a friend to her after her marriage, and I hope, I think, that I succeeded. I even did my best to fight that woman's influence with your father at Gibraltar. There I failed. I was foredoomed to failure. She had the trick of playing what tune she cared to on a man's heartstrings. After it was all over, and your father and she had left the place, I spent years trying to persuade your mother to get a divorce and marry me. But she was the daughter of a Bishop, a High Churchwoman, and a holy woman. She died with your father's name upon her lips."

I shuddered. The words were spoken so deliberately, and yet with such vibrant force.

"After that," Ray continued, "came Egypt, then India, and afterwards Khartoum. I came home before the last war, and I met Lady Angela. I am so little of a woman's man that I suppose the gul whim I thought of at all became like an angel, a creature altogether apart from that sex of whom I know so little. However, that may be, she was the second woman to hold any place in my heart—as she most surely will be the last. Then the war broke out, luck came my way, and I returned with a greater reputation than I deserved. The very night of my return I asked Lady Angela to marry me, and she consented."

He puffed vigorously at his pipe, but he seemed wholly ignorant of the fact that it was out. His face was set in its grimmest lines. He looked steadily at a certain spot in the fire and went on.

"There are things," he said, "which troubled me little at the time, but which just lately have been on my mind. The first is that I am nearly fifty, and Lady Angela is twenty-one. The second is that I came home with all the tinsel and glamour of a popular hero. Heaven knows I loathed it, but the fact remains. The King's reception, the V.C., and all that sort of thing, I suppose, accounted for it. Anyhow, I am troubled with this reflection. Lady Angela was very young, and I fear that her imagination was touched. She accepted my offer, and she has been very loyal. Until to-night no word of disagreement has passed between us. But there have been times lately when I have fancied that I have noticed a change. A time has come now when I could give her back her freedom without reproach on either side. I want to know whether it is my duty to give it her back."

Then Ray looked straight into my face, and the colour flamed there, for I saw now why he had made me his confidant.

"What do you think, Guy? You are only a boy, but you are of her age, and you have seen a little of her lately. You are only a boy, but then only boys and novelists understand women. Speak up and tell me what is in your mind."

"I will tell you this," I answered hotly. "If I were you, and Lady Angela had promised to be my wife, I would not sit and hatch scruples about marrying her. I would marry her first, and make her happy afterwards, and as for the rest—for the questions which you have asked me, and yet not put into words—I have never heard or seen in Lady Angela the slightest sing that you were not her lover as well as the man whom she was engaged to marry. As for my own folly, since you seem to have noticed it, no one knows better than I that it is the rankest, most absurd presumption. But with me it begins and ends. That is a most absolute and certain fact."

Ray rapped his pipe upon the table.

It was a wild dream—a wonderful one. But, before me I saw the stern white face of the man, eager for his share of happiness after all these magnificent years of dauntless service. I forgot my own distrust of him, his coldness, his brutality. I remembered only those other and greater things.

"Even were I in such a position," I said, "it would make no difference. I am sure that Lady Angela is loyal. She has no idea—and it is not worth while that she should have."

"You would have me marry her, then?" he asked solwly.

"There is only one thing," I said, taking my courage into my hands.

"And that?" he asked sharply.

"That," I answered, "lies between you and your conscience."

He rose to his feet.

"Wait here," he said, "and I will show you my justification."

TO CURE A HEADACHE

The experience of Mr. O. Barber, Simcoe, Ont., is of interest to all who suffer from headaches. He writes: "For a long time I was troubled with headaches which came on about once a week with such violence that I could not eat or do my work. Headache powders and quick cures did me no good. I then used six boxes of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food and have not been troubled with headache since. That was eight months ago."

Do your baking with flour made exclusively of the HIGH-GRADE constituents of the HARD-WHEAT berry

Have you ever baked with flour made exclusively of the high-grade constituents of the hard wheat berry? If you haven't, now is the time to try PURITY Flour.

Only the cream of the Manitoba hard wheat—the best wheat in the world—is used for PURITY Flour. More than that, only a portion of the flour milled from this wheat goes into the sacks and barrels branded PURITY.

PURITY Flour consists exclusively of the high-grade constituents or portions of the Manitoba hard wheat berry.

Every wheat berry has both low-grade and high-grade constituents which are separated during our process of milling. So exact is our process that it entirely eliminates all the low-grade portions from the flour which is finally branded PURITY.

The greater strength of PURITY Flour makes it go farther in the baking. With it you can make more loaves to the sack or barrel than you have ever succeeded in doing before. The loaves will be more nutritious, too, because they contain the high-quality gluten, starch, phosphates and other muscle-building and blood-enriching elements of the hard wheat berry.

Naturally flour that consists exclusively of the high-grade constituents of the best hard wheat has greater strength and nutriment, superior color, more delicate flavor.

If you'll just try to realize fully what it means to your cooking-reputation you'll soon be using PURITY Flour.

Of course, PURITY Flour will cost you a few cents more than lower-grade hard wheat flour or soft wheat flour.

But PURITY is very economical because it makes "More bread and better bread." The cost per loaf is no more than when using weaker flour, and the food value is much greater.

Tell your grocer you are in a hurry to try PURITY Flour. He will supply you promptly.

When you see the batch of beautiful snow-white loaves, with their soft, evenly-textured crumb and dainty golden-brown crust, you'll be proud of your success with PURITY Flour. When you taste and enjoy the superb flavor of such high-class bread you'll be prouder still.

If you don't want to buy a large sack or barrel, you can get a small bag. PURITY is packed in 7, 14, 24, 49 and 98 pound sacks. Also in barrels and half-barrels.

Make certain the PURITY trade-mark is on the sack or barrel you buy, for that is your guide to the strong, reliable, high-quality flour that makes

Life Insurance

Many a father is going to mortgage the house in town or the farm in the country this Fall that the son may go to college. Possibly that "rainy day" fund is going to be drawn upon for this purpose. I have enough faith in Canadian youth to believe in such investments. The son intends to pay back to his father every cent just as soon as he gets into business for himself. With but an exception now and then, he will—If He Lives. It is the latter point I want to emphasize. Life is not a certainty. A glance at any college catalogue will show the asterisk in the list of students and the word "deceased" at the bottom of the page. Frequently there is added to the loss of the son, the Loss of the Cost of His Education. The latter may mean the loss of the home. One of the legitimate uses of life insurance, it seems to me, is to take care of just such cases. The cost of life insurance for the son is very slight, because he is young and a good risk. It adds but little to the financial burden. In return it gives full protection to the parent, and in later years—after college debts are paid—it safeguards the home which the son sets up for himself. No son who can get insurance has the right to mortgage his father's or his mother's future happiness when there is such a good way to avoid it. One word more, young man. Be sure that your insurance is in a well established, responsible company.

Some one has said, "The true value of a life assurance policy must be gauged by the security of the protection given; if it proves to be a good investment, all the better; when both are shown, there is nothing on earth to equal it."

The security of the protection afforded by the SUN LIFE OF CANADA needs no comment, and the profits paid—let the actual results tell their own forceful story.

The Winterton Treasures

A Short Story

"It must be done, I suppose," said Laurence Winterton to himself; "but it is a horrid bore, all the same."

He stood with a frown on his handsome brows, looking out of the windows of his rather dreary lodgings into the hot, glaring London street, his annoyed grey eyes seeming to see nothing of the whirl of the traffic, but rather to be contemplating some far remoter scene. It is possible that few people would have sympathized with him in his vexation; nevertheless, it was very real and deep. He had just come into a fine property, on the death of his uncle; a man who had been something of a recluse, and had entertained no one at his picturesque old manor-house in Hertfordshire, for a score of years. Laurence had seen him only once in his life, and could not be said to mourn for him, and his friends and acquaintances, for the most part, congratulated him upon inheriting an old country mansion standing in the midst of a beautiful park, and a rent-roll of something like four thousand a year. Nevertheless, he was not in a mood which seemed to betoken satisfaction. From time to time he glanced at a letter, which he held crushed up in one hand, and when he straightened it out and read it for about the third time, his brow grew darker than before.

Yet very few lines were traced upon the black-edged paper; but, few as they were, they were written in a bold, resolute hand, which seemed, somehow, to suggest a good deal of resolution on the part of the writer.

"Mrs. Tracy and Miss Tracy present their compliments to Mr. Laurence Winterton, and regret that it is impossible for them to continue their residence at Winterton Park, or to accept the allowance which Mr. Laurence Winterton so generously wishes to confer.

Dene Cottage, Shawfield,

"Ridiculous!" muttered Laurence to himself. Old Beard told me that they had not more than sixty pounds a year, and how on earth are they going to live on that? Of course, I understand that they are rather sore about my uncle's will; certainly he might have left them something, and taken the onus off my shoulders; but no; as he left them nothing, they must needs stand on their dignity as gentlewomen, and refuse to accept anything from me, because it would seem like taking charity. Well, there is nothing to prevent me from going down to Winterton Park tomorrow, and if I see them, I may, perhaps, be able to alter their position."

His face brightened a little at this thought. He was, in very truth, a generous man, although the word "generously" in the letter seemed to have been written with a sneer. His lawyers had told him that Mrs. Tracy and her daughter, who were distant cousins of old Mr. Winterton, had no special claim upon him, and that a very small pension to Mrs. Tracy, for her services in the past as housekeeper, would meet all needs of the case.

"Of course," they had said, "your uncle gave her a good salary, and she has probably saved a good deal. She could live in a quiet way, while her daughter went out as a governess or companion—there would be no hardness in that."

"But why should they turn out at all?" Laurence had asked. "Winterton Park has been her home, I believe, for the last fifteen years. It is big enough for both of us surely? If she likes to stay, I will continue the allowance that my uncle used to make, or double it if she goes into a house of her own. No doubt, that is what my uncle would have liked me to do."

But even this proposition, it seems, failed to content Mrs. Tracy and her daughter. Their refusal to accept help or kindness from Laurence was as decided as it was—in Laurence's eyes—unreasonable. He wondered whether Mrs. Tracy had written the letter. He had received one or two little notes, in the course of the last few years, from Mrs. Tracy, on matters of business, and they had all been written with pale ink, in a feeble, sloping, and almost illegible hand, which he had found particularly difficult to read; but in this letter, the blackest fluid had been employed; the down strokes of the letters were thick and dark, and the upward flourish at the end of the last word had a decidedly defiant air. The letter could not have been written by Mrs. Tracy; of that Laurence felt sure.

At last he stuffed the letter contemptuously into his pocket, and went off to make preparations for his departure to Winterton Park next morning. He had been abroad at the time of his uncle's death, and had reached England only a few days ago; and he shrank a little from seeming to be too much in a hurry to take possession of the old house. Now, however, that the widow and her daughter were out of it, there seemed no reason why he should not go at once.

Curiously enough, Mr. Beard had told him, nearly all the household had resigned during the three months that had elapsed between the old man's death and Laurence's return. The only old servant in the house was an ancient butler, of whom Laurence retained a vivid recollection. He still remained, and was assisted by two or three newly-engaged servants; "but of course," Mr. Beard explained, "we did not think it worth while to engage a large staff, until we knew whether you meant to remain at Winterton Park or not."

"I shall certainly remain," said Laurence, "and I will see about the servants when I have been to the house. But it seems an odd thing that all the servants should have given notice. I suppose they did not like the idea of a newcomer."

"I suppose not," said Mr. Beard, and his face remained so preternaturally rigid, that Laurence could not help imagining that it covered some hidden significance.

However, as he went by train from King's Cross to Winterton next day, he recovered his spirits. He did not remember Winterton Park very well; but he was extremely pleased with its appearance. It was really a fine old building, built of red brick, almost covered with creepers, and before the rather stately facade stretched a wide terrace, with steps leading down into the gardens, and a smooth sheet of water beyond. Laurence stepped into the old hall, with a feeling that he was at last at home. Some memories of the old place came back to his mind, as he glanced round the oak-panelled walls, and saw the pictured beauties and warriors which had hung there for so many years. He remembered the the gleam of the silver goblets which crossed swords and suits of armour on the walls, and he looked for the gleam of the silver goblets which used to stand on a high side-board at one end of the hall. But he missed them from their places, and concluded that they had been removed for the sake of safety. He spoke kindly to the old butler, Truelove, who came to meet him with a rather tremulous welcome, and then, having seen the room they had prepared for him, he sat down to lunch, intending to walk through the house afterwards. What struck him, at once, was the extraordinary poverty of the table appointments. To this day, he remembered that when he lunched at Winterton Park as a boy, there had been heavy silver spoons and forks, silver tankards and trays, and salt cellars, all extremely valuable. Probably they had gone to the bankers; but it was rather odd that Beard had said nothing about them. He began to question the butler; but soon discovered that that functionary's mind was tordering on a state of senile decay, and that he could give no answer to the questions Winterton asked. All he could do was to produce the keys, of which the master of the house took possession, and after lunch he started for a tour of inspection through the house. Now the pre-eminent glory of the Wintertons had always been their stock of plate. There was a little gold plate—not very much—but there was a unique collection of silver, mostly of the Queen Anne and Jacobean period. There were silver bowls and snuff boxes, jugs, cups and vases, and a great number of quaint trifles, such as minature carriages, chairs and fabulous monsters, in solid silver, which are now the pride and joy of a collector's heart. Of these things, Winterton could not find a trace. The heavy forks and spoons, he certainly discovered in an open drawer, as if nobody troubled overmuch about the care of them; but the quaint and beautiful objects of which he believed that Mr. Beard had given him a list, were nowhere to be found. He questioned the old butler in vain; he knew it was useless to question the young servants who had lately come into the house. Then he telegraphed to Mr. Beard, to ask whether the old silver had been deposited at the bank. The answer was in the negative. It had always been kept at the house, and there were iron safes in the wall, expressly designed for its safety.

"The things have gone; that is certain," said Laurence, staring at the empty safes. "It looks as if there had been a burglary. But surely old Truelove is not so far gone as to be ignorant, if that had been the case."

Then he mused over the resignation of the servants, and their subsequent departure.

"Look very much as though they had had a hand in it," the young man murmured to himself. "Possibly they were so annoyed at having no legacy, that they thought they might as well divide the spoil. But Mrs. Tracy ought to have looked after that, if she were housekeeper here at the time. Mrs. Tracy—yes; she is in the neighbourhood. I might as well call upon her, and ascertain what I can from her."

On the afternoon of the next day, therefore, he set forth for Dene Cottage, which was a small, white dwelling, in a shady lane; picturesque, certainly; but not much above the level of a workman's cottage.

Laurence gave his name to a small girl of thirteen, who answered the door, and who came back to him, stating that "Missis was not very well, and Miss Frank was engaged."

"Who is 'Miss Frank'?" thought the young man to himself. Then he added aloud: "I have come on very important business. I should be very much obliged to Mrs. Tracy or Miss Tracy, if one of them could see me."

Instantly, there stepped forth from an inner room, the person of a young lady, whom Laurence divined at once to be Mrs. Tracy's daughter. She was tall, slight, and extremely handsome, with a kind of dark, glowing beauty, which Laurence especially admired. He fancied that he saw in her face, too, the determination and the defiance which he had read in the letter that she probably had written to him, in her mother's name.

He introduced himself, as politely as possible, and told his errand without circumlocution. There seemed, he said, to be some doubt as to the place in which his uncle's collection of plate and silver ornaments was kept. He had come to ask Mrs. Tracy for information.

Miss Tracy listened with the air of a person who had never heard of Winterton Park and its treasures before, and then ushered the young man straight into the presence of her mother, a little faded, frightened-looking woman, not in the least like her daughter, who sat in an arm-chair, huddled up in a white shawl, and who looked as if she could hardly rouse herself to speak.

"The silver, my dear? But it was all right when we left, was it not?"

"Perfectly," said Miss Tracy, with a hard look at Winterton.

"It was kept in the safes," said the widow nervously, "and if it is not there now—oh, dear, dear! what is to be done?—some burglar must have got in and taken it. I assure you, Mr. Winterton, it was there on

POWER OF BISHOPS IS GREATLY SHORN BY PAPAL DECREE

Cannot Remove Rectors of Parishes on Their Own Initiative.

SPECIAL TRIBUNALS ARE ESTABLISHED

Examiners and Consultors Must Investigate Evidence in Each Case and Majority Vote Rules.

(Special Dispatch.)

Rome, Saturday.—A decree of the utmost importance to all bishops and priests in the United States has been issued by the Consistorial Congregation. Up to the present the bishops have been the sole arbiters in determining the removal of rectors of parishes, of which there are about eight thousand in the United States. The new decree completely changes this system and establishes a rigorous procedure regulating all such removals.

In the first place, the number of causes which can justify the removal of a rector against his will are clearly specified under nine heads, including perpetual insanity, grave physical or mental incapacity, loss of reputation, imminent danger of scandal, rooted hostility of the people, bad administration, gross neglect of parochial duties and confirmed disobedience, but even when any of these clauses is undeniably present the Bishop cannot remove the offending rector on his own initiative.

Diocesan Examination Provided.

In every diocese a number of examiners and consultors will be appointed. When a case of removal is to be discussed the Bishop must call the two senior examiners, and with them institute a formal examination of the case. Then the Bishop and the two examiners vote. If a majority of the three is in favor of removal, the rector is formally invited to resign.

If he declines he has the right of presenting evidence to show that the decision was wrong, and the tribunal of three examines all the evidence he can bring. Then they vote again with the obligation in conscience not to decree his removal unless convinced of its justification and necessity. A majority of two again is decisive.

If this formal decision is again in favor of removal the rector may appeal. The Bishop then summons the two senior consultors of the diocese and with them constitutes a new tribunal before which the rector may present fresh evidence. If his removal is eventually decreed the Bishop makes suitable provision for him.

Applies to Entire Church.

The present decree is to apply to the entire Church. It constitutes the first implementation of the new code of ecclesiastical law which is to govern the Catholic Church in all countries. It greatly diminishes the powers of bishops in most English speaking countries and grants rectors of this diocese fixity of tenure and a legal guarantee which they have never before enjoyed. At the same time it will be welcomed by the bishops as relieving them of a very grave responsibility.

The decree also is most important as indicating the character of the new code of Pius X., which is the first complete attempt ever made to codify the legislation of the Church. A commission of cardinals and forty-five consultors, chosen from among the most learned experts in canon law in the whole world, has been at work on this gigantic undertaking for seven years, and has only now completed its work.

Bishops to Study Code.

At the beginning of the new year the first draft of the new code will be sent, with the strictest obligation of secrecy, to all the bishops in the world. They will be required to study it and suggest such changes as they may think advisable. Three months will be allowed for this work.

When all the copies of the draft, with the subjoined observations, are returned to Rome the Pontifical commission for the codification of the canon law will examine and revise the entire work. The promulgation of the code will take place early in 1911 unless unforeseen events prevent it.

There was some idea of reopening the Vatican Council for the solemn promulgation and the settlement of various important questions connected with its scriptures, but this plan has been definitely abandoned.

MAKES STAGE PLEA FOR ARMY SERVICE

(Special Dispatch.)

London, Saturday.

There are a great many distinguished men in England besides Lord Roberts who believe in enforced military service. Among them is the well known dramatist, Mr. Henry Arthur Jones. So enthusiastic is Mr. Jones on the subject that he wrote a play about it, which was produced the other night at the Alhambra Theatre under the title "Fall In, Rookies." The title he first selected was "Drill the Rascals," but the censor objected to that.

It's not so much of a play as it is a presentment in favor of military service, but what it lacks in a dramatic way it makes up for in strength of argument. As this is just what Mr. Jones aimed for he can consider his comedy a shining success. I was surprised that the big audience agreed so thoroughly with the author's sentiments, for the average Englishman just now is decidedly apathetic as to soldiering. But all that there was lots of applause and not a few cheers whenever the advantages of a military training were mentioned.

Queen Mary May Hold Court During Day; London Society Is Alarmed at Prospect

DORCHESTER HOUSE DOORS AGAIN OPEN

(Special Dispatch.)

London, Saturday.

WHAT is characterized among society women as "a ghastly rumor" is afloat that Queen Mary, who dislikes late hours, probably will revert to the Victorian custom and hold her courts in the daytime. They hope that rumor is at fault, but court dressmakers are in high hopes that the rumor may prove true, and with very good reason.

It is a very different thing attending a court in the daytime than at night. For night wear the dresses need be neither so expensive nor, indeed, brand new. Women can go to court in dresses which have done duty at other functions, or even at opera, with, perhaps, the addition of the regulation long train and a bunch of ostrich feathers on their heads.

Under the artificial light slight defects can be hidden. Even under the glare of the electric light a dress which has been worn before may bear the stamp of brand newness, but not in daylight. Hence the joy of the court dressmakers, who, naturally, had more profitable seasons during the reign of Queen Victoria than they had under the régime of King Edward and Queen Alexandra.

REAL ORDEAL FOR SOCIETY.

Apart from the convenience of wearing dresses which have done service before women do not like the idea of the rumored change, because they have to turn out in broad daylight in full evening clothes, much decollete, powdered cheeks, diamonds and feathers, to say nothing of sitting in their carriages in the Mall, waiting their turn to enter the Palace courtyard, under the searching glances and critical remarks of the suburban ladies who always attended in big crowds in the Victorian Court days.

The long deferred visit of the Queen of the Netherlands and the Prince Consort to King George and Queen Mary has, it now would appear, been put off indefinitely; but a royal visitor in the near future will be the Queen Mother of the Netherlands, Queen Emma, of course, is the sister of the Duchess of Albany, with whom she is to stay at Claremont, and she will be welcomed by, in addition to the Duchess of Albany, Prince and Princess Alexander of Teck and their children. Before she returns to her own country she is expected to pay a visit to Queen Alexandra at Sandringham.

PRINCE ALEXANDER OF TECK.

One result of the death of Prince Francis of Teck has been the elevation of his younger brother, Prince Alexander of Teck, to a more prominent position in society. Prince Alexander at once accepted the responsibility of carrying on the philanthropic duties which Prince Francis engaged in so whole-heartedly.

Prince Alexander is still on the sunny side of forty and is still "Young Teck" to his intimates. Tall and broad in proportion, handsome and soldierly, a good all round sportsman and an accomplished linguist, Prince Alexander is pretty well equipped for the onerous duties he will be expected to undertake when the new reign is properly under way.

He is a captain of the Horse Guards Blue, in which he got his first commission fifteen years ago, and no officer in the British army is more popular than he. He won his D. S. O. in the South African war, and also distinguished himself during the Matabele campaign. Now he is going over to the Grenadier Guards, of which he ultimately will be commander.

DORCHESTER HOUSE OPEN.

While Mrs. Whitelaw Reid was away in America Dorchester House was practically closed, so far as anything in the manner of social functions was concerned, but its hospitable doors are open once more. True, very little is being done there just now except a few private dinners and one or more luncheons of a more or less public character which the Ambassador and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid feel themselves called upon to give, but an afternoon tea at Dorchester House is always a pleasant function. More entertaining is going on at their country home, West Park, Ascot. Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid have started with a series of Saturday to Monday shooting parties.

Mr. and Mrs. John Ward are but little seen in London, though they still keep No. 7 Carlton Gardens as their town residence. They spend most of their time at Charlton, where they, too, are having several parties for the shooting.

Mrs. Amory Moore, who is stopping at the Ritz Hotel before departing for New York in the near future, has been at Stratfieffer all the summer, stopping at Block, the pretty house she has occupied for several years, and where she has done a great deal of entertaining. Before she left she gave a big ball at the Pavilion, which was said to have been one of the most successful ever given there. Then she stayed on a little later in the North than she originally intended in order to attend the Ross-shire ball, and another given at Brahan Castle by Colonel Stewart Mackenzie.

AMERICANS IN LONDON.

A fair number of resident Americans are now in London. Mrs. Chauncey has been at her house in Hereford street, but is just on the eve of leaving for the country, where she intends paying a number of visits. Her sister, Lady Newborough, is also at her town house in Portland place, but is trying to get rid of her lease, for she wants to take a house in a more central position.

Mrs. Newhouse is also back in London. She had planned to return to America this week, but has altered her arrangements at the last moment, and it is doubtful if she will visit the States at all this year, as Mr. Newhouse is coming over from New York, and she probably will join him in Paris. Mrs. James Henry Smith also is stopping for a short time in Grosvenor square.

Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton McCormick are at their house in Hertford street, where they have been doing some quiet entertaining since their return from abroad. They spent most of the summer at Ostend with their sons and took many trips to centres of interest. Later on it is their intention to go abroad again, probably to Cairo, to spend most of the winter. There has been great rejoicing in the McCormick family over the birth of a little son to Mrs. Walter Astor. Mrs. McCormick's niece, who was stopping with her time in London before her marriage.

JEWELS AND FURS ARE MORE COSTLY

(Special Dispatch.)

London, Saturday.

Not only are jewels rising considerably in price, but so are furs, because, following the lead taken by the nobility, furs promise to be more fashionable than ever in England this season.

But it is not from the nobles only that the unprecedented demand for furs is coming. During coronation periods in the past the fashionable world has never failed to follow the lead, and the society dressmakers in Regent's and Mayfair are now receiving orders to trim feminine outer garments with fur of one kind or another.

Ermine is the most popular, and is now scarcer than it has ever been before, and, according to one West End furrier, the demand is sure to grow as the date of the coronation approaches.

DICTIONARIES FOR THE WOMEN FIRST

(Special Dispatch.)

London, Saturday.

SUFFRAGETTES may find another argument as to woman's influence on the world in the assertion of Sir James Murray, editor of the Oxford English Dictionary, that dictionaries were first produced because women were sadly deficient in correct spelling and use of words.

"All the earliest of such works bear witness to the opinion that hard words bore harder upon the softer sex," asserted this distinguished lexicographer, "and that it was especially the needs of women with regard to the proper spelling and use of words that inspired their efforts."

For instance, the preface of the earlier English Dictionary stated that it was for the use of "ladies or gentlewomen or any other unskilful person," while a later dictionary was announced for the use of "the more knowing women and the less learned men."

Of the Oxford English Dictionary seven volumes already have been published and the final three volumes still are in course of compilation, even though the beginning of the task was made about the middle of the last century. Sir James having taken up the work himself in 1879. A chief feature of this work is to lie in the selection and arrangement of quotations.

"It has been necessary to build a special iron house to contain the slips," explained Sir James. "In it are tiers of pigeonholes, each holding six thousand quotations, and there are five million quotation slips now in hand. If these strips of classified quotations were put end to end they would reach from one end of Great Britain to the other—550 miles. We have material at present to make about a hundred volumes."

PERFECT SKELETONS OF THE STONE AGE

Prehistoric Human Remains of Man and Woman, of Priceless Value, Found in Bedfordshire.

(Special Dispatch.)

London, Saturday.

A remarkable discovery of the skeletons of a man and woman belonging to the stone age, which antiquarians consider of priceless value, has just been made at Astwick, in Bedfordshire. Some workmen were laying a conduit near the line of the bed of the river Ivel when they came across the skeletons. They were examined by Dr. Waddell, a well known antiquary, who at once gave it as his opinion that they belonged to the neolithic period and were of great importance to the world of science.

The male is believed to have been a chieftain, and he must have been a man of magnificent physique, as the skeleton measures six feet six inches, while the head is massive. The woman was laid at right angles to the man, with her feet resting against the side of his body. Apparently when her lord died she had been slain and buried with him, according to prehistoric custom. Both skeletons are complete and in a good state of preservation, due to the nature of the soil. Their ultimate resting place will in all probability be the British Museum.

Britons Prepare for the Coronation of King George

Duke of Norfolk, as Earl Marshal, Publishes Royal Command of Attendance and Tells Guests Exactly How They Shall Dress on Momentous Occasion.

(Special Dispatch.)

London, Saturday.

Preparations for the coronation of King George V. next June have already begun. The Duke of Norfolk, as Earl Marshal, has published official notice that he has received the royal command to prepare letters regulating the attendance of the peers and peeresses of Great Britain. Only those who apply before the first day of January, 1911, will receive the royal command to attend.

The Earl Marshal, in his formal promulgation, has laid down exact orders as to the robes and coronets which shall be worn. The robe or mantle of the peers must be of crimson velvet, edged with miniver pure, the cape furred with miniver pure, and powdered with bars or rows of ermine, according to their degree, viz.:—Barons, two rows; viscounts, two rows and a half; earls, three rows; marquesses, three rows and a half; dukes, four rows.

The coronets are to be of silver gilt, the caps of crimson velvet turned up with ermine, with a gold tassel on top, and no jewels or precious stones are to be set or used in the coronets, "or counterfeit pearls instead of silver balls." The coronet of a baron is to have, on the circle of the rim, six silver balls at equal distances; of a viscount, sixteen silver balls; an earl, eight silver balls, raised upon points, with gold strawberry leaves between the points," a marquess, four gold strawberry leaves and four silver balls alternately, the latter a little raised on points above the rim," a duke, eight gold strawberry leaves.

With regard to the peeresses, the "robe or mantle of a baroness must be of crimson velvet, the cape to be furred with miniver pure, and powdered with two bars or rows of ermine; the said mantle to be edged round with miniver pure two inches in breadth, and the train to be three feet on the ground; the coronet to be a rim or circle with six pearls, represented by silver balls, upon the same, not raised upon points."

A viscountess may have her cape powdered with two rows and a half of ermine, and the train a yard and a quarter in length; a countess, three rows of ermine and a train of the length of a yard and a half; a marchioness, three rows and a half of ermine and a train a yard and three-quarters long, and a duchess, four rows of ermine and a train exterding to full two yards.

Women are advised that if they want to enhance their collection of jewels, in view of the coronation, they would better do so without any delay, the reason given being that, as "Americans have recovered from their recent slump they are now buying every fine jewel they can lay hands on," with the result that every kind of precious stone, with the exception of the ruby and the opal, has risen in price from twenty to twenty-five per cent since the beginning of the present year.

"At the present moment," said a West End jeweller, "a stone costing $500 a year ago cannot be bought for less than $625 to $650. Emeralds are much higher, too. A fine stone which ten years ago cost $500 cannot be bought for less than $1,500 now. Sapphires, too, have risen twenty to thirty per cent in the last nine months."

10,000,000 DICKENS MEMORIAL STAMPS

King Takes First Impressions of Stamps Intended to Raise Centenary Fund for Descendants of Genius.

(Special Dispatch.)

London, Saturday.

THE Dickens testimonial stamps, to be sold at a penny each, are being issued with the object of raising a centenary memorial for the benefit of the descendants of Charles Dickens, and the idea is that all owners of copies of the novelist's works shall frank them with the stamps.

The first issue runs to one million and the first impressions have been sent to King George by His Majesty's own desire. They bear an excellent image of Dickens in later life and are inscribed, "A tribute to genius," bearing also the figures, 1812-1912, with the novelist's signature at the bottom.

The committee, which numbers among its members such men as Lord Rosebery, Lord Alverstone, Lord Tennyson, the Bishops of Durham and Winchester, Sir Lawrence Alma Tadema, Sir E. Ray Lancaster and several other notable persons in the world's literature and art, hope to be able to issue at least ten million, and what is specially gratifying to them is the enthusiastic support which has come from America in carrying out the scheme. In fact, it looks as if the sale in America would exceed that in England.

An interesting note made by the committee is to the effect that if copyright in Dickens' works still prevailed, and only five per cent on the published price were paid to the author's representatives, they would be in receipt of not less than £25,000 a year, and a five per cent royalty is only about a quarter of what any successful novelist receives to-day.

FOX HUNTING NOT IN ANY BAD CASE

Pessimists' Alarm Is Groundless in the Light of Facts and Figures as Gathered.

(Special Dispatch.)

London, Saturday.

WITH the opening of the season at hand alarmists again are trying to make John Bull believe that fox hunting has had its day. They argue that the sport cannot long outlive the slow but certain changes that are taking place in the conditions of land tenure in England. There is a steady deterioration in the sport, they contend; an increasing artificiality in the method of furnishing material for hunting—referring, of course, to the system of hand rearing cubs and turning down imported foxes; a serious growth of claims upon the financial resources of almost every hunt, and a threatening lack of sympathy with huntsmen on the part of the smaller farmers.

Though hunting is far from being what it was fifty or sixty years ago, it is certainly by no means in a bad case. If it were, as The County Gentleman points out, would Great Britain on the eve of another regular season be able to boast that scarcely a huntable acre in these islands will fail to echo to the sound of horn and hound in the ensuing winter months, or that something like 400 establishments are still maintained in the kingdom for the pursuit of fox, of stag, of hare, despite every difficulty with which modern hunting is confronted?

Latest reports show that there are 455 packs of hounds in the United Kingdom. England and Wales claim 364, of which 173 are foxhounds, 88 harriers, 16 staghounds, 11 draghounds, 53 beagles and 18 otter hounds. Scotland has 11 foxhounds and one harrier, two otter and three beagle packs. Ireland lays claim to 25 foxhound packs, 40 harriers, four stag and six beagle packs. In round figures, the packs which hunt the fox and stag or deer number some 6,000 couples of hounds, while of harriers and beagles there are some 3,000 couples.

QUAINT HOME FOR 1900 CLUB

(Special Dispatch.)

London, Saturday.

The qualitest club house in London has just been opened in an old world court off St James street, with servants in dresses of the year 1750. This is the 1900 Club, which Mr. Balfour when he was Prime Minister founded ten years ago, along with a few unionist members of Parliament. During all those years the 1900 had not had a habitation of its own until this strange old house at No. 5 Pickering place was hit upon as a suitable home for the members, whose number about five hundred.

It is to be used as a night club, not opening its doors till eight o'clock P. M., and closing again at two o'clock in the morning. The house, with its narrow staircase and wainscoted walls, was once the residence of Lord Kilcudbright, a "buck" of the eighteenth century and later was a quiet gambling resort frequented by Lord Sandwich, Count D'Orsay and other "bloods" of the day. The principal room on the first floor has been furnished in the style of 1750, and except that rush lights give place to electric candles the atmosphere of a century and a half ago has been preserved.

Old settees and chairs are grouped around the black oak table and pewter pistons from the high mantelshelf, which bears a rushlight holder, a jack of long clay church warden pipes, and an old fashioned spill box from which to light up. Prints of old London and caricatures of famous conservative Premiers adorn the walls.

TELLS OF HIS METHODS

(Special Dispatch.)

London, Saturday.

MR HENRY ARTHUR JONES is to superintend the American production of a play he has just finished, and also to deliver two lectures, one at Columbia University and one at the University of Chicago. The lectures will naturally be on the subject of the drama. Mr Jones was invited to deliver them several years ago, but has not had an opportunity to do so until this winter.

In the course of a conversation I had with Mr. Jones recently at the Reform Club, in Pall Mall, he told me that his new play is more on the order of "Mrs. Dane's Defence" than any of his other works.

"The scene is in an English country house," said Mr. Jones, "where a birthday gathering is in progress, and the action is supposed to cover a period of four days. The time is the present and the characters are not freaks, but the kind you will find at any party. It is not a problem play in any sense, although scandal enters into it slightly.

LIFE HIS ONLY THEME.

"I do not take up topics of the day because interest in them does not last. Fundamental principles of human life are always interesting and so the dramatist who hopes to have his plays suitable for revival years hence should stick to them. That is why the recent revival by Sir Charles Wyndham of my two comedies 'The Case of Rebellious Susan' and 'The Liars' could be made without rewriting a line, although they were first produced fifteen and thirteen years ago respectively.

"Shakespeare knew this principle of playwriting better than any one. While he wrote right after a great religious upheaval, you will not find it mentioned in any of his plays. On the other hand, Johnson wrote about events of the time, and so his plays are rarely revived.

"The first performance of my new comedy will be in a New York theatre, but which one I shall not know until I get on the other side and consult with the Messrs. Shubert, who are to be my managers. I shall also select the company in America, provided I can find the right people there. If not I will come back here and get them. However, I don't believe that will be necessary. The principal character in the play is a woman, and you have lots of good actresses in America.

"My plans now are to stay at least three months on the other side, and I look forward with a great deal of pleasure to renewing some old and good acquaintances."

Mr. Cecil Raleigh, the author of such successful and well known melodramas as "The Whip," "The Sins of Society," "The Marriages of Mayfair," &c., has struck out in a new direction and written a play about a man who had trouble with his soul.

BEHIND THE VEIL.

This play is called "Behind the Veil" and was well produced by Mr. Robert Arthur at the Coronet Theatre. The audience liked the acting a whole lot and the play a little. As to the "long haired critics" the situation is trying. They are undecided whether to consider "Behind the Veil" as a deep and powerful work, requiring much trowel thought, or as a rather incongruous flutter of words.

Personally, I think that the author seems more at home when he builds plays around conventional scenery than he does when he tries to lead the public through the mazes of the new drama.

The one fact that caused all the trouble to the hero was a particularly pestiferous dirt of a soul. It didn't fit him to begin with and it was also rebellious and adventurous; wouldn't stick to the path and wanted to go off and do things on its own hook.

The result of trying to manage a wild and unbroken soul was that the poor hero got into very bad company, contracted a varied assortment of vices, lost his money, made a big dent in his health, footed himself into the belief that he had magical powers and had changed the mother superior of a convent into a pretty young girl, got shot in a duel, nearly went crazy and finally fell in love with the girl. The girl was very charming, even if she had put up the job on him to make him think he had worked a miracle.

Mr Philip Desborough was the hero. We all felt sorry for him. He worked very hard, but it would take an older, stronger and more experienced actor to have such a wrestle with his soul and come out on top. Mr. Desborough was the leading man in Miss Marie Tempest's company in America last season.

INSANITY NOT A PLEA FOR DIVORCE

(Special Dispatch.)

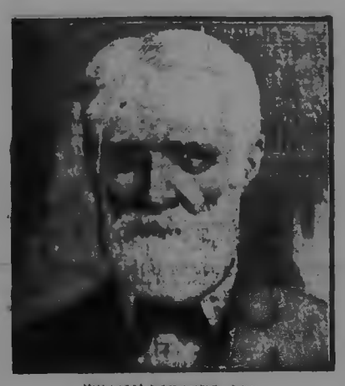
London, Saturday.

On the heels of a number of eminent medical men, who have argued that incurable mental affections should be made legal bases for divorce, Sir James Crichton-Browne has appeared before the Royal Commission on Divorce and presented diametrically opposed opinions. Such a course, he contended, would constitute a reversion to the ruthlessness of savage life.

"The proposal that insanity of any description or kind should constitute a ground for divorce seems to me highly objectionable," he asserted.

Seventy Nine Years Young

"Fruit-a-tives" Keeps Health Perfect



WILLIAM PARSONS, Esq.

OTTERVILLE, Ont.,
July 8th 1910.

"I am a seventy-nine year old man, and I am a great believer in, and user of "Fruit-a-tives". It is the only medicine I take, and I can truly say that "Fruit-a-tives" and exercise keep me in my present good health.

Stricture of the Bowels, was the complaint I suffered from and I found "Fruit-a-tives" to do me more good than any other remedy. My doctor advised me to stick to "Fruit-a-tives" and I have done so with the best results.

I have been in business here for a good many years and have been a resident of Otterville for over fifty years, so that if you think this little reference from me will serve to induce some others to try "Fruit-a-tives", I hereby authorize its publication.

WM. PARSON.

Obstinate Constipation, Paralysis of the Bowels and Stricture of the Bowels can never be cured by common purgatives, salts, senna, "liver pills" and oil have positively no action on the liver. They do not increase the secretion of Bile, which nature provides to move the bowels. They merely irritate the membranes lining the intestines. One may as well try to cure a headache by pounding one's head against a stone wall, as to try to cure Constipation with common purgatives. "Fruit-a-tives" is the only true liver stimulant. "Fruit-a-tives" is fruit juices and nerve tonics, and will always restore the liver to its proper condition and cure the most obstinate cases of Constipation.

In Sudden Emergencies

like illness, it is often necessary quickly to raise the temperature of a room. For instance, in those hours between midnight and dawn, when the day temperature has been allowed to drop, if you are called upon to get up, the room is chilly and cold. It takes a long time to start up a furnace or fire and raise the temperature by ordinary means.

You can instantly heat a room to any desired temperature with a

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

Absolutely smokeless and odorless

It quickly gives heat, and with one filling of the font burns steadily for nine hours, without smoke or smell. Has automatic-locking flame spreader which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back, so the wick can be cleaned in an instant. It has a cool handle and a damper top.

An indicator always shows the amount of oil in the font. It has a filler-cap which does not need to be screwed down; it is put in like a cork in a bottle, and is attached to the font by a chain.

The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged, because of a new device in construction, and consequently it can always be easily unscrewed in an instant for rewicking.

The Perfection Oil Heater is finished in Japan or nickel. It is strong, durable and well made, built for service, yet light and ornamental.

THE WINTERTON TREASURE

the day we left, for I counted the things myself."

"Yes," said her daughter, with an uncompromising stare, which Winterton found disagreeable, in spite of the girl's great beauty, "it was certainly there on the day we left. I suppose you believe us?"

"Of course, of course," said Winterton, hastily getting up to go. He felt that there was no use prolonging the conversation, which might become painful at any moment. "I only wished to make the enquiry. I shall put the matter, forthwith, into the hands of the police."

He was retreating to the door, when he was struck by the fact that a grey, inexplicable look of terror had settled on Mrs. Tracy's mild features, and that Miss Tracy had set her white teeth together with a perceptibly defiant air.

"It is the servants," stammered Mrs. Tracy, trembling very much, as Winterton began to perceive. "I am sure it was the servants. Don't you think so, Frank?"

Laurence noticed that the girl's named seemed to be Frank; perhaps it was the short for Frances.

"It must have been the servants—or else burglars got in and rifled the safe."

"In that case," said Frank, in a hard voice, "the matter had better be put into the hands of the police; but if I were you, Mr. Winterton, I would search the house a little more thoroughly, before you give up all hope. Trueloves is quite capable of stowing the things away in some dark hole or corner, and then forgetting where they were."

Winterton looked at her attentively, and as he did so, a dark-red flush rose to her cheeks, and spread to her forehead and her chin; but she met his eyes unflinchingly, and finally he bowed, and went away without another word.

"Surely," said Laurence to himself, "that girl knows something about it, and her mother is in a state of terror on her daughter's account. But—a beautiful girl like that committing a robbery! It can't be! Yet—the fact remains—the silver is gone."

He went back to Winterton Park, and occupied the rest of the long summer day in doing what she had suggested. But search as he might, he could come across no trace of the missing articles. Still, he did not give up hope. It was, of course, quite possible that Trueloves might have secreted them, for safety, in some unknown spot, and for a day or two he continued his search of empty rooms, cellars, and attics; an occupation which gave him considerable trouble, and took up a good deal of his time.

Once or twice, by way of relief to his mind, he went for a walk, and his peregrinations always led him past the cottage occupied by the Tracys. Each time he saw Miss Tracy in the garden; she seemed to have a great deal of gardening to do, and to have very solid gardening tools. She asked him if he was still looking for the silver; suggested one or two places that he had not yet examined—and then said, with a smile:

"Very likely you will find all the things in some old cupboard which you have noticed not. It is often so easy to pass over the most obvious places." A remark which sent Laurence back to work with redoubled vigor.

And, to his surprise, he came that evening, for the first time, upon some of the missing articles. Some of them were wrapped in discolored paper, and others, soiled and oxidised, were heaped together in a basket. They stood on the lower shelves of a linen-press in the housekeeper's room.

"But surely I looked here before!" said the young man to himself. Then he carefully examined the silver, piece by piece, and took particular note of its incrustations of dirt and dust; and also of the rough basket in which the other things had been stowed. Then he smiled, rather queerly, and shrugged his shoulders.

"So she is a thief," he said to himself. "I suppose the temptation was too much for her. Well, I shall soon make sure now."

He went out, after nightfall, dressed in dark clothes, and carrying two unaccustomed objects with him. One was a dark lantern, and the other a revolver—unloaded. He went, as usual, down the lane to the Tracys' cottage, and he chose a quiet corner beneath a tall hawthorn hedge, where he sat silently down and waited. About eleven o'clock he heard someone come quietly out of the cottage, and although he could not see very well in the darkness, he was sure that the slight figure was that of Frances Tracy. She had a spade with her, and with it she began to dig in one of the flower-beds.

Laurence drew a little nearer, looking and listening, and his persistence was rewarded by his hearing the clink of metal, while a faint and passing gleam from a clouded moon showed him the very form and shape of one of the most ornamental of the silver bowls which he had lost.

There was a gap in the hedge by which he stood. He stepped through it quite quietly, and turned the light of the lantern suddenly upon the girl, and upon the upturned earth at her feet, where, gleaming through the sandy soil, he could see more than one piece of the plate for which he had been looking.

The girl started violently, then drew herself erect, and looked him full in the face. "Yes," she said, quietly, "these are your things. I took them. I am a thief."

Laurence's answer was unexpected. "Nonsense!" he said, and set down his lantern.

"But the things are here; you can see them for yourself," said Frances Tracy, whose face had grown strangely white.

"Was it you who put them back in the basket?" he enquired.

"Yes."

"And you were bringing these up to the Park?"

She nodded again. She seemed to find it hard to speak.

"Very well, then," said Laurence, calmly, "you are no thief, or you would not be restoring stolen goods. Shall I help you to dig up the others, if they are here? Then I need hardly trouble you to carry them."

"You don't believe me?" she cried hotly.

"No, I don't believe you tell lies, and I don't believe you take what is not your own. You have been taking care of these things for me; that is all."

She tried to protest; but her face began to quiver, and suddenly dropping all pretext of pride and coldness, she sank on her knees before him, and began wasping pitifully.

He did not know why she wept; but the sight of her tears softened his heart. "For heaven's sake, don't cry!" he said huskily. "How could you have looked me in the face, as you did just now, if you had been guilty? I could never believe a word against you, and nobody shall ever hear of this mistake that has been made; for it has been a mistake, you know," he added, very gently, "and it is nobody's fault."

"Oh, in a sense that is quite true," she said; "but I cannot tell you—I cannot."

"I expect it is not your secret to tell," said Laurence, cheerfully. "But I assure you, I don't want to know. Believe me when I say that I trust you entirely. Now, what shall we do with this stuff? Shall we dig it up or leave it till to-morrow morning?"

"Please — please," said Frances, clasping her hands. "If you trust me, let me dig it up and bring it back to you. I am afraid of disturbing my mother—I don't want her to hear—"

There was something in her face that made the young man turn away his head. "We are too late, I am afraid," he said, in a lowered voice. "There is a light in the house, and somebody has pushed aside the blind."

Even as he spoke, there was a scream, and Frances ran back to the cottage door, where a pitiful, wailing old woman stumbled into her daughter's arms.

"Don't let them take me to prison!" old Mrs. Tracy cried. "Ask him to forgive me—I never meant to keep them, did I, Frank?" It was only that I could not bear to part with them, when I had had them for so many years. Oh! keep me here, Frank! Don't let them take me away!" And then, with moans and sighs, the old woman sank back senseless, and Laurence had to come forward and help the girl to carry her mother back to her own room.

The story was soon told. Mrs. Tracy's passion for the treasures of Winterton Park amounted almost to a mania, and when she found that she would have to leave them all behind, she managed to convey them, in small quantities, to the little cottage which she and her daughter had taken, and to bury them, not very deeply, in the garden. It was the mysterious disappearance of the silver from the house which had led to the general departure of the servants, who, on discovering the loss, were afraid of being accused of stealing it. Mrs. Tracy's secret was soon discovered by Frances, who was planning to restore them, by degrees, to their proper owner; but it was, perhaps, fortunate for all three that Laurence had given her help to-night. Laurence had come upon her in the act, and had fathomed the mystery of which she had been so willing to take the responsibility upon her own shoulders. Mrs. Tracy recovered, in time, from the shock which Laurence had given her, but she became gently irresponsible, and sank, finally, into a feeble state of health, which was of no very long duration. Until she died, Frances would not desert her, and they lived together at the little cottage, which was, however, made as dainty and comfortable as anyone could desire; but although Laurence was kindness itself, Frances was so careful to keep him at a distance, that it was only when she was left quite alone in the world, that he ventured to whisper to her a question that had long been on his lips:

"And now, Frank, will you not come back with me to Winterton Park? It was your home as a child. Will you not make it your home again?"

And Frances did not refuse.

Caught a Heavy Cold.

It Left Him with a Hacking Cough.

Mr. J. H. Richards, 1852 Second Ave. E., Vancouver, B.C., writes:—"Allow me to write a few lines in praise of your Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. Last fall I contracted a heavy cold which left me with a hacking cough, and every time I would get a little more cold this hacking cough would become a lung splitting one. It kept on getting worse and I kept on spending money buying different cough remedies until a friend asked me if I had ever tried Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. I told him I was willing to try anything I thought would cure, and on the same day bought two bottles. Before half the bottle was used my cough began to get easier, and by the time I had used a bottle and a half my cough was gone. I am keeping the other half bottle in case I should come again but I am quite sure it is a positive cure. Let me recommend Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup to any sufferer from a cough or throat affection of any kind."

CULTURE OF CHESTNUTS

From Farm and Dairy.

Land that is practically worthless and which is to be found in different parts of New York State, can, according to Prof. G. F. Marsh, agricultural agent for the Northern Central Railway, be converted into a paying proposition if devoted to the culture of chestnuts.

Mr. Marsh visited a farm along the road for which he works that consisted principally of hills, on which the farmer, a Mr. Sober, had started a chestnut orchard that nets him a large annual income. The trees, he said, were grafted with the famous Sober Paragon chestnut scions which in a few years produced nuts that sold for $6 a bushel.

The farm was previously covered with oak and chestnut and other varieties of trees that had been cut down and converted into lumber and the hills became one large brush farm. All the varieties of brush with the exception of the chestnut were cut out and the Sober Paragon variety was then grafted in the native tree. This nut is almost five times the size of the native chestnut and is crisp and sweet, much superior to the Italian nut and its sprout is easily grafted on the native tree.

The Professor said that when the neighboring landowners heard that Sober was grafting chestnut they all thought he was crazy, but he has lived to see them not only cease their ridicule but to commence grafting chestnut groves of their own. He also said that the demand for chestnuts is in its infancy as they are an important part of the peoples' food in European countries, being not only eaten as nuts but dried, ground into meal and used for bread.

Only Full-fashioned Seamless Hosiery Fits Right

You should wear Pen-Angle Hosiery, and no other kind. For this is the only Canadian-made hosiery that is full-fashioned-seamless and priced moderately and guaranteed.

All three merits ought to be in your hosiery. Because no hosiery that is not SEAMLESS can be comfortable—and Pen-Angle machines are the only ones in Canada able to knit such hosiery, form-shaped to the leg and foot, instead of merely stretching the fabric into shape. Thus, though priced reasonably, Pen-Angle Hosiery holds its shape indefinitely, being reinforced wherever wear falls.

To these merits add the GUARANTEE you read here—two pairs for one if Pen-Angle Hosiery disappoints. Note next the modest price you need pay to get all this—and then remember name and trademark when next you need hosiery.

"The Sweetheart of the Corn"

DID ORCHARDS PAY?

From Farm and Dairy.

"Well, you spent a lot of money fixing up those orchards in Nottawasaga Township this year. Did you make them pay?" Questions of this nature are being put to I. F. Metcalf, B.S.A., the energetic District Representative of the Department of Agriculture at Collingwood, these days. His reply to such questions is to go and see the orchards and talk to the men who own them and see if they don't value their orchards much more highly than they did last spring before Mr. Metcalf took hold of them.

These orchards have been worked over under a big disadvantage as the apple crop, particularly the late apple crop, is light in the Collingwood district this year. It must be considered, too, that a large part of the expense of caring for the orchards was for pruning, of which they were in great need. The total expense of pruning should not be charged against this year's crop but should be divided among the crops of a number of years. Leaving the adjustment of these matters out of consideration, however, some startling results—to say the least—have been secured. For instance, Mr. W. Hamilton's orchard at Collingwood netted him $405.10 with total expenses of $144.20, showing a net profit of $261.20.

THE MOST PROFITABLE ORCHARD

The orchard which gave the best results this year was a small one of 50 trees owned by John Osborne, at Dunedin. The expenses of that orchard, were as follows: scraping trees, $2.25; pruning, $24.75; first spraying, $6.11; second spraying, $5.16; working of orchard, $7.75; cover crop, $2.26; a total of $48.80.

The following were the receipts: 22½ barrels of Duchess apples at $2.50 a bbl., $56.25; 82 bbls. fall and winter apples at $3.00 a bbl., $246; 15 1-6 bbls. culls at 60 cents a bbl. (net) $9.10; a total of $311.35. The expenses of barrels, picking and packing at 75 cents a bbl. were $78.88. This leaves a net profit from 50 trees of $181.07. Thus with an expenditure of less than $50 a net return of about five times the highest that was ever received before has been secured. Substantial results have therefore been obtained financially, thereby demonstrating that it pays well to take good care of the orchard. The apples also were clean and free from worms and ran a high per cent. of No. 1's. This could not be said of the unpruned and unsprayed orchards in the same locality.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

NOVEMBER 20th, 1910.
(Copyright, 1910, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

Jesus in Gethsemane. Matt. xxvi.: 36-50.

Verse 36—Where was this garden called Gethsemane?

Why does the word Gethsemane now stand for agony?

What purpose did prayer serve in this sorrowful experience of Jesus?

Verses 37-38—What answer can you make to the criticism which has been made, that Jesus would have shown a stronger character, and more faith, if he had borne this trial without suffering or fear?

Give your reasons and say whether it is possible to develop the strongest character with, or without, great suffering?

What is the benefit of human sympathy when we are in great mental trouble?

Describe the cause which gave Jesus such keen suffering?

Why did Jesus select Peter and John, from the rest of the disciples, when he went on to the place of agony?

Verse 39—What "cup" did Jesus pray to be delivered from, the present agony, or the cross, or something else?

Can any person retain the favor of God who is not always in the attitude of soul to say, "not as I will, but as thou will?"

Must every true prayer have the condition, "nevertheless not as I will, but as thou will," or are there some exceptions, and if so, what are they?

Verse 40—Why are we, like Jesus, so much hurt when a confidential friend manifests so little concern in our trouble?

Why were these disciples to blame for going to sleep, as are people to blame who go to sleep in church?

Verse 41—Is it, or not, the fault of the spirit, when the flesh is too weak, for a man to do his full duty? Why?

Verses 42-46—Why did Jesus need to ask God three times for the same thing?

What, if any, rule is there concerning the number of times we should pray for the same thing?

Did the disciples miss anything by not staying awake to watch with Jesus; if so, what?

Can a lost opportunity ever be recovered, or is it an eternal loss? Give your reasons. (This question must be answered in writing by the members of the club.)

Verse 47—What were the motives which prompted Judas to betray Jesus?

Did Judas expect Jesus to be actually put to death, or did he expect that He would escape His enemies as in the past? Why?

Why did the Jews waste money in paying Judas, when they apparently could have arrested Jesus without doing so?

Verses 48-56—Which is more hurtful—to be betrayed by a friend with a kiss, or by an enemy with a blow?

Lesson for Sunday, November 27th, 1910—The Trial of Jesus. Matt. xxvi.: 57-68.

TO KILL THE DANDRUFF GERM.

Is the Only Possible Way of Having an Effective Cure.

If you see a woman or a man with luxuriant glossy hair, you may be sure neither has dandruff to amount to anything. In nearly every case where women and men have thin brittle hair, they owe it to dandruff. There are hundreds of preparations that "claim" to cure dandruff, but not one but Newbro's Herpicide tells you that dandruff is the result of a germ burrowing into the scalp, and that permanent cure of dandruff and its consequent falling and baldness, can only be had by killing the germ; and there is no other preparation that will destroy that germ but Newbro's Herpicide. "Destroy the cause and you remove the effect." Sold by all leading druggists. Send 10c. in stamps for sample to the Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

SERMON FROM SHAKESPEARE

(Copr., 1909, by Bradley-Garretson Co., Ltd.)

So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Merchant of Venice, Act V., Sc. I.

There is no mightier force in the world than good deeds. Whole libraries have been written on how to act; the pulpits have been teaching truth and righteousness, charity and love, but one noble deed has more far-reaching influence than any book or sermon. The act of the Good Samaritan has been speaking eloquently for two thousand years to the civilized world.

A good deed has a two-fold influence. It blesseth him that gives and him that takes. A light within a house enables the inhabitants to see objects distinctly. It scatters the physical darkness. So a good deed illuminates the soul of the doer. It makes him realize that his mission on earth is not self-pleasing and self-serving. It is to do good. A light which shines out into the world may not dispel the outer darkness, but it serves as a beacon to the traveller. He knows from it where rest and food and warmth are to be found. So a good deed is a beacon to humanity. The dullest eye can see it. The weakest heart would fain erect similar lights.

History teaches how wonderful is the power of example. A short time ago operator Binns stood by his instrument sending messages for help for his sinking ship north and south east and west. In imminent peril of his life he stuck steadfastly to his heroic task. How the story of his gallant act thrilled. There was not a reader or hearer of it but felt an impulse to do likewise in times of danger. That deed will continue to shine forth so long as steamships plow the ocean. If the world were to be asked who was the greatest hero of the Crimean War, it would not select a British or French or Russian general. Florence Nightingale was the true hero of that war. She fought disease and death. A ministering angel, she left the comforts of home for the discomforts of the tented field and trying march. Her good deeds shine out with dazzling brilliancy in a very naughty world. The example she set has been followed, and in every great war since the Crimean War hundreds of tenderly-nurtured women have been ready to follow her example. The Anglo-Saxon seaman has remarkable coolness and daring in time of danger, stoical indifference to death, a stern sense of duty. When his ship strikes, the first thought is of the women and children. There are hundreds of examples of hardy sailors calmly waiting death while they helped others to escape. They remembered such scenes as that on the Birkenhead. Seamen in the past taught them how to be brave. It is not only John Brown's soul that goes marching on. There are hundreds of sailors whose bodies rest in the depths of the ocean, hundreds of soldiers whose bones lie in alien earth, who, by force of their good or brave deeds, are still marching along, leaders of men.

It is not every one who has the opportunity to be a Florence Nightingale or a Jack Binns, but every one has a chance to do good deeds in humble life. The weak child may need a helping hand, the feeble old woman in the crowd may require a supporting arm. When strength helps weakness, when wealth aids poverty, when sympathy soothes suffering, how sweet it is!

The spread of Christianity has been due not so much to teaching as to example. The self-sacrifice, the self-denial, the courage and confidence of professing Christians in times of danger, suffering and death, their integrity and trustworthiness, convince a world, slow to believe, of the truths of the teaching of Him of Nazareth. Christ taught the brotherhood of man; he had a kindly word for Jew and Gentile alike. He taught that God is love—he fed the hungry, healed the sick, comforted those in sorrow. His immediate followers during his lifetime could not have comprehended any complicated system of philosophy such as Plato and Aristotle gave the cultured Greeks. He added a new commandment to the ones known to the Jews; the sum and substance of his teaching was that men should "love one another." His deeds while He was on earth enforced his teaching and still shine out with growing splendor in a naughty world. Our hospitals, our lunatic asylums, our institutions for the deaf and dumb and the blind, are largely the result of following the light set up in Palestine by Christ. For many centuries that light burnt with a feeble flame; mists of superstition almost hid it from the human eye; but the good deeds of Christian men and women have kept it burning, and of recent years, have caused it to shine forth to the world with unwonted splendor.

In writing the line,

Shakespeare may have had in mind the words of Jesus. The Sermon on the Mount may have suggested the expression. The doers of good deeds were the light of the world and Christ's followers were commanded to let their light so shine before men that they might see their good works. By the power of example society is made better. Kindly acts make tender hearts; heroic deeds make heroes.

WINTER EGGS

From Farm and Dairy.

"We can produce winter eggs at 10 cents a dozen. I have been offered 48 cents a dozen for all the eggs we can produce in the Poultry Department of the O.A.C. from now until the first of March next." This statement was made by Prof. W. R. Graham of the Ontario Agricultural College in an address in Elmira, Thursday last, on the occasion of the free Short Course in Poultry put on in Elmira by F. C. Hart, B.S.A., of the Waterloo County Branch of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, at the time of the Poultry Show. Besides Professor Graham, Miss Mary Yates, Guelph, and John I. Brown, of Montreal, gave a large and interested audience information on poultry such as they had never received before. Great interest, on the part of those present, was taken in all that was said. So intense was the interest that during a pause one could have heard a pin drop. Not a move was made by anyone to leave at the evening session until half past eleven.

KEEP A SINGLE BREED

One of the main points made by Mr. Brown in his address was the superior advantage to a farmer to keep one breed of poultry only. He was particularly well advised in emphasizing this point since farmers and others in the vicinity of Elmira have been keeping more for fancy purposes and most of them have two or three breeds. Mr. Brown strongly recommended the Barred Plymouth Rocks.

Egg production was also discussed by Mr. Brown, after which he branched onto the matter of marketing fresh eggs. Whereas on the market in Elmira fresh eggs were, at the time of the Poultry Show, selling at 25 cents a dozen, Mr. Brown on behalf of his firm, Gunn, Langlois & Co., Montreal offered 36 cents a dozen for them. In a general way, Mr. Brown outlined the formation of the fresh egg circles and concluded by saying that a circle would be formed in the district at any time if they were assured of six members at the start.

After the meeting, a dozen or more men came forward and stated their willingness to join an egg circle if such were formed and to clean up their present breeds and to keep but one. They asked that an egg circle be formed as soon as they could get their hens into laying condition.

STARVE HENS BEFORE KILLING

The practical demonstration is killing, plucking and trussing as given by Miss Yates was most interesting and instructive. She emphasized the importance of many points not generally taken into consideration. One of the chief of these was the matter of starving the birds before killing. Many people think that if the crop of the bird is empty that is all that is necessary. But this is not so. The digestive system of the bird is really one long tube with two sacs—the crop and the first stomach. The crop should be empty long enough for food to pass all out of the body; otherwise after being dressed, gas is formed in the digestive tract and in cases where much food is left it practically renders the bird unfit for human food. Even under natural conditions when all food is out of the intestinal tract there will be gas formed from the animal heat of the body. To obviate this, the bird should be cooled under pressure as has been recommended in connection with the shaping board.

WINTER EGGS COST 10 CENTS

The matter of getting winter eggs and plans for hen houses was handled in a most telling way by Professor Graham. He recommended the open front, single-boarded and battened house, built so that the sun will strike the floor and reach back into the building as high up as the top of the roosts. That is the windows should be large enough and placed at such a height and yet low enough that the sun would shine on the floor and back as high up as the roosts sometimes throughout the day. The Professor gave out that he could produce winter eggs at the O.A.C. for 10 cents a dozen—rent and other costs included. He stated that a man had offered him that day 48 cents a dozen for his eggs from the present until March 1st, next. Granting, he said that the eggs cost 12 cents a dozen or one cent an egg and that he could sell them for 48 cents a dozen, or four cents an egg, the business appeared to him to be about as good a way of making money as anything else on the farm. In fact, he stated, that he would like to know of anything else on the farm that would net the same 300 per cent of profit.

FEEDING FOR WINTER EGGS

In dealing with the matter of feeding, the Professor's remarks were to the effect that he believed in mixed rations and that it was necessary that the hens get nothing except they work hard for it,—aside from green stuff and dry mashes fed in the hopper. The Professor recommended that crushed oats from the hopper be fed. The oats seem to be much better when crushed than if fed in any other way. Crushed oats have proven to be a great thing for laying hens and all who have tried them speak highly of their beneficial effects when fed in this way. The Professor believed in keeping the hens scratching in fresh air and sunshine. In real cold weather he would abandon the hopper feeding entirely and make hens work for everything. He recommended that the pullets and year-old hens be kept separate.

Decided This Morning That There Were No Grounds for His Interference—"I Shall Die an Innocent Man" is Crippen's Remark When Informed of Decision of Home Secretary.

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, ENG., NOV. 21.—Crippen must hang on Wednesday. Hon. Winston Churchill finally decided this morning there were no grounds for his interference and thus has failed the last resort. When the result of the unsuccessful appeal to the King's advisers was communicated to the condemned man he said: "I shall die an innocent man, convinced that it will be eventually shown that the remains found under my house were not those of Belle Elmore."

In the presence of two wardens Miss Lenove had a painful interview with Crippen this afternoon, both breaking down and weeping bitterly. She will see him again to-morrow.

THE PREMIER'S BIRTHDAY HIS MAJESTY'S MESSAGE

OTTAWA, NOV. 20.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier to-day entered his seventieth year. From His Majesty King George from Premier Botha of the new sister Dominion of South Africa, from Premier Asquith, from Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, from a host of friends in Canada and in Great Britain came messages of congratulation and good wishes for continued health and for many happy returns of the day.

Sir Wilfrid, who has excelled the record of any previous Premier of Canada in tenure of office and in distinguished service for Canada and for the Empire, spent the day quietly at home, where he received a shower of telegrams of congratulation from far and near, and where he received the good wishes of many personal friends in the capital.

His Majesty's personal cable congratulated him on his continued good health, and expressed the heartfelt wish that he might long be spared to continue his splendid record of service for Canada and in the cause of Imperial unity.

In splendid health and with an unabated energy and willingness for public service Sir Wilfrid closes his seventh decade with every prospect of far exceeding the Scriptural allotted span. The stress of practically incessant attention to his public duties has for over fourteen years past apparently left no trace of weariness or flagging energy. To-day Sir Wilfrid, in health, spirits and capacity for hard work, is perhaps the youngest member of his Cabinet. And this de-

THE STRONGER EYE

Are you aware that almost everyone is equipped with unequal eyes? That is to say, the right is stronger than the left, or vice versa. We rarely realize this, because the stronger eye takes upon itself all the work and the weaker one scarcely ever attempts to do anything.

NATURE'S INEVITABLE LAW!

Every organ or faculty which is not made use of for a considerable length of time, becomes gradually but surely useless. And this is the effect on the eyes; work keeps the strong eye in good order, but lack of work causes the other to grow worse.

Possibly you may be in this condition, if so my record in the Optical Business during the past seven years in this city, is proof of my ability to benefit you.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS.

On Sunday, November 20th, 1910, Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Prime Minister of Canada, entered upon the seventieth year of his natural life. He was born at St. Lyn, l'Assomption county, Quebec, Nov 20th, 1841. All Canadians, worthy of the name, irrespective of creed or political affiliation, will join in the felicitations the occasion suggests, and in the wish that he may long be spared to work for his country, adorn its public life, and serve as a model of stainless public service and broad statesmanship. Sir Wilfrid Laurier furnishes a striking contradiction to the theory of Dr. Osler, that the best of a man's life his powers, his capacity for usefulness—is over at sixty. The great achievements that will stand to the credit of Sir Wilfrid, as long as history lasts, have been the fruit of the past ten years of his life and he enters the stage of the Psalmist's limit of life, like Moses, his eyes not dimmed, nor his natural force abated. He is at the front of the fighting ranks today with his intellect as keen, his mind as unclouded, and with as great capacity, ambition, and will to serve Canada as ten years ago. In all his forty years of strenuous and useful public life he has striven to make Canada a united nation—to furnish the only conditions upon which enduring prosperity and the best character of progress and prosperity can be based a united and harmonious citizenship. He has always been jealous of the good name of Canada, and has done more than perhaps any Canadian statesman to give his desires effect. This country occupies a standing in all ways much higher, in material assets, and in morale, at home and abroad, than when Sir Wilfrid assumed the reins of power on July 13th, 1896. In this venal generation, when the obligations of personal and political morality rest so lightly upon so many private and public men, it is worthy of note that in all Sir Wilfrid's career, as full of opportunities as of temptations, he has led a stainless personal and public life. No scandal nor act of self seeking can be associated with his name. While he has not used his position and opportunities to enrich himself, he has, by his example, and his record, enriched, elevated and ennobled the standard of public life at the same time, by wise and far-seeing statesmanship, he has enriched Canada and done a large share of the work so far as political service avails, of placing this country at the very head and front of the daughter nations of the Empire.

PILES Dr. Chase's Ointment is a certain and guaranteed cure for each and every form of Itching, Blind, Bleeding and Protruding Piles. A testimonial to this proven and very quick relief and satisfaction, or address Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.

CANADA'S DUTY.

The Canadian Navy is an accomplished fact, an applied policy. But already it has been subjected to vicious attack, which it cannot repel, a form of attack, which, if it is permitted to prevail, either through indifference or passive support from paltry political motives, will prove a greater danger, a greater menace to Canadian interests, than a hostile war fleet on our shores.

On Saturday last La Presse, of Montreal, published an article showing that, as early as 1852, the Government of old Canada established the rudiments of a Canadian navy by the placing in commission of a vessel to protect the Gulf fisheries from poachers, and prevent loss of revenue by smuggling operations.

The principle and policy of a Canadian navy, then adopted, was recognized, was confirmed, at Confederation, and has been a Canadian policy up to last session, when it was definitely acted upon by the establishment of a Canadian navy.

In regard to the subject thus raised, Sir Wilfrid Laurier addressed a letter to La Presse, in which he arrested the defence of a Canadian Navy upon four broad propositions. These propositions are as follows:

That the withdrawal of British squadrons from two seaboards left work to be done which it is the business of Canada as a united, strong and respected nation to do:

That the withdrawal by Great Britain of her own motion, and her handing over to us the fortifications at Halifax and Esquimalt was "the confirmation of our autonomy," and the demonstration of her confidence in our loyalty and friendship;

That in taking up the work which thus offers to our hand, we are pursuing the normal course of our national development and are at the same time enabled "to hold up our heads in the British Empire;"

That Canada has and should have, the power to control its naval service according to the free will of the people as expressed by their responsible rulers.

These propositions correctly and accurately express the conditions which all true Canadians must face, in an effort to define a worthy attitude towards the navy.

While the "German scare" has been unworthily exploited for political purposes there is, no doubt, a German peril. Great Britain is prepared to neutralize this peril by concentrating her fleets in the North Sea, around her own shores. In pursuance of this policy she withdrew her naval forces from Canadian waters on both coasts. This left them defenceless. This condition gave new point to the question of Canadian naval defence. We have extensive fisheries on both our coasts, of a value greatly reduced by the operations of poachers, undeterred by action for naval protection. We have a trade of about 800 millions a year to be protected upon the high seas. We recognize that the safety of Canada, the safety of the Empire, depends upon Britain remaining the mistress of the seas. Is not Canada's duty, in the premises—her duty to herself and the Empire plain? What less could we do than we have done? Shall we be less loyal to ourselves and our interests than the Canadians of sixty years ago, who with a national revenue of a million and a half, to our present-day revenue of more than 100 millions, established a navy of one ship, which to them and their resources, was as great a financial strain as would be to us the building of a hundred ships? We owe it to our self respect as much as to our self interest to do what we have done, and propose doing, by the establishment of a Canadian navy. We have met a responsibility from which there is no escape, if regard is had to our duty, our dignity, our self-respect, and our interests.

We only emphasize our autonomy, our self governing powers by legitimately exercising them. The Quebec "Nationalists" take the ground that in pledging our credit and resources, to the establishment of a navy, we are placing it beyond our control at the beck and call and control of the imperial authorities; and are thus destroying Canadian autonomy. This is contrary to the facts and our Canadian people should know it and be guided accordingly. Canada has the power to control its navy, according to the will of the people through their representatives.

The position, in regard to the navy, of Conservatives, of those who do not sympathise with the "Nationalists," is equally untenable. They oppose the Canadian navy because it is not made a part and parcel of the imperial navy, placed beyond the control of Canada. They propose giving 30 or 25 millions of Canadian money to build, for the imperial navy, Dreadnoughts that may never see our shores.

POST CARD COLUMN

An Appreciation.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I have been in the Nicholls Hospital and have had my leg cut off. Now, if I speak well of anyone or any place, I don't want anyone to think that I am cutting any place or person. But I want to tell the public that the Nicholls Hospital is a credit to Peterborough in every way. Everything is clean, there is a good staff of nurses, and the patients attended to right. As for myself and all that were in our ward, we were treated right by the doctors and nurses. Miss Reid and Miss Howden were our day nurses and Miss Kennedy and Miss Hewitt our night nurses and they were fine. Dr. Holiday was my doctor and he is good. If I had a dozen legs to cut off, he would be my choice. From the day the operation was performed until the day I came home was just three weeks. This breaks the record. Yours respectfully,

MARK H. SPENCELEY.

Application Of Theological Principles To The Practice Of Municipal Taxation

(Ottawa Citizen)

What most we need, after all, is the political courage of our religious convictions. If any one of us took his religious principles really in earnest he would thereby become at once an important factor in the work of establishing equity and righteousness upon the earth. The curse of our age has been the fact that we have foolishly made a gulf between the truth we hold in religion and the practice we pursue in daily life.

It becomes the task of every good citizen today to follow his religious convictions to their inevitable sequence in industry and politics and taxation and all else. While every minister of religion to-day is seeing the absolute necessity of getting business methods into his religion, it is equally the wise part of every citizen of Canada to see to it that no religious principles get into his business and every relation with his fellow men.

Hence one may safely make the assertion that theology, as popularly accepted as true, finds its logical conclusion in certain taxation methods. While there is reason to believe that this fact does not compel our acceptance of the taxation sequence, it at least affords strong ground for our belief in its rightness. If consistency is a virtue in any degree, it is wise to at least follow the inference to its conclusion, reserving the right to reject it if we please.

The universal belief is that God created humanity. Back of all human life is the deific will that called us into being, and set us here upon the earth to live our short-spanned lives. That we are here is by no will of our own, however much we may use our wills when once we find ourselves possessed of the life forces that have been thrust upon us. The answer to the catechism question "Who made you?" may still find answer in the word "God." This, at least, may be universally admitted to express as much of the truth as is perceivable by the human mind.

Furthermore, it is also practically conceded by all that the power thus called us into being and set us upon this earth is kindly purposed toward us. The least we can assume of God is common fairness and justice, to say nothing of the larger reaches of love that lie beyond. That we should be thrust into this world, without having provision made to supply the wants that come with life, would be the greatest injustice. To believe it for a moment would be to declare ourselves atheists absolute.

Assuming this fact, then, we discover readily the source from which the supplying of these wants must come. It is not by any providential or miraculous medium, whereby manna falls at our feet. The processes are purely natural. The results are accessible to all—in the deific planning. The supply is not generally regarded as being in any way connected with the religion that postulates the Creator and the creative justice.

We find ourselves upon an earth that discloses itself to us gradually as being the storehouse of all that we need. The earth is the great mother of us all, whose breast suckles all the children of men. It is as if we had been set adrift upon the open sea in a ship whose lockers held all the necessities of life. It is but necessary to cooperate with the processes of nature in order to secure all that human life needs for its continuance and its culture.

Every human life exists because of its tax levied upon and collected from the earth. In no other way can it live. It is the method of taxation very evidently ordained by the creative power. And no other way is possible. There is labour involved in the task imposed upon each of us as tax-collector, but the source and the method are in every case alike. Labour is just the cost of tax collection.

Now, what is true of the individual life must be equally true of the collective life of humanity, as expressed in terms of civic or national existence. If a man must live by reason of his collection of his tax upon the earth, a city or a nation must base its existence on precisely the same grounds. Its larger life is made possible by means of the tax levied upon and collected from the earth. Its life comes primarily from the land.

The inevitable sequence, therefore, as any one must see, is that method of taxation which has land values as its basis. It makes no difference whether the tax is collected in money or in the earth's products. The principle holds the same whether civic life is derived from the richness of the soil or the largeness of the value. Just as the individual lives by to value he creates in cooperation with nature and the earth, so society must live by the value that it creates in its collective capacity.

In discussing the problem of taxation, therefore we are forced to the conclusion that the only logical solution is to be found in the land and land values. To base it upon anything else is to plainly disregard the very evident inferences to be drawn from the life of the individual. And society is, after all, nothing but the larger individual, to whom the same law applies at all points.

The sequence of the theological principles universally accepted is taxation based upon land values. The sooner we accept the conclusion, and apply it to our civic and national life, the better can it be. We shall then have placed ourselves in a position to avail ourselves of the fuller privileges made possible for us.

CHAPTER XXXI.

MY FATHER'S LETTER.

I heard Ray's heavy footsteps ascending the stairs to his room. In a few moments he returned, bearing in his hand a letter.

"Guy," he said thoughtfully, "I am a man who is slow to place trust in any one. For that reason, and perhaps because ignorance was better for you, I have told you little of the events of that night. Now, my first opinion of you has undergone some modifications. You are stronger than I thought, you have shown faith in me, too, or I should not be here practically a guest under your roof to-night. Listen! The man whom you found dead in the marshes was not your father."

I was not surprised. Always I had doubted it.

"Who was he, then?" I asked calmly.

"When your father went mad at Gibraltar," Ray said, "he needed help. This man, Clery by name, supplied it. When I knew them both he was your father's valet. Since then he has been his confederate in many schemes. Your father on many occasions manifested the remnants of a sense of honour. This creature set himself deliberately and successfully to corrupt it. He was a parasite, a nerveless, bloodless thing without a single human attribute. He and that woman were alike responsible for your father's ruined life."

"Once before," Ray continued, after a moment's pause, "I had told him it ever we should meet where his life would cost me nothing I would kill him as I would set my heel upon an adder—and he only smiled as though I had paid him some delicate compliment. And that night, Guy, a hundred yards from your cottage, he sidled up to me on that lonely road, and bade me direct him to the abode of Mr. Guy Ducaine. A moment after he recognized me."

A grim smile parted Ray's lips, but I could not repress a shudder. Invariably at any reference to that awful night the old fear came back.

"He seemed at first paralyzed with fear," Ray continued. "He tried to slip away into the marshes, but I caught him easily, and held him so that he could not escape. He admitted that he had come to find you with a message from your father. He denied at first having a letter, but I searched him until I found it. As you see it is addressed to you. Nevertheless I struck matches, opened it, and with some difficulty managed to read it. All the time this creature was doubling about like an eel trying to get away. Read the letter."

I drew it from the envelope. It was dated from the Savoy Hotel.

"My dear son, I do not deserve that you should read beyond these three words. I have as little right to call you my son as you can have desire to claim me for you father I am here, however, purely on an errand of justice. I have learned that you have been robbed of the sum set aside to give you a start in life. I am here to endeavour to replace it, for which purpose I desire that you will grant me a business interview within the next few days. I beg your reply by Clery, my faithful companion and servant. I am known here as

"Richard Drew Foster."

I laid the letter down without remark. Ray had filled his pipe whilst I had been reading, and was sitting now on the arm of his easy chair, facing me.

"I understood the letter and its meaning," he continued. "I knew that the whole neighbourhood was under the observation of the French Secret Service, and the man who signed himself Richard Drew Foster saw in you an excellent tool ready to his hand. It is very certain also that the matter would probably have presented itself to you in a wholly different light. Accordingly, I placed the letter in my own pocket, and I released my bold ancillary."

"You can go back to your master," I said, 'and tell him that you have seen me, and that I have his letter. It will be sufficient. And you can tell him that I shall be in London to-morrow night, and if any such person as Mr Drew Foster is staying at the Savoy Hotel, he will know the inside of a military prison before midnight."

"The man slunk away. I suppose he realized that with me in the way their game was up. But afterwards he must have hesitated, and then made up his mind to attempt what was probably the bravest action of his life. He followed me, stole up softly behind, and with an old trick which they teach them on the other side of the Seine, he as nearly as possible throttled me. However I got my finger inside the slipknot, and I held him by the throat. When I could breathe, I lifted him up and threw him into the marshes. There I left him. It seems the fall killed him. That is the whole story. It was absolutely God's justice, but I am quite aware that the laws of the country do not exactly favour such summary treatment. Accordingly I held my peace. I am sorry for it now."

"And Mr. Drew Foster?"

"Had left the Savoy Hotel when I reached there," Ray said drily, "and had omitted to leave an address."

"You might have trusted me," I remarked, thoughtfully.

"If I had known you as well then as I do now," Ray answered, "I would have risked it."

Then as we sat in silence there came a low tapping at the door. Ray looked at me keenly.

"Who visits you at this hour?" he asked.

"We will see," I answered.

I had meant to be careful whom I admitted, but I had scarcely withdrawn the latch when the door was pushed open, and a slim, thickly-cloaked figure glided past me into the room. I knew her by the supple swiftness of her movements. Ray sat still, and smoked with the face of a Sphinx.

I think that at first she did not see him. She swept round upon me and raised her veil.

"Guy," she cried, "forgive me, but I could not help it. I have made a mummy of myself, and I have walked along those awful sands that I might not be seen; but there is a question——"

She saw Ray. The words died from her lips. She stood and shivered like a trapped bird. He removed his pipe from his teeth.

"Go on," he said mildly. "Don't mind me. Perhaps I can help Mr. Ducaine to answer it."

She sank into a chair. Her eyes seemed to implore me to protect her. I heard Ray's little snort of contempt; but I answered her kindly. I could not help it.

"I am sorry that you came," I said, "but, of course, I will answer any question you want to ask me. Don't hurry, you are out of breath. Let me give you some wine."

My own untasted liqueur was on the table by the side of my empty coffee cup. I made her drink it, and her teeth ceased to chatter. She was rather a pathetic object. One of her little black satin slippers was cut to shreds, and the other was clogged with wet sand. The fear of Ray, too, was in her white face. She caught hold of my hand impulsively.

"The man," she murmured, "whom you found—what was he like?"

"He was a small dark man."

She laughed hysterically.

"He," she exclaimed, "was over six feet, and broad! It was not he. It may have been some one whom he sent, but it was not he. Guy, have you heard from him? Do you know where he is?"

I shook my head. Ray interposed.

"I think," he said roughly, "that you'll find him at home when you get there, madam, wherever that may be. If he were in this country it would be within the four walls of a prison."

She looked across at him.

"You have set them on the police then?" she said. "You would hunt him down still? After all these years?"

"Ay!" he answered. "Tell me where he is in this country, and I will promise you that his days of freedom are over."

She pointed to me.

"His father?"

"Ay, were he his father a hundred times over."

She turned to me as though in protest, but my face gave her no encouragement. She rose wearily to her feet.

"I will go," she muttered. "Guy," she added, turning to me, "you are honest. You will always be honest. You have nothing to fear, so you do not hesitate to speak if necessary to those whom nevertheless you do not trust. But there are other things in the world to fear besides dishonesty. There is animal brutality, coarse indifference to pain in others. There is the triumph of the beast over the man. There he sits, he who can teach you these things," she added, pointing to Ray. "Do not choose him for your friend, Guy. You will grow to see life, to judge others, through his eyes—and then God help you."

Ray laughed, and again to me there seemed to be a note of coarseness in his strident and unconcealed contempt for the woman. She took no notice of him whatever. She opened the door and passed out so quickly that though I tried to intercept her, and called out after her, I was powerless to prevent her going. She had flitted away into the shadows. I could not even hear her retreating footsteps.

Is This Your Boy

Who At Tender Age Must Face the Hard, Cold World Without Preparation or Protection.

No. You could not think of such a thing. And yet, would you neglect your health as you do if you waited to think of your family and how they would get along without you.

You have not the old-time vigour and energy. You go home tired and worn out, feel cross and irritable, lack the old-time smile and cheer which brought sunshine into your home at your arrival.

You don't sleep well, the brain is not so clear and active, little things annoy and worry you. In short, the nervous system is exhaust. You know this, but do not want to consult a doctor, and scarcely know what to do.

Use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. It cannot fail to do you good, for it is made up of the elements of which your run-down system is most in need. Through the medium of the blood it sends new energy and vigour to every organ of the human body.

You can feel yourself getting stronger every day. You can prove it by noting your increase in weight. You will sleep better, appetite and digestion will improve, and you will feel again the courage and energy which can only exist side by side with good health and steady nerves.

You can put a stop to the wasting process to-day by beginning this treatment. You need not let delay bring you a day nearer to nervous collapse.

This treatment is not a stimulant to whip up tired nerves and brain. It cures in nature's way by filling the system with rich red blood. It will not cure in a day, but its benefits are natural and lasting. With persistence on your part it will work wonders.

Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. Portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book Author, on every box.

WAS TERRIBLY AFFLICTED WITH LAME BACK.

COULD NOT SWEEP FLOOR.

Three Boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills Cured Her.

But they can't help it. If more work is put on them than they can stand it is not to be wondered they get out of order.

Weak back is simply a warning from the kidneys and should be attended to immediately so as to avoid years of terrible suffering from kidney trouble.

Mrs. N. Larmour, Smith's Falls, Ont., writes:—"I take pleasure in writing you, stating the benefit I have received by using Doan's Kidney Pills. About a year ago I was terribly afflicted with lame back and was so bad I could not even sweep my own floor. I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills, which I did, and with the greatest benefit. I only used three boxes and I am as well as ever. I highly recommend these pills to any sufferer from lame back or kidney trouble."

Price 50 cents per box, or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

WATCHED FOR 25 YEARS

Mr. D. M. Waters, the popular druggist, Belleville, Ont., sold his first box of Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills a quarter of a century ago and since then has noted many remarkable cures, as this medicine grew in popularity. The latest cure coming to his attention is that of Mrs. Jack Ottrey, Bay Side, Ont., who was cured of serious and torturing kidney and bladder trouble by the use of this great medicine.

Demands Senator's Withdrawal.

Boston, Nov. 21.—Governor-elect Eugene N. Foss issued a statement last night in which he demands that Senator Henry Cabot Lodge withdraw from the field for re-election. In the event of a refusal, Mr. Foss declared he would go into every section of the commonwealth in a campaign to defeat the Senator.

Mr. Foss says in his statement: "His election to the Senate would be a repudiation of the great victory of the people at the last election. He was on trial as much, if not more than Governor Draper, and if he had been the condidate, my majority would have been double what it was. "The issues on which the fight was made, on which I was elected, was honest tariff, revision downward, lower duties on the necessaries of life, free raw material, untaxed food supply, reciprocity with Canada, and more democracy in our form of government.

"We all know where Senator Lodge stands on these issues and where he has stood all these years. To re-elect him would be a step backward, and Massachusetts has never learned to walk backward."

Carbonari Makes Trouble.

Paris, Nov. 21.—A despatch to Le Temps from Lisbon says that the peace of Portugal is menaced by the attitude of groups called Carbonari, who participated in the revolution. They refuse to lay down their arms, and are embarrassing the Government by their imperious demands. They declare that they are ready to place 10,000 fighting men in the streets, if their demands are not complied with. Their leader, a naval officer named Machado, was active in the revolution.

The Government's proclamation granting the right to strike, has led to the general abuse of this prerogative, and it is feared that a strike which has been begun by the tramway workers, the river boatmen and electricians, will be followed by a strike of the railroad employes and the gas men.

Laurier Is Sixty-Nine.

Ottawa, Nov. 21.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier, on the occasion of his 69th birthday, yesterday received cables of congratulation from King George, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, Gen. Louis Botha, Premier Asquith and many others. A large number of people called at his house to convey their congratulations personally.

AN ATTACK ON BRIAND

Member of Camelot du Roi, a Royalist Club, Strikes Republic In Person of Its President—Only the Intervention of the Guards Saves the Assailant From the Fury of the Gathering.

Paris, Nov. 21.—Imposing national ceremonies in the Tuileries Garden yesterday, in connection with the dedication of a statue erected to the memory of Jules Ferry, the French statesman, were marred by an assault upon Premier Briand, who while walking with President Fallieres, was struck twice in the face by a royalist.

The Premier was not seriously hurt. The vast crowd in the garden set upon the Premier's assailant, and only determined intervention by the Republican Guards saved him from being beaten to death.

The incident occurred at the end of the exercises, which were attended by thousands. Premier Fallieres, M. Briand and other Ministers were walking toward the gateway, when a man broke through the Republican Guards that lined the road, leaped to M. Briand's side, and, raising his clenched fists high in the air, brought them with full force upon the Premier's face. M. Briand reeled, but did not fall. As friends rushed up to assist him, he cried: "I am all right; we must protect my assailant."

The very audacity of the assault rendered the crowd momentarily speechless, but a shout of anger and cries of "Kill him," arose quickly from all sides, as men fought their way to lay hands upon the assailant. He was kicked and beaten and badly injured before the Republican Guards, urged on by the Premier, succeeded in rescuing him.

The man was taken before a magistrate. He gave the name of Lacour, and said he was a member of the executive committee of the Camelots du Roi, an organization of young royalists, and that he wished to strike at the republic in the person of M. Briand.

The Camelots du Roi met last night, and unanimously elected Lacour vice-president of the association, in token of their sympathy and admiration for his act.

The statue to M. Ferry was erected by the public school children of France and the colonies, two million of whom each contributed one cent. The ceremonies, while honoring M. Ferry as a statesman and upbuilder of the colonies, especially honored him as father of the public schools of France. A golden book, containing the names of the two million subscribers was placed in a receptacle beneath the statue. There was a great procession of school children and orations were delivered by Premier Briand and other noted public men.

Five Years For Theft.

Quebec, Nov. 21.—Five years in the penitentiary was the sentence passed Saturday morning on James Barry, arrested Friday morning on the charge of having stolen the sum of $15 from another man in the Salvation Army barracks.

Old Man Murdered.

Halifax, N.S., Nov. 21.—The disappearance of Edward McGregor, who resided a few miles from the Town of Digby, and who was reported missing since Oct 11 last, is solved. The remains of the old man were found Saturday at Digby, in the woods near a lake. His skull was crushed and his clothes were rifled.

Two weeks ago the Attorney-General's office decided to make an investigation of the disappearance of McGregor, who was an old man living alone three miles from Digby. He was always known to carry money, sometimes as much as $1000. The Government offered a reward for the finding of McGregor's body.

A man named Tebo has been arrested on the charge of murder in connection with the case.

Wants Bigger Discount.

London, Nov. 21.—Mayor Beattie, at a meeting of the water commissioners Saturday, urged a 25 per cent. discount in power rates, instead of a 10 per cent., claiming that the city would not compete with the reduction made by the London Electric Co.

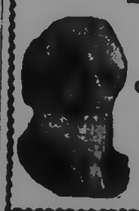
PEOPLE'S PULPIT.



Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Spurious Additions to the Word of God Condemned.

Cleveland, O., Nov. 20.—The Wise Man declared that a fly in the precious ointment would cause it to stink. We apply this suggestion to the Word of God, the precious ointment which God has supplied. Certain flies (falsehoods) crept into it during the Dark Ages, which are now causing a loathing and repudiation on the part of many of the best and wisest people in the world. All will admit that it is sinful to tamper with the Word of God—to either add to or take from it or to wrest or twist or pervert its meaning. Why is it, then, that ministers of the Gospel, who know that certain passages of the Scriptures are not to be found in the oldest manuscripts, fail to show to the people the truth on this subject? And if these ministers are not fully informed, whose fault is that? Would it not be preferable that they should absent themselves from some of the fairs and festivals and social functions, in order to inform themselves?

On what pretext are the clergy a specially privileged class, except for the purpose of giving their flocks reliable information along religious lines? And what is their commission from the Lord, except that they "should feed the flock of God, which he purchased with the blood of his own dear Son?" If the flock have been feeding upon certain Scriptures supposed to be genuine, and if they have been made sick thereby, and if their shepherds now know that these Scriptures are not a part of the Divinely inspired Word, why should not God's people be informed of the facts and be stopped from eating poisonous elements introduced by the Adversary?

The more others are silent, the more we must speak. We cannot see God's sheep spiritually sick without warning them respecting their spiritual food. Not only have we received many misinterpretations of the parables and symbols of the Bible, but into our Bibles themselves certain false statements have been injected — long centuries ago. All well-informed ministers of the Gospel know that our New Testament was not translated from the writings of the Apostles, but from copies thereof. These, copied over and over again, no matter how carefully, were liable to errors. And in addition, as we might expect, occasionally, a bold transcriber would add a few words to make the record conform the better to his conception of what it ought to be. This went on for centuries before the art of printing came into use.

The New Testament was translated from the Greek into the Latin language, and was known as the Vulgate. From that Latin translation sprang our various English translations—the Douay or Catholic edition, published in 1609 A.D., and the King James Bible, or Common Version, published in 1611 A.D. The latter was merely a revised translation, to assist in which revision other previous translations were used, and we are assured that the text was diligently compared with the Greek text. But until lately there were no ancient Greek manuscripts with which to compare it. The Greek manuscripts with which it was compared numbered only eight, none of which dated earlier than the Tenth Century. To-day, however, we have three very old Greek manuscripts of the New Testament, namely, the Alexandrian MS., the Vatican MS. and the Sinaitic MS. Of these, the Vatican MS. was the first to come to the attention of modern scholarship. It is in the Vatican Library, appearing on its catalogue as far back as 1475 A.D., which manuscript scholarship accredits with having been written in the fourth century. Next came the Alexandrian MS., which is supposed to have been written about the middle of the fifth century. It is now on exhibition in the British Museum. Finally, we have the Sinaitic MS., which is in possession of the Russian Government. It was found by Constantine Tischendork in a Mt. Sinai Convent, from which it takes its name. It is accredited with a date of about 350 A.D. Of these three oldest MSS. of the New Testament known in the world, the Vatican and Sinaitic are the older.

Assuredly nothing should be considered as part of the original Scriptures that is not found in any of these three oldest MSS. Why should we not tell this to the people? Why should we not inform them that some of the most confusing texts of the Bible are not found in these old manuscripts? Is it not a sin to preach doctrines as from God which have no part in these early MSS.? This is our thought. From time to time it will be our pleasure, as well as our duty, to teach the common people what the clergy already know on this subject. Moreover, the Bible Students Association of Brooklyn has arranged for the importation of copies of the New Testament bound in cloth showing the variations between the readings of these old Greek MSS. and our Common Version. The usual price of these is $1; but, importing them in large quantities, they are able to supply them postpaid at 50c. each.

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned." Mark xvi., 15, 16.

One of the most important of these interpolations or poisonous additions engrafted upon the Word of God is in the sixteenth chapter of Mark, all of which, from the ninth verse to the end of the chapter, is spurious—fraudulent. It is additional to anything that St. Mark wrote, as evidenced by the fact that these verses are not found in any of the three oldest Greek MSS.

Of course some of the items of these verses are found in other Gospels. It would never do to add a lie without a certain amount of covering of Truth to sugarcoat it! But notice our text and what a wrong thought it gives—inconsistent with the remainder of the Scriptures. Its intimation is that the preaching of the Gospel to every creature will result either in his believing it and being baptised, and thus being saved, or in his disbelieving and being damned. And this word damned carries with it, in the light of other misunderstandings, fire and blazings, roasting and torture, shrieking and woes indescribable. This is all wrong—contrary to the authentic Scriptures.

The authentic Scriptures inform us that this Gospel Age is one in which God is gathereing from the world a "little flock" of footstep followers, saintly and elect, to constitute the Bride of Christ—his joint-heirs in his coming Kingdom. They show that not all are expected to hear this message at the present time—not many wise, great, learned or rich, but chiefly the poor. They assure us that to have the hearing ear is a special favor, saying, "Blessed are your ears for they hear, and your eyes for they see." St. Paul tells us that the world in general is blind and deaf to the message, now sent forth (Romans xi. 7), and the experiences of eighteen centuries corroborate this. St. Peter tells us (Acts xv. 13) that God's work in the present time is not the conversion of the world (which certainly is not being accomplished) but that he is now taking out of the world a people for his name (to bear the name of Christ, as his Bride). The authentic Scriptures everywhere teach us that the poor, blind, deaf world, which has never yet heard fully and clearly of "the only name given under heaven or amongst men whereby we may be saved," is not on this account condemned or damned. They tell us that the whole world was born condemned, because children of Adam and sharers in his condemnation, but that God has provided in the sacrifice of Jesus a redemption for Adam and all his race. They tell us that, as a result, in God's due time, Christ, as the true Light, the Sun of Righteousness, shall enlighten every man that cometh into the world. They explain that God is now calling out a special class while the darkness is upon the earth and the gross darkness upon the heathen, and that the Sun of Righteousness, which is to enlighten the whole world, will not arise until the elect Church shall first have been gathered out. They tell us that, in the New Dispensation yet to dawn, all the families of the earth will be blessed through The Christ — Jesus, the Head, and the Church his Body or Bride. They tell us that then "all the blind eyes shall be opened and all the deaf ears shall be unstopped" (Isaiah xxxv. 5). They tell us that then the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in his beams, flooding the whole earth with the light of the knowledge of the glory of God. They assure us that that will be the period of Messiah's reign, for which we pray, "Thy Kingdom come; they will be done on earth as in heaven." They tell us that the object of that reign will be that the world in general may have a trial to determine whether, with the light and knowledge and experience then granted, they will choose God and righteousness and the reward of eternal life, or will choose sin and its penalty, the Second Death.

Our word damned, from misuse and the bad theology of the Dark Ages, has a sulphurous odor, whereas its plain, simple meaning is the same as the word condemn. Adam was damned or condemned 6,000 years ago because of his disobedience. And all his children, by heredity, share his weaknesses and thus share his condemnation. But Adam is not condemned or damned to eternal torture nor to Purgatory. The Bible distinctly says in so many words that his sentence, his condemnation, his damnation, is to death. "In the day that thou eatest thereof, dying thou shalt die" (Genesis ii. 17, margin). After his disobedience, God said, "Unfit is the earth for they sake. Thorns and thistles shall it bring forth unto thee. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread until thou return unto the ground from which thou wast taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return" (Genesis iii. 17-19).

This general sentence has rested upon all of Adam's race from that [illegible]. As the Apostle declares, By one man's disobedience sin entered into the world and death (not eternal torment nor Purgatory) as a result of sin and thus death (not eternal torment nor Purgatory) passed upon all men, because all are sinners (Romans v. 12). Jesus came to redeem two classes—the Church and the world—the Church class to be his "Bride" and to share his heavenly, spiritual Kingdom with him; the world to be blessed and restored to human perfection and to an earthly Eden, world-wide—God's footstool made glorious. The Church and household of faith, willing to walk in the footsteps of the Master in the dark, have been called during the past nearly nineteen centuries. Soon the worthy ones, the "little flock," will enter into the joys of their Lord, at his Second Coming. This marriage of the Lamb shall come, for his Wife will have made herself ready (Rev. xix. 7).

Then the world's salvation will be due to begin. The Times of Restitution will be the thousand years of Messiah's spiritual reign as King of kings and Lord of lords. Fleshly Israel, we are assured, will then be restored to Divine favor and become the special and active agents of the Messianic Kingdom in the distribution of the Divine favors to all the families of the earth. In the end all the incorrigibly wicked, who love iniquity rather than righteousness, will be destroyed.

Thus, as the Apostle declares, the sacrifice of Jesus constitutes a satisfaction for our sins (the Church's sins) and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world (1 John ii. 2).

Let us briefly notice another absurdity in the addition to God's Word found in the last twelve verses of St. Mark's Gospel, fraudulently added and not found in any of the oldest Greek MSS.

Notice the statement, "These signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues. They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them. They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover" (verses 17, 18). The majority of Christian ministers and their congregations seem not to be troubled by the fact that they do not have these evidences of their relationship to the Lord, and they do not attempt to heal the sick, to speak with tongues, and would not dare to drink any poisonous thing. But there are certain conscientious people, the very cream of all the Churches, who are greatly perplexed by these words because they know that they are not true in their experience. With them, therefore, it is a matter of feeling doubtful about their own salvation, or a question as to the reliability of the Bible as a whole. They need to have the relief which we now seek to give them. They need to know that these are not inspired words, but poisonous and injurious additions made during the Dark Ages. They may, consequently, look elsewhere in the Scriptures and find the proper assurances of their relationship with God being demonstrated by the fruits of the holy Spirit in their lives and in their hearts—"meekness, gentleness patience, long-suffering, brotherly kindness, love."

This spurious passage of our text is used by many ministers who know, or ought to know, of its falsity. But they have a certain theory in their minds to the effect that the miracles and unknown tongues of the early Church were lost by reason of unfaithfulness to God, and that Christians to-day should seek for their recovery. Not having any Scriptures to support their claim they use this interpolation and allow their hearers and readers to believe it to be the inspired message. To what length have people gone in support of human theory! The first principle of preaching should be to preach the Truth, the whole Truth and nothing but the Truth. Every theory which requires bolstering up by spurious passages should be abandoned, and will be abandoned by those who are honest truth-seekers, "Bereans."

Our Lord performed miracles. So did his Apostles. And so did those of the early Church upon whom the Apostles laid their hands. But no others have this gift. Consequently, when the Apostles were dead and when all those upon whom they had laid hands of blessing were dead, these miracles in the Church were at an end. We all see the propriety of this. Miracles were appropriate at the beginning for the establishment of the Church and, for a time, were necessary for their encouragement. In their early meetings they had no source of information aside from the Apostles, whom they rarely saw or heard. They had no Bibles—no copies of the Gospel nor of the Epistles. They needed the very arrangement which God provided—tongues and interpretations of tongues, etc., to draw them together and to instruct them until, in due time, the canon of Scripture would be completed that through it, the man of God might be thoroughly furnished unto every good word and work (II. Timothy iii, 16, 17).

By the time the Apostles died the Church had become established, had regular meetings, pastors and teachers, the Gospels and Epistles, and some of them had begun to develop the fruits of the Spirit. Thus the early Church naturally outgrew the tongues and miracles and entered a larger sphere, just as a child loses its swaddling clothes in favor of more suitable attire. For God's people today to desire to go back to speaking with tongues, etc., such as was practiced, and very profitably, in the early Church, would be like an adult person desiring to be dressed and treated as a babe. It is our understanding that the speaking with unknown tongues in religious meetings, which is gradually spreading over the world, is a deception being practiced upon earnest children of God, who are deceived by the fallen angels—the demons of the Bible. They are thus enslaved of error and have their attention drawn away from the Truth. To what extent the ministers of Christ of to-day are responsible for the delusion of these poor people is not ours to determine. Had the spuriousness of the last verses of St. Mark's Gospel been duly pointed out from every pulpit, as soon as the old MSS. were known, some, at least, might have been spared from this snare—some who, under misunderstanding, have been hindered from proper expectations in respect to God's Word and led improperly to expect the power of tongues and miracles suggested in this spurious passage.

Stabbed by Her Husband.

Sault Ste. Marie, Nov. 21. Mary Napolitano, a married Italian woman, living in the Italian colony, is a patient at the general hospital, suffering from stab wounds, said to be fatal, inflicted by her husband, Peter Napolitano, who, in a fit of jealousy, attempted to kill her.

The husband returned from a trip out of town, and, finding a number of men in the house, attacked the woman with a knife. She proceeded to the river front, and was in the act of throwing herself into the water, when frustrated by passers-by.

The husband took to the woods, and has not yet been apprehended.

Prison Reform Discussed By Goodfellowship Guild Interesting Meeting Sunday

The attendance at the League of Good Fellowship is still growing, the Princess theatre being fairly well filled yesterday afternoon.

The subject chosen was "Prison Reform." The Rev. C. Carpenter, in his opening remarks, said that he had chosen this subject on account of the day being set apart, throughout the diocese for special intercession for prisoners. He found many difficulties, he said, in considering the question of prisoners and prison reform. There are three classes of prisoners—the weak, the vicious and (midway between the two) the intellectual. He considered the gerat majority to be of the weak class. Many through faulty training in childhood, and the absence of true home life, and others were the dupes of cunning, unscrupulous companions, and often the dupe is in prison, whilst the real offender goes free. A great difficulty exists in the case of young lads, for if they are fined, the punishment really falls on the parents and the family; and if they are sent to prison, their families possibly suffer by the absence of the lads' earnings, and they themselves become tainted by prison life, and often get fairly started on the course of the habitual criminal.

He advocated flogging, but not in the degrading fashion of the cat-o'-ninetails, as really the most humane treatment in the end, and acting as a deterrent by fear of future flogging. Then, as to the vicious men, who commit crimes against the person, it seemed to him, there were only two alternatives. One was to make a man suffer through his skin, the other to confine him in a lunatic asylum. For undoubtedly many of the perpetrators of numberless horrible crimes, which shock our senses, are on this particular point, at any rate, insane. Amongst the intellectual prisoners, he classed forgers, embezzlers and bogus agents and advertisers, who live on the poor and the ignorant to make themselves rich.

Fining this kind of criminal, is quite useless, and the Statue should investigate the bona fides of such advertisers, and publish a 'black list' of these deliberate swindlers, without waiting for some individual who has been bitten, to prosecute. Severe punishment should be meted out to offenders of this class.

In the case of murder, he was in favour of capital punishment, but not of the inhuman method of hanging, nor yet by electrocution, but by a lethal chamber, where the prisoner would go to sleep to wake no more.

He suggested that juveniles should be confined in a reformatory, and that prisoners should be allowed to work upon such labour, that they might earn enough to support their families, during their incarceration.

He finally suggested more drastic treatment of petty offenders to whom detention is no punishment, but who regarded prison much as a winter home.

We want you to get a bottle of Rexall "93" Hair Tonic and use it as directed. If it does not relieve scalp irritation, remove dandruff, prevent the hair from falling out and promote an increased growth of hair, and in every way give entire satisfaction, simply come back and tell us, and without question or formality, we will hand back to you every penny you paid us for it. THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT
By Ruth Cameron

IF YOU want to see a stunning suit," said the man with me, "look over there."

I looked. And having a particular interest in winter suits at that time, I did more than just look. I analyzed. And it wasn't a remarkable suit at all. Just a very good looking broadcloth trimmed with a handsome braid. Not in the least more noteworthy than a dozen suits that had passed quite unnoticed. But the point was this. IT WAS SO STUNNINGLY WORN THAT IT LOOKED STUNNING.

The woman had a good figure and she carried herself so very splendidly that the effect was that she was exceptionally well dressed.

The entire unconsciousness of the man's tribute made me realize anew what a vast difference carriage makes in anyone's appearance.

Nothing sets off a good gown or redeems a poor one like a good carriage.

Take that same gown which our unknown friend, with her springy step, her shoulders squared, her head erect and her abdomen well held in, made appear such a stunning affair, and put it on a woman who didn't know how to stand, and you would at once convert it into a commonplace garment which no one would look at twice.

A man is as young as he feels and a woman as young as she looks, they say. I think it might be added— and both are as young as they stand.

The best ingredient of a good carriage is health of course. Health naturally expresses itself in a graceful, lively, erect carriage. The healthy man steps with a spring step, squares his shoulders and holds his head up because he feels so strong and fit that he just couldn't stand and walk any other way. It is harder without his natural impetus to carry oneself so well. But by due effort it can be done and if it is done, I think the assumption of a healthy exercise re-acts to create health. Step alertly square your shoulders and hold up your head, and act as if you felt well, and you will be more apt to feel well. And that isn't Christian Science, either. It is much better—C. S.—just Common Sense.

Do you step on the balls of your feet?
Do you throw your shoulders back?
Dou do you hold your abdomen in?
Do you hold your head high with your chin in?
Do you breathe from your abdomen?

To combine five questions in one, do you try to have the charm within the reach of everyone but possessed by very few—a good carriage?

Ruth Cameron

"WHAT IS MODERN THEATRE DOING FOR ADVANCEMENT OF CHRIST?"

"What is the Ethical Value of the Modern Theatre?" Asks Rev. W. T. Riddiford in His Sermon on the Theatre.

ITS EVIL TENDENCIES

At the Park street Baptist church last evening, Rev. W. T. Riddiford delivered his second of a series of sermons on "Some Ethical Questions," dealing with the "ethics of the theatre." He spoke as follows:

To-night I wish to apply myself to a simple and honest discussion of the "Ethics of the Theatre." I sincerely trust we may all be the better for it. To this end I ask your prayerful indulgence for a little while. Every man owes allegiance to his age, his home, his church, his country. Let us yield homage to the age we live in, without becoming its slaves. A Christian is placed in the world, but he is not of the world.

First, we are children of our age, and in a very real sense what the age makes us, or, perhaps more correctly, what we as individuals allow the age to make us. Our age. This composition. This present expression of manifold persons, forces, impressions and influences. This intangible yet all pervasive and controlling spirit of the air. It gives us our ideas, it shapes our habits, it offers us opportunities.

Second, we must understand our age. It is close to us, the very air we breath is a part of it, and this very closeness, this vital inseparable relation makes it hard for us, to understand it. But we must honestly seek to do so. We can study the past by a careful survey of history; we must speak of the present as it appears to to us as individuals. Again, we must appreciate the life and truth of our age and its institutions. It is easy to fail here. It is easy to be a critic. The way some people criticize everything else but their own work reminds me of a certain taxidermist who, when passing the shop window of another brother of the same craft, remarked as he stopped to examine an old owl sitting in the window "If I couldn't mount an owl more naturally than that I'd quit." Just then the owl blinked. It was alive. Ashamed, the taxidermist went on his way a wiser man.

What we should all strive to be, is not mere critics of our age, but interpreters of it. No man can help his age unless he rejoices in it, unless he sees the forces for good in its institutions, and seeks to elevate and strengthen them. With such motives in my heart, I take up the discussion of "the ethical side of the modern theatre." Some may differ with me; I cannot help that. I can only be true to my inner convictions, along these lines.

First then, we shall ask what is the tendency of the modern theatre of to-day on the moral life in general? What is the modern theatre doing for the advancement of "the kingdom of Christ?" That is the question that every honest man or woman should seek to answer. What is the ethical value of the modern theatre as a recognized institution of our Canadian society life, to us as a nation? To answer these questions, I now briefly apply myself. In this question of the theatre we have somewhat of a more complex and difficult problem to answer than in that of the 'modern dance.'

To denounce the theatre wholly from a moral standpoint, I believe, would be a colossal blunder. Not all plays are bad. Not all actresses and actors are immoral. No, on the contrary, there are just as good men on the stage and women, too, as there are off it. I would hesitate to assert that they were really consecrated Christian men and women, because I can not see how they possibly can be unless it be on the same plan as a lily could keep white and pure in a cesspit, or any body stay stay healthy and strong in a pest house.

I am concerned to-night with what I consider the evil tendencies of the theatre. Granting that there is good in it, and that all theatre-managers are not mere money grabbers; granted that the theatre might be made a place for the elevation of the nation's morals, I still maintain that as it is conducted to-day, it is an evil to the community, and a retarding influence to the advance of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is deplorable that the modern theatre should so early in its history have become inoculated with the total depravity of man. "I believe in total depravity That is, that in me, no good thing dwelleth."

The first arraignment I wish to make against the theatre is, "Its indecency in the display of nudity." "We are sunk low enough, God knows without being sunk to the level of the beasts." One need but take a scrutiny of the various bill-boards to be convinced of my first charge. I admit that this city is to be congratulated upon the choice and manage ment of our local theatre managers Sometimes they make mistakes; we all do, but I believe they are trying to be good. But still my charge holds good in the main. The decollete, the skirt, the tights, are a flaunting disgrace to womankind, and no man has a right to countenance in any other woman, even on the stage, what he would not permit in his wife, his daughter, sister or mother. One does not wish to question the virtue of the average actress or actor, far from it but if any pure-hearted woman will stop for a moment to ask herself what would induce her this very moment to apparel herself thus and to appear on the stage, for public gaze for a few paltry dollars, it would shock her mind, and that delicacy of character, which is a woman's chief charm and her pearl of greatest price.

Again, I charge the modern theatre with irreverence to things religious Dr. James Buckley, of the Christian Advance, who personally investigates sixty plays, acted in the so-called best theatres of New York, covering a period of three years, says nearly every play of popular reputation is open to the following charges:

Christian principles are not accepted as the rule of morals.

Religion is ridiculed.

Wickedness is made to give amusement, and oaths and profane language abound.

That the theatre has not improved very much since Dr. Buckley made his investigation, can be proved by clippings taken at random from the dailies dramatic critics.

The third thing I wish to bring against the theatre is "That it distorts life." Life is overdrawn and exaggerated to the extreme in a good many cases.

Nature is not always after money

Nature is not always in an agony either of horror or of laughter.

Nature is not always languishing with a great sorrow in her face and a bottle of laudanum in her pocket, weeping last tears over a false lover. Nature is not always nude, whirling around on one great toe, while the other is up in the air.

Nature is not always playing the harlot.

Nature never ridicules religion and morality for an entrance fee.

Nature is sane, rational, decently clad, patient, self-contained, not living solely for cash, even divinely beautiful at times like her Maker. So says Dr. Brand, an eminent authority on this subject.

The last charge against the ethics of the modern theatre, is "the effect that plays have upon the players themselves."

If it is true "that like begets like" as Henry Drummond maintains, then impersonations by actors and actresses, will according to this immutable law, make them like the characters they seek to impersonate, and the public will become like the actors and actresses they admire and worship the most.

The average melodrama, embraces the hero, the heroine and the villain. The hero is in love with the heroine, and so is the villain, whose affection the heroine spurns. The hero makes pretended love to the heroine, then he kills the villain and they live happy ever after, at the expense of the villain's death. Now is that a reality in the average love match of to-day? I think not. The life of Canadian society is higher than that. Yet the masses go on, night after night, to our theatres and people pay fabulous prices to witness a farce on life. One is not surprised, therefore, to read now and again of scandals, divorces, remarriages in the profession, and also to read such words as these from Clement Scott, a London theatrical critic. "It is nearly impossible for a woman to remain pure who adopts the stage as a profession."

Granted, there are some good features about the theatre, yet I sincerely think that the ethical standard of the present day theatre is beneath the dignity of that of the cross of Jesus Christ. Will you follow the ethics of the cross or the modern theatre. That is the question for us all to answer.

The next sermon will be upon "the ethics of business."

GREAT RUSSIAN AUTHOR SUCCUMBS TO THE STRAIN OF HIS JOURNEY

Aged Writer, Who was Perhaps the Greatest Man Russia Has Yet Produced, Had Had a Most Remarkable Career as Publicist, Philanthropist, Philosopher, Novelist, Soldier Teacher---Family at Bedside.

Astapova, Russia, Nov. 21.—Count Leo Tolstoi died peacefully yesterday morning. Countess Tolstoi was at his side when the end came. It was recognized long before that his case was hopeless, and at 5 o'clock in the morning, after the countess had been summoned and the other members of the family had gathered in an adjoining room, the physicians issued a bulletin, announcing that the activity of the heart had almost ceased, and that Tolstoi's condition was extremely dangerous. Several of the physicians were greatly overcome by the approaching death of Russia's greatest writer.

His heart beat its last apparently without a clear moment to enable him to say farewell, or cast a forgiving look upon his wife and children.

The countess all day long was unceasing in her pitiful imploring of one doctor after another to gain entrance to where Tolstoi lay.

After the first cardiac attack, Dr. Thichourovsky promised that he would announce her presence to Tolstoi at a favorable opportunity.

The second attack came just after a two hours' sleep. The members of the family were hurriedly summoned. The condition of the patient, however, was so grave that he was put to sleep again by injections of morphine, as the only means of deferring the end. The family were then admitted for a few moments to the bedside.

Another attack occurred about three o'clock, and the family gathered again. The countess was with difficulty prevailed upon to retire. Later, when the end came, in addition to the countess, four sons and three daughters were present.

Tolstoi, accompanied only by Dr. Makovetsky, left his home as Yasnaya Polyana, for the purpose of ending his days in solitude, to which he more and more inclined during his later years. His pilgrimage led him to the monastery at Shamardine, in the Province of Kaluga, where he remained as the guest of his sister Marie, who is a nun in the cloister.

Learning that his retreat had been discovered, he insisted upon proceeding on his journey to the Caucasus, where he hoped to spend his last days, close to the Tolstoian colony on the shores of the Black Sea. But during the railroad journey he was overcome with exhaustion and the cold, and Dr. Makovetsky was compelled to have him transferred to the flag station at Astapova, where he was made as comfortable as possible in the rude wooden buildings.

For five days he had lain there, suffering first from bronchitis, and later from inflammation of the lungs. Specialists were called from Moscow and other places, but, notwithstanding their utmost efforts, the heart of the great Russian responded but feebly to the restoratives and stimulants administered.

Countess Tolstoi was admitted to the sick room for the first time Saturday night, but her husband failed to recognize her. She had hastened to the bedside, when she learned several days ago, that his illness was serious, but the physicians had deemed it advisable that she be kept away from the count, fearing that her presence might cause the patient emotion. Other members of the family were from time to time admitted to the presence of their father, and his daughter Alexandra has been in constant attendance.

Few Russians have ever more fully incarnated the contradictions as well as the qualities of the race than Count Tolstoi, who was both aristocrat and plebeian. Fewer have had his astonishing experiences or shown his extraordinary versatility.

Student and man of the world; soldier sharing in the perils of national defence; hero in the struggle against famine and death; practical philanthropist leading the movement for social betterment and civic reform; literary man, easily at the summit of his art; and religious teacher with a world-wide following — Tolstoi would have been a commanding personality in any country.

It was his genius in the intellectual field that made his power cosmopolitan, and though he wrote only in Russian, his speech on any important question was waited for and quickened thought to the ends of the earth.

Tolstoi was especially a power to be reckoned with in his own country. Born in 1828, shortly after the suppressed insurrection of Decembrists against Nicholas I., he lived to see a Czar summon a representative assembly, from which, as many believe, the full constitutional freedom of 150,000,000 people is sooner or later to emerge.

Brought up as a royalist, Tolstoi passed with advancing years into the camp of the opposition, and, although out of touch with the revolutionists, whose policy of violence was against his most cherished convictions, he never ceased to condemn the methods of the autocratic regime.

The stormiest period of the reform movement left him unscathed. Many a time suspected of complicity with the conspirators, who found comfort in the spirit if not the letter of his writings; many a time driven to the expedient of publishing in the uncensored press of foreign lands the articles which could not see the light in his own—Tolstoi swerved from his plain speech neither to the right nor to the left.

The Ban Not Removed.

St. Petersburg, Nov. 21.—The church, in the persons of the Metropolitan Antonius of St. Petersburg, Vladimir of Moscow, and Flavian of Mtev, and Loukianoff, chief procurator of the Holy Synod, decided last night to leave things as they are with respect to Tolstoi. A plenary synod has not been called, and telegraphic instructions have been despatched, informing that requiems are not permissible. Burial, according to the Orthodox Church, is considered out of the question.

Three Young Men And Ferryman Are Drowned At The Soo

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Nov. 21.—In one of the saddest drowning accidents which ever occurred on the St. Mary's River, four young men lost their lives Saturday night, and three others of the party were saved. The drowned are: Fred. Parker, 24, son of J. Parker, Wemiss street; Cecil Brown, 17, son of Mrs. Elizabeth Brown, Grace street; Reginald Levi, 16, son of Mrs. Mary Levi, Abbott street, and John Sherwood, 45, a night ferryman, known as "Peg Leg." The rescued are: Clifford Dilks 16; Norman Trancoza, 18; Alex. Biron, 30.

The accident took place while the party of seven were returning in a rowboat from the Michigan side at two o'clock yesterday morning.

Sherwood was known as one of the most fearless men on the river, and, although he had been warned by customs and immigration officers to discontinue the practice, persisted in bringing parties across the river during prohibited hours. He was warned by a resident Saturday night, after depositing one load on the Canadian side, to refrain, but immediately left for Michigan, and, while waiting for his boatload, is said to have imbibed somewhat. The party was made up at two yesterday morning, and left the slip just above the ferry dock in a small boat, which was overloaded. A strong current sweeps around the pier on the Michigan side, throwing swift waters towards the Canadian shore. With a moderate east wind and the strong swell thus made, immediately dangerous waters were entered. Biron, who was an experienced riverman, became alarmed, when a couple of waves were shipped and suggested that the boat be bailed, and a can was procured. The members of the party were engaged in bailing when two heavy swells struck the craft and the boat immediately filled and sank.

Parker, Brown and Levi dropped in their heavy clothes and immediately disappeared, and Sherwood, who had but one leg, grasped the oars and his crutch, and made for the Canadian side. He was seen for some distance by those rescued, but eventually disappeared. Biron, Trangonza and Dilks clung to the boat, and their shouts were heard on the Michigan side. The Superior Steel Trust supply boat and the tug Sabin proceeded to the scene of the accident and rescued the men, who were all exhausted and could not have lasted much longer, as the strong current spun the boat around like a top. It is said that the barge Marquette, which had just locked through on the Michigan side, may have made the swell which swamped the boat, although Biron attributes the accident to wind and current.

The families of the young men are prostrated by the accident, and the Soo is in gloom, as all were popular. A large number of small craft were on the river yesterday with grappling irons, endeavoring to recover the bodies, but up to the present without avail.

SAY THEY ARE DIPLOMATS

Consuls-General Refuse to Be Classed as Trade Commissioners.

Ottawa, Nov. 21. The feature of the drawing-room held in the Senate chamber on Saturday evening by the Governor-General and Countess Grey, was the renewed refusal of the consuls-general of foreign countries to attend. The senior consul-general in Canada is Col. J. G. Foster, representing the United States. In Ottawa, besides him, there are the representatives of China, Japan and Belgium. In Montreal there are the consuls of Germany, France, Holland, Argentine Republic, etc.

The question is one of precedence. The consuls are offended that they are placed after the mayor of Ottawa, in the order in which they are presented to the Governor-General. They claim that their mission to this country is diplomatic, and that, accordingly, their status in this country is higher than mere trade representatives.

However, Canada being still a colony of Great Britain in a technical sense, the Government of Canada does not recognize them as diplomatic representatives, although on occasion they have acted on diplomatic missions, as, for instance, when Col. Foster took part in the recent negotiations regarding the tariff between Canada and the United States. The contention of the Canadian Government seems to be borne out in the case of several representatives, as they live in Montreal and not in the capital. Their mission, therefore, could hardly be diplomatic.

A Gruesome Find.

Brantford, Nov. 21.—A farmer named William Moore made a gruesome find near Whitemans' Creek, about four miles from this city, on Saturday afternoon. The body of an unknown man was found hanging to a tree, where it had evidently been for some months. Although the surroundings had frequently been used as a picnic resort during the summer, the remains had not been discovered. An inquest has been ordered.

High Constable Kerr, who is investigating, believes the body, which was almost entirely decomposed, to have been that of an Englishman, Ernest Mitchell, whose grip and clothes, including a Masonic apron and certificate, were found in a bush a few miles from Whiteman's. Efforts are being made to identify the remains.

Counsellor Hoyt Dies.

Washington, Nov. 21.—Henry Martyn Hoyt, counsellor for the United States Department of State, died at his home here yesterday morning from peritonitis. Mr. Hoyt was taken ill in Canada while there in connection with the reciprocity negotiations between the United States and that country. Since his return to Washington last Monday, he had been confined to his home, and physicians considered the case extremely serious from the beginning.

HOW R.M.C. DEFEATED VARSITY SECONDS FOR INTERMEDIATE TITLE

Saturday's Game a Lively Hard Fought Battle Between Two Well Matched Teams---Cadets' Bucking, Coupled With a Bad Five Minutes on Part of Frith, Gave Them the Game.

Royal Military College of Kingston won the intermediate Inter-Collegiate champion-ship and the right to play for the intermediate Canadian title by defeating Varsity Seconds of Toronto, in a sudden death game at River-side Park on Saturday afternoon by 6 point to 2. Incidentally Peterborough got its first local glimpse of inter-collegiate rugby, and enjoyed the game immensely. It was a clean, fast and bitterly fought battle between two well-conditioned, evenly balanced fourteens, who went at top speed all through the argument and the game was in doubt until the last whistle. Two better matched teams have never been seen here. At only one period did the Cadets having anything on the Toronto Collegians. That was in the third quarter, when taking advantage of some bad fumbling they piled up five points. The first half of the battle, although R.M.C. scored the only point, was remarkably even, and the last quarter was Varsity's. Frankly the game was a disappointment in several particulars to the critical spectators. In the first place to the people who were looking for the low, hard, accurate checking that is supposed to be an outstanding feature of inter-collegiate rugby, the tackling on both teams failed to come up to the standard. True, is was generally effective and in some cases the runner was downed with a neat low tackle, but just as often he was nailed around the shoulders and neck. Several of the players got their man according to the best traditions of College football, notably Gwynne and Lewis, the Cadets' two outside wings.

In the second place, there were none of the trick plays in evidence that the fans expected. Both teams played straight football, the repertoire consisting of little else than a buck, end run or punt. The Varsity Cubs were expected to uncover some of the bag of tricks that their seniors find so useful, but failed to produce any during the struggle. They tried the outside kick several times, but it did not prove very successful.

On the other hand the catching of the back divisions of the two teams was a treat, particularly of the R.M.C. backs. A muff at several stages in the last quarter would have been disastrous to the Soldiers, but they invariably got under the ball and captured it surely and neatly. Galt and Robertson were especially prominent in this connection. The little full-back had a beautiful pair of hands. Time after time he gathered in the ball on the dead run like a baseball outfielder pulling down a long fly and he was called upon frequently, too. Robertson did not drop a ball all afternoon, his catching being worth the price of admission. The Varsity backs were almost as good, except for a short period in the third quarter, when Frith who handled three quarters of R.M.C.'s punts fumbled three or four times in succession.

R.M.C. won the game on their merits. They were quick to take advantage of Frith's momentary slump in the third quarter and bombarded the Varsity full-back with punts until they had added five points to their score and then with a phenomenal punt by McKenzie broke up the assault they settled down to hold their lead, resorting to line plays to keep in possession of the ball as long as possible. Their superiority to Varsity at the plunging game was easily seen from the side lines. With Goldie or Roberts or Arnoldi carrying the ball they rammed through the blue line for big gains. On the other hand Varsity could do little with their backs. Jeff Taylor was the only man who seemed to find an opening in the Soldiers' line and when the big ex-Argonaut wing man limped off the field early in the third quarter with a sprained ankle, Varsity's bucking game was in the discard as far as effectiveness went.

The stars for the R.M.C. were undoubtedly Robertson, the lanky centre half, Galt, the little full-back and Goldie, Roberts and Gwynne on the wing line. Robertson performed brilliantly in all departments of the game. He did not make a single fumble, ran back punts in beautiful fashion and kicked accurately and effectively. Galt as has already been said, distinguished himself by his remarkable catching, while his dodging was beautiful. On one occasion he gathered in a punt and ran the ball back forty yards side stepping eight or nine Blueshirts before he was finally dragged down by one of the backs. He was almost clean away when grasped. Gwynne tackled low and hard and was always on the ball, while Goldie and Roberts were prominent in the line plunging. Harry Smith, the Peterborough boy, who played left half, caught splendidly and tore off some pretty runs.

For Varsity, Frith, the full back, in spite of his fumbles in the third quarter, was undoubtedly the star. He was called upon to do the greater part of the work behind the line and outside of his bad five minutes, handled himself magnificently. His long punting was a feature while he ran and caught nicely. McKenzie the big right half, tore off some nice runs as did distinguished himself by some fine punting several times booting the ball with a Cadet or two hanging to him. Pete Campbell played a steady, effective game at quarter, his swift, accurate passing being a feature. Jeff Taylor was the best of the wings, while he was on, shining in bucking and in following up.

A big crowd saw the battle, the gate receipts being approximately $180. Cadets had about 100 supporters with them who were a happy crowd, when it was all over. The teams were

There was only one score in the first half, although both teams had several openings. Robertson kicked to the dead line for a single just as the first quarter ended. A moment before Gwynne had picked up the ball on a blocked kick and carried it from centre to Varsity's five yard line. A try seemed imminent, but Varsity who out in mid-field had allowed themselves to be pushed around the field, tightened up and made a splendid stand on their own line, forcing Cadets to kick over at last for a single.

Varsity had a shade the better of the play in the second quarter, but could not score. Play hovered around centre for a few minutes and then Varsity on an offside, following Frith's kick to Smith, were given possession 15 yards from the Cadets' goal posts. Jeff Taylor plunged through for a gain and a Varsity score seemed certain. The Torontonians tried an onside kick but McKenzie muffed Campbell's short kick and the ball rolled outside giving R.M.C. possession. The Cadet team got to work and lost no time in working the ball away from the danger zone.

The third quarter was all Cadets. The Varsity troubles started soon after Jeff Taylor was forced to leave the game. On the next scrimmage R.M.C. broke through, blocked Frith's kick and dorpped on the ball. Robertson went around the end for a nice gain, and Cadets followed with a mass play that took the ball to Varsity's fifteen yard line. The Blues tightened here and forced Robertson to kick to the dead line for another point. Robertson took the kick-out at centre and Cadets resumed line plunging. They gained their yards and then lost on a fumble, Campbell dropping the ball. On the next down Gwynne regained possession for Cadets on another fumble and Robertson booted the pigskin to the dead line again.

A twenty yards round by Stuart took the ball to Varsity's 20 yard line. Roberts tried a drop on goal and it looked pretty close, so close indeed that the Cadet behind the posts raised his hand. Referee McMaster said nay, however, but as the ball went to the dead line R.M.C. got another single. Frith fumbled Robertson's punt and R.M.C. secured twenty-five yards out. Robertson hoisted another high one to Frith behind the line and the ball bounded out of the Varsity back's hands. Half a dozen Cadets and a couple of Blues dived for ball and there was a pile up. When Referee McMaster pried loose the heap he decided that Varsity had the ball and it was only a rouge instead of a try. A moment later Frith again tumbled behind the line, but Ramsay recovered and rouged. This ended R.M.C.'s scoring and for the balance of the game Varsity had a little the better of the argument.

During the last quarter they worked like Trojans to overcome the lead. They had several good opportunities. Once Pete Campbell found an opening in the Cadets' line and went forty yards before being stopped. An offside lost Varsity the ball and a golden chance. A little later a fumble by Smith gave them possession twenty yards out and Frith kicked over for a rouge.

The play was repeated soon after, when Galt fumbled. The Soldiers commenced a successful series of line plunges that carried the ball back to mid-field. The last minute of the game was featured by two pretty plays. One of these a long pass three quarters the width of the field by Campbell to Frith was nullified by the other, a brilliant double tackle by Gwynne, who nailed Frith and when the latter passed to Ramsay pulled the Varsity Captain down as well.

Junior Age Limit Will Be Twenty Years This Year O. H. A. Settles The Matter

The proposition to make the age limit in the junior series 20 years instead of 19, as proposed last year, caused considerable discussion at the O. H. A. annual meeting on Saturday.

The amendment was moved by Jas. T. Sutherland, Kingston, who made a strong speech in favour of the 20-year age limit. Bert Short seconded the motion.

Mr. Nelson spoke in favour of the 19-year old clause.

Mr. Marriott pointed out that in his experience players under 19 years of age were not competent for junior hockey.

Mr. Lutz, of St. Thomas, said upon the action of the association depended the entrance of a junior team from that city.

Mr. Farquharson of Stratford, said that the junior series should be a schooling ground for the youngsters. He favoured the 19-year-old clause, as did Mr. Connolly of Belleville.

Mr. O'Brien of Peterborough, spoke in favour of the 20-year-old clause. The 19-year-old clause would mean buying players on the shelf. Mr. Gillespie of Berlin endorsed what Mr. O'Brien said. Mr. Sterling of Paris, also spoke in favour of the 20-year-old clause.

Mr. Sheridan of St. Michael's, favoured the 20-year-old clause, citing experiences in Toronto last winter. Mr. Doyle of Newmarket, suggested the formation of a juvenile series, age 17 years.

Mr. Robertson said that the discussion was most beneficial to the association. He thought the preponderance of sentiment was in favour of the 20-year-old clause.

The 20-year amendment carried by an overwhelming vote.

New Fees for Referees.

On motion of D. J. Turner it was decided to make the fee for referees $5 and an allowance of ten cents per mile one way for all distances, with a minimum of $8 for fee and expenses, except where a local referee acts. This increases the fee for the officials.

By amendment of Mr. Sloan, of Guelph, a convener of a district will be required to give 24 hours' notice of meetings.

Two additions were made to the rules, as follows:

"A penalty imposed on any player shall not commence until said player has reported to the penalty time-keeper."

"When the puck hits the referee play shall cease and the puck faced where the accident occurs."

The honorarium of the secretary was increased from $400 to $500.

Kenneth Casselman, London; Rev. A. G. Barr, Whitby; Norman Rule, Collingwood; H. J. Sterling, Paris.

Greeting to D. L. Darroch.

Mr. Robertson moved the following resolution, which was carried unanimously:

"That the O. H. A. assembled in its 21st annual convention sends its message of greeting and good wishes to our former President, Mr. D. L. Darroch, and expresses the hope that he may soon be restored to his wonted health and strength, this in remembrance of his long and faithful service to our noble game."

Doctor Told Her She Did Not Have A Pint Of Good Blood In Her Body.

Mrs. Dosithe P. Cormier, Middle Sackville, N.B., says:

"In the spring of 1897 I was all run down, and the doctor told me I had not a pint of good blood in my body. I took different remedies from doctors, but they did not seem to do me any good. After having taken a lot of different other kinds of medicine, and they did not seem to benefit me, I was almost in despair and did not know what to do until my husband met a lady and told her about my sickness and she told him to try Burdock Blood Bitters as she had received the greatest benefit from using it. My husband went and bought me a bottle, and after having taken it I felt better, so I kept on using one bottle after another until I had taken six in all and then I was strong and well. I am positive that my being alive to-day is due to the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. One spring since then I was not feeling very well and had a lot of work to do. I thought I would procure a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters and after I had taken two I was able to do a lot of hard work all the summer, and I never felt better in my life. In the winter of 1906 I had Pneumonia, and it left me with a severe pain in the left side. Every morning when I would get out of bed I had to sit down for a while it was so painful. After I had used Burdock Blood Bitters the pain disappeared completely. It has also cured me of bleeding piles. I have received so much benefit from Burdock Blood Bitters that you may publish this as it may help others as it has me."

ANNIVERSARY OF THE CHURCH OF THE SACRED HEART

Eloquent Sermon Preached at the Evening Service Yesterday by Rev. Father Fitzpatrick, of Ennismore.

THE SACRIFICE OF THE MASS

The anniversary service of the blessing of the Sacred Heart Church was held last night. The dedication of the church took place just one year ago by Bishop O'Connor.

At the morning service there were three masses in which there was exposition of the Blessed Sacrament. In the evening Rev. Father Fitzpatrick of Ennismore officiated. He preached on the Holy Sacrafice of the mass. He first took up the nature and meaning of the sacrifice in general, speaking of the old law, and how, even the children of Adam had offered sacrifice to God, as being the most proper means of adoring the Infinite Being. Coming down to the patriarchs and Moses, he referred to the promise made by God himself for the sacrifices which should be offered Him. The sacrifice properly so called, was therefore ordained by God himself, as the old law was but the shadow of the new, it is but meet and proper, that the new law should possess the highest possible act of adcration to our mighty God. This, the speaker said, is the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass.

He dwelt upon the prophecies and the priesthood of the old law, and especially upon the first chapter of the prophecy of Malachi, wherein the sacrifice of the mass is expressly prefigured. He showed the connections between the sacrifice of Calvary and the sacrifice of the Mass. The mass, he said, is the repetition in a bloodless manner of the sacrifice of the cross. The mass receiving an efficacy from the cross, is therefore the very highest act of adoration that can be offered to Almighty God. The speaker spoke of the different parts of the mass and exhorted the people to attend Holy Mass as often as possible, especially on Sunday.

Local Photographer Wins Distinction At London Salon

At the recent salon held in the Fine Arts' Society's gallery on New Bond street, London, Eng., Peterborough was represented in the most artistic display of photographic art ever shown. It is interesting, as well as pleasing, to know that the four portraits sent by Mr. Louis Mendel, to this salon, were all accepted, which is equivalent to the winning of prizes, as it is considered a signal honour to have work accepted by this Society. In fact, Mr. Mendel appreciates this recognition more than any of the gold medals he won at the exhibitions this fall. The recent exhibition, held in London, was the finest in the world The highest standard was set and only work of the highest order in a strictly artistic sense found acceptance at the London salon. Mr. Mendel is to be congratulated on the distinction he has won, both for himself and for Peterborough.

Logan's Blacksmith Shop Was Damaged By Fire

Fire broke out in Logan's Blacksmith shop, corner of Aylmer and Brock streets about 3.45 this morning and gave the firemen a lively job to extinguish it. The fire started in the inside and evidently was caused by tramps as no fire had been left in the building from the previous day. The Logan family were the first to notice it. The roar of the reflection woke them up and they went to the Fire Hall and gave a verbal alarm. The brigade was on the job in an instant and soon had the hose playing on the flame. But the fire had got such a good start that it was very difficult to get it under control. The dry wood of the old structure also tended to make it difficult The damage is estimated at $300.

Government By Commission Will Be Discussed

The Board of Trade on Tuesday evening (to-morrow), will consider the important question of municipal government by commission. It is to be hoped that there will be a large attendance, and that the subject will receive sharp, pointed, direct, business-like treatment, and not be swamped under a wash of theoretical platitudes. The subject is one of the most vital importance to Peterborough at the present stage, not to say, crisis, of the city's history.

Fifteen New Members Added To The T.A.S.---To Have Minstrel Show

St. Peter's T. A. S. formed a dramatic section in connection with their literary club at their meeting yesterday. It was decided to put on a negro minstrel show in their auditorium on the anniversary night in January. Mr. James O'Brien was appointed secretary, and Mr. Harry Quinlan, treasurer. Mr. J. W. Fewer will act as manager of the minstrel section and Mr. J. Armstrong as musical director. This looks like a strong combination, and with the material they have to pick from they should put on a big show. Their first full practice will be held in the auditorium next Friday night at half-past seven.

A debating club was decided upon and will comprise Belleville, Trenton, Peterborough and Ennismore.

Fifteen new members were added to the membership yesterday, and Rev. Father O'Sullivan of Port Hope founder of the Society, was made a life member.

Grafters Jailed.

Philadelphia, Nov. 22.—Two former councilmen of Pittsburg, by a decision announced yesterday in the State Supreme Court, must go to jail for accepting bribes to influence their votes as councilmen. The court sustained the convictions against M. E. Swift, jr., and A. V. Simon in the Allegheny County Court, the former for receiving $81.10 for his vote in favor of vacating a city street, and the latter for accepting a like bribe for his vote on the street ordinance, and $100 for his vote on a measure designating certain banks as depositaries for city funds.

McBride Cannot Attend.

Toronto, Nov. 22.—Sir James Whitney yesterday received a letter from Premier McBride of British Columbia stating that it would not be possible for him to attend the interprovincial conference at Ottawa on Dec. 9, owing to the early opening of the Legislature in that province in January. It is expected that Premier McBride will be fully represented.

It is probable that Hon. J. J. Foy will accompany Premier Whitney as the representatives of Ontario.

MR. BORDEN CONGRATULATES PREMIER ON HIS GOOD HEALTH

FIRST BILL PRESENTED

Ottawa, Nov 22—Much interest centred around the opening debate of the House of Commons this session, and from the time of assembling until adjournment the galleries were crowded with spectators. The burden of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech was upon the contest in Drummond and Arthabaskaville, while Mr. Borden confined himself to a discussion of the problems presented to the Premier on his recent tour of the west, and a reference to the tariff issue, combined with the reciprocity negotiations.

There were a few preliminaries, one when R. L. Borden extended to Sir Wilfrid Laurier congratulations on his attainment in good health and spirits of the age of 69 years. He was glad to know that the cares and responsibilities of office sit so lightly on the shoulders of the Premier. He hoped that if such should be Sir Wilfrid's lot in the future, he would still have strength and energy to retain the leadership of the opposition.

Sir Wilfrid, who was somewhat surprised and visibly affected, said that he was more touched than words could express. Up to the present time there had been one invincible objection to his becoming an opposition leader, the will of the people. He would when retired by the will of the people no doubt become a private citizen.

In presenting the report of his enquiry into printing bureau affairs to the House, Hon. Charles Murphy announced that later on he would move to have the report considered by a joint committee of the House and Senate.

The first bill of the session was introduced and explained by Mr. Lancaster. It is an amendment to the Railway Act, to compel the holding of inquests in all cases of death by railway accidents.

In response to an enquiry by Mr. Borden concerning Fedorenko, Mr. Aylesworth said that he believed that the order for extradition was at the moment subject either to an appeal, or that the decision was being reviewed under habeas corpus proceedings. Until such proceedings were closed, it was not likely that the evidence would be sent to Ottawa for review.

Sir Frederick Borden assured the Opposition leader that Major-General French's report would be tabled without delay.

H. B. McGiverin (Ottawa), in moving that an address be presented to His Excellency, referred to the fact that this was the first time that a member from the capital had been given this honor. As regards reciprocity, he said Canada had been ready for thirty years to discuss the question, and to come to an understanding that would be mutually advantageous to the two countries. Canada was still ready to go to Washington, but he did not think the Government of the Dominion should act arrogantly. The matter of the recent negotiations had been gone about as sensible business men would have done. The negotiations was re-open.

E. A. Lapointe, Kamouraska, who seconded that address, advocated a closer commercial agreement with the United States. Turning to the navy, he said their dearest interests, their religious priviliges, were bound up in the conservation of imperial supremacy. "We must not be turned from our duty," he said, "and our responsibility by chimerical hypotheses and the platform of imaginary perils."

R. L. Borden, who followed for the Opposition, paid a tribute to the services rendered to Canada by Earl Grey, and deplored the absence of Mr. Fielding. The result of the fisheries case before The Hague tribunal was a matter upon which he could well congratulate the Minister of Justice.

Turning to the reciprocity negotiations he said it was only fair and right that the people of this country should be informed upon what principle the Government proposed to act. After showing that Canada purchased five hundred million dollars' worth more goods from the United States than they purchased from the Dominion during the last six years, and that Great Britain purchased over $270,000,000 more than Canada purchased from the old land during the same period, he asked that were the benefits to be expected by a lowering of duties or by reciprocity.

After dealing at length with the investigation into the spending debts and the recent disclosures in connection with the printing bureau, Mr. Borden concluded by remarking that while "the mills of the gods grind slowly they grind exceeding fine" and the responsibility of the loss of the people's money would be laid upon the shoulders of the men who were to blame, namely, the Government.

Sir Wilfrid said that, whereas Mr. Borden believed that there was danger in the west to British and Canadian connection, he himself had found no trace of any such danger. Every man who came to the west had been proud to become a Canadian and a British subject.

The Premier then reviewed the tariff negotiations to date, describing the recent conferences in Ottawa as "informal pour parlers" to see if it was possible to reach a common basis on which a new policy could be based.

Sir Wilfrid touched on the by-election result with the remark that history teaches us that there are defeats more honorable than victories. That election was won in each by a combination of what is left of the once great Conservative party in Quebec and certain young nationalists who were brought up in Liberal surroundings, by appeals so desperate that, when the smoke of battle had cleared away, the public conscience was aroused to shame and indignation.

The law of last session had not been complained by the electors. That bill provided for a naval service, but nowhere did it state that the service was to be created by conscription or by forced enrolment. But those who attacked the law did not say there was to be no forced enrolment and that there was to be no conscription.

Mr. Paquet—"I said that."

Mr. Monk—"I said that also."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier—"I am glad to know there are two men who oppose that naval policy who told the truth in that election, but they were given the lie by those who assisted them."

Sir Wilfrid then quoted from a pamphlet circulated in the constituency in which the horrors of conscription were described. He said the man who wrote the pamphlet was ashamed to put his name to it, but it was circulated by the connivance of the Conservatives and the Nationalists. A member of the House of Commons in the course of the campaign had said: "We have had enough of England and the English."

Hon. Mr. Foster and F. D. Monk also spoke, after which Hugh Guthrie moved the adjournment of the debate.

Lloyd-George Says The Government Will Consult The People

London, Nov. 22.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Speaking in the east end of London, Lloyd George said that the schemes for the reform of the House of Lords the Government would consider at leisure. Under that enumerated by Lord Lansdowne every radical bill would be sent to a referendum. The Government would have none of these shams.

The Chancellor was in excellent form, his wit biting as ever. The huge hall wherein he spoke was filled with an enthusiastic crowd.

Referring to the Tories' sarcasm about Redmond as a "dollar dictator," Lloyd-George remarked that their bogey time was a German invasion. Since then, he asked, had the British aristocracy started despising American dollars, which had bitterness many tottering nobles' houses.

As regard the constitutional issue, no country in the world would stand the British second chamber. It was like, he said, running a horse car and an electric car on the same track.

Lloyd-George reminded the Conservatives that a large portion of Redmond's funds came from Canada. He claimed that, when Canada and Canadian statesmen were to be used as excuses for taxing bread, then Canadians were kith and kin beyond the seas, but when they subscribed to enable Ireland to obtain the same self-government they possessed, they were called aliens tearing down the constitution. (Applause.)

Humorously the Chancellor took his hearers to the overseas dominions in search of a similar institution in imagination. The interviewed Australians, then enquired if they were anything like the descendants of the French filibusters in Britain, and they got the reply that they had a few years ago imprisoned strangers, who, however, had only stolen seven cattle not hard. These had been hanged before they had the opportunity of founding families.

Rubbed the Insane.

New York, Nov. 22.—Dr. William Mabon, superintendent of the State Hospital for the Insane on Ward's Island, testified yesterday before Commissioner Fosdyck of the department of accounts, in the last three years during which he has been superintendent, 216,000 pounds of meat intended for the patients had been stolen.

The exposure of long-standing frauds of such magnitude came through the arrest last week of Simon Katzenstein, a refuse collector, who had the contract to remove bones and fat from Ward's Island. He is out on bail, specially charged with the theft of seven barrels of meat and chicken, which, when seized, were found to be thinly covered on top with a layer of bones.

Commissioner Fosdyck believes the frauds will run into much larger amounts than are shown in Supt. Mabon's estimate. He thinks they may go as high as 150,000 pounds of meat a year, of $450,000 pounds for three years involved.

Exhumed the Body.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Nov. 22.—Going to Grand Rapids for the purpose of securing evidence for the defence of the slayer of Stanley Ketchel, murdered middleweight champion of the world, two attorneys from Springfield, Mo., together with the undertaker who had charge of the Ketchel funeral, and the sexton of the local Polish Cemetery, surreptitiously exhumed the body of the dead fighter yesterday.

The sexton says the two men closely examined the bullet wound in Ketchel's breast and minutely inspected the head for other suspected wounds. The action was a violation of the state health laws.

THE STRONGER EYE
Are you aware that almost every one is equipped with unequal eyes? That is to say, the right is stronger than the left, or vice versa. We rarely realize this, because the stronger eye takes upon itself all the work and the weaker one scarcely ever attempts to do anything.
NATURE'S INEVITABLE LAW!
Every organ or faculty which is not made use of for a considerable length of time, becomes gradually but surely useless. And this is the effect on the eyes; work keeps the strong eye in good order, but lack of work causes the other to grow worse.
Possibly you may be in this condition. If so may record in the Optical Business during the past seven years in this city, is proof of my ability to benefit you.

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

A PAINFUL ENCOUNTER.

More work. A week of it, ceaseless and unremitting. The police seem to have abandoned their watch over my cottage, and I heard a whisper that a statement made by the Duke had at any rate partially cleared me from suspicion. Ray had declined to leave England. I knew quite well that it was on my account. He, with the others, was now in London.

Then came my own summons thither. I was told to report immediately on my arrival at Rochester House, and to my surprise was informed by the servant who answered my enquiries that a room was reserved for me there. I had no sooner reached it than Lady Angela's own maid arrived with a message. Her ladyship would be glad if I could spare her a few minutes in the drawing room as soon as possible.

Lady Angela was standing upon the hearthrug. I stepped a little way across the threshold and stopped short. She held out her hand to me with a quiet laugh.

"Have you forgotten me?" she asked, "or am I so alarming?"

I set my teeth and moved towards her.

"You took my breath away." I said with an ease which I was far from feeling. "Remember that I have come from Brasher.

I do not know what she wore. Her gown seemed to be of some soft crepe of silk, and the colour of it was a misty mossy blue. There were pearls around her neck, and her hair arranged with exquisite simplicity, seemed to be drawn back from her face and arranged low down on the back of her neck. She had still the fresh delightful colour which had been in her cheeks when she left Brasher, and the smile with which she welcomed me was as delightful as ever.

"This is a charming arrangement," she declared. "You know that you are such an important person, and have to be watched so closely, that you are to stay here. I went up myself with the housekeeper to see to your rooms. I do hope that you will be comfortable."

"Comfortable is not the word," I answered. "I have never been used to such luxury."

She laughed.

"Dear me!" she said, "I have so much to tell you, and the carriage is waiting already. Thank goodness we dine alone to-morrow night. But there is one thing which I must tell you at once. Sir Michael Tregoddy is in town, you know. He took me to dinner at Amberley House last night, and we talked about you."

"I had a letter from Sir Michael a few days ago," I answered. "He made a proposition to me, and asked me to call and see him."

Something in my voice, I suppose betrayed my feelings. She laid her hand upon my arm.

"Mr. Ducaine," she said, "I do hope that you mean to be reasonable. Sir Michael is a dear old man."

"He is my brother's brother," I answered, "and he left me to starve."

"He had not the least idea," she declared, "that you were not reasonably well off. He is most interested in hearing about you, and he was delighted to have you accept the allowance he offered you. You will go and see him?"

"Yes, I shall go," I promised. "I scarcely see the use of it, but I will go."

"You must not be foolish," she said softly. "Sir Michael is very rich and you are his only near relative. Besides, you have had such a lonely time, and it is quite time that you saw a little of the other side of life. Sir Michael is a particular friend of mine, and I promised him that I would talk to you about this. I am most anxious to hear that you get on well together. You can be amiable if you like, you know, and you can be very much the other thing."

"I will try," I assured her, "not to be the other thing."

She smiled.

"And tell me all about Brasher."

"There is not much to tell," I answered. "I have been hard at work all the time, and I have scarcely seen a soul."

"The woman—Mrs. Smith-Lessing?"

"She left Brasher before you. I have not seen her since the evening of the day I saw her last."

She appeared relieved.

"May I ask you a question?" I asked.

She nodded.

"About Colonel Ray. Has the Duke forgiven him?"

"On the contrary, he is more bitter than ever," Lady Angela answered. "I have seen him once or twice only. He does not come here."

"I saw in the paper," I said, "that your engagement——"

"It is not true," she interrupted. "Everything is as it was. But it is shockingly indefinite, of course. I scarcely know whether I am to consider myself an engaged person or not. Colonel Ray offered to release me, but we agreed to wait for a little time."

"Lady Angela"

She looked at me with a soft flush upon her cheeks. But my words were never spoken. The Duke entered the room, brilliant in sash and orders.

"Good evening, Ducaine," he said, looking at me with slightly lifted eyebrows.

"Good evening, your Grace," I answered in some embarrassment.

"I sent for Mr. Ducaine," Lady Angela remarked, stooping that her maid, who had followed the Duke, might arrange her cloak. "I wanted to hear all about Brasher, and I had a message for him from Sir Michael Tregoddy."

The Duke made no remark.

"I shall require you, Ducaine, at ten o'clock to-morrow morning in my study," he said. "Afterwards we go over to the War Office. You have brought all the papers with you?—If you are quite ready, Angela."

The Duke, without saying a word, had managed to make me feel that he considered my presence in the drawing-room with Lady Angela superfluous, but her smile and farewell were quite sufficient recompense for me. Still I knew that this living together under the same roof was to be no unmixed blessing for me. I shut myself in the dainty little sitting-room which I was told was mine, and turned the key in the door. I felt the need of solitude.

Later in the evening I became mundane again. I remember that I had sent dinner away, and though I had only to ring the bell and order something, I felt the need of fresh air. So I took up my hat and stick and left the house.

After a while I found my way into Piccadilly. I knew very little of London, but after my solitary evening walks at Brasher along the sandhills and across the marshes, the contrast was in itself suggestive and almost exciting. I watched the people, the stream of carriages. I listened to the low, ceaseless hum of this wonderful life, and I found it fascinating. The glow in the sky was mat-veilous to me—the faces of the passers-by, the laughter and the whirling, the tears and the cursing, the pleasure-seekers and the pleasure-satiated, how they all told their story as they swept by in one unceasing stream! For a while I forgot even my appetite. The sight of a restaurant, however, at last reminded me that I was desperately hungry.

I knew it by name—a huge cosmopolitan place of the lower middle class, and entering I found a quiet seat, where my country clothes were not conspicuous. There were few people about me, and those few uninteresting, so I kept my attention divided between my dinner and the evening paper. But just as I was drawing towards the close of my meal, something happened to change all that.

A woman, followed by a man, passed my table, and the two seated themselves diagonally opposite to me. Something in the woman's light footsteps, her free movements, and the graceful carriage of her head, struck me instantly as being familiar. She was dressed very plainly, and she was closely veiled. Their entrance, too, had been unobtrusive, almost furtive. But when she raised her veil and took the carte-du-jour in her hand, I knew her at once. It was Mrs. Smith-Lessing.

She had not seen me, and my first impulse was to pay my bill and step quietly out. Then, by chance, I glanced at her companion, and my heart stood still. He was a tall man, over six feet, but he stooped badly, and his walk had been almost the walk of an invalid. He had the appearance of a man who had once been stout and well built, but who was now barely recovered from a long illness. The flesh hung in little bags underneath his bloodshot eyes, his mouth twitched continually, and the hand which rested on the table trembled. He wore a scanty grey moustache, which failed to hide a weak thin mouth, and a very obvious wig concealed his baldness. His clothes had seen plenty of service, and his linen was doubtful. He had evidently ordered some brandy immediately on his entrance, and his eyes met mine just as he was in the act of raising the glass to his lips. I am convinced that he had no idea then who I was, but the earnestness of my gaze seemed to disturb him. He set down his glass with shaking fingers, and directed his companion's attention towards me.

They talked together earnestly for several moments. I fancied that she was reproving him for showing alarm at my notice. Very soon, however, she herself, after giving an order to a waiter, turned slightly round in her chair, and glanced with well affected carelessness at me. I saw her start and look apprehensively at her companion. He took the alarm at once, and I heard his eager question.

"Who is it? Who is it, Maud?"

She made him some reassuring answer, and, rising to her feet, came over to my table. I rose to greet her, and she slipped quietly into the chair opposite to me.

"What are you doing here?" she asked quickly.

"I have just arrived from Brasher," I answered. "I came here by accident to get something to eat. Is that——"

I could not go on, but she finished the sentence for me.

"Yes."

I set my teeth hard and looked steadily down at the tablecloth. I felt rather than saw that her regard was compassionate.

"I am sorry," she murmured. "I would not have brought him here if I had known. You two are better apart. Talk to me as not ready as you can. He has no idea who you are."

Has he been ill? I asked.

"Very. I found him in a hospital. He has been ill, and the rest you can guess."

Even while we were talking I saw him toss off another glass of brandy which the waiter had brought him. And all the time his eyes never left my face.

"I thought," I said, "that he had money."

"It has all gone," she answered, "and—well, things are not very flourishing with him. Our mission over here has been unsuccessful, and they have stopped sending us money from Paris. How queer that I should be telling you this!" she added, with a hard little laugh, "you, of all people in the world. Guy, take my elder. Get up and go. If he guesses who you are he will come and speak to you—and you are better apart."

It was too late. With fascinated eyes I watched him leave his place and come towards us. I was absolutely powerless to move. Mrs Smith Lessing had left the outside chair vacant. He sank into it and leaned across the table towards me.

"It is Guy," he said in a choking voice. "I am sure that it is Guy. She has told you who I am, Eh?"

"Yes, I answered. "I know who you are."

He extended a shaking hand across the table. I could not take it.

"Well, well," he said, nervously, "perhaps you are right. But I came to England to see you. Yes, Guy, that is the truth! I have been a bad father, but I may be able to make amends. I think I know a way.—Waiter, a glass of brandy."

"I am afraid," I said, rising to my feet, "that you must excuse me. If you have anything to say to me, sir, we can meet another time."

He almost dragged me down.

"Stop, stop!" he said, irritably. "You do not seem to understand. I had an important matter of business to discuss with you. I may make your fortune yet, my boy! I have powerful friends abroad, very powerful."

"Well?"

She laid her hand upon his arm, and whispered in his ear. He only shook his head angrily.

More Deadly Than The Plague

The Common Cold is Held Responsible For a Multitude of Human Ills.

Colds kill more people than plagues. When not avoided they can often be banned from the system by keeping the filtering and excretory organs active.

Many write us that nothing helps them to so quickly get rid of a cold as Dr Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills. This is because these pills act directly on the liver, kidneys and bowels, and promptly arouse their activity.

The poisonous matter which collects with every cold is quickly removed from the system before it has time to cause trouble or give rise to other derangements.

If misfortune in the form of a cold should overtake you do not give it a chance to attack the lungs or to settle on the kidneys. Get rid of it quickly by using Dr Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills.

Mr J. H. Gibbard, Mission City, B. C., writes: "We have used Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills for the last year, and think they are just the thing as a family medicine. My wife had been sick for nearly two years with torpid liver and kidney complaint. Sometimes she was so bad she had to go to bed for two or three weeks at a time, and she suffered dreadfully.

Reading of Dr Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, she decided to use them, and has been improving ever since. She is never sick a day now, so we believe the cure is permanent. I have been greatly benefitted myself by this treatment for kidney trouble."

Dr A. W. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book author, are on every box.

Specialist Could Not Remove Stone In The Bladder

GIN PILLS PASSED IT

JOLIETTE, P.Q.

"During August last, I went to Montreal to consult a specialist as I had been suffering terribly with Stone in the Bladder.

He decided to operate but said the stone was too large to remove and too hard to crush. I returned home and was recommended by a friend to try GIN PILLS.

They relieved the pain. I took two boxes and went back to the specialist. He said the stone was smaller but he could not remove it although he tried for two hours and a half. I returned home and continued to take GIN PILLS, and to my great surprise and joy, I passed the stone.

GIN PILLS are the best medicine in the world and because they did me so much good, I will recommend them all the rest of my life". 46

A VERY QUEER BUSINESS

A Short Story.

Mr. Marmaduke Masters, solicitor, sat in his private office (which was not far from Lincoln's Inn Fields) reading the Times, pour passer le temps. His means being ample and his practice small—carried on, indeed, rather as a distraction than for gain—he could afford to take life easily, and after reading his letters and his morning paper generally betook himself to the club and spent the rest of the day playing billiards and whist.

Nevertheless, he was sharp of wit and could put two and two together as shrewdly as most people.

The clock struck twelve. Mr. Masters yawned and lit a cigarette.

"Deuced dull, no good stopping here," he mused. "There is nothing in the papers, the post brought nothing, I have nothing to do, there has not been a client in the office for a week. I'll chuck it, or would it there were anything to chuck, and as there is not, I'll just go."

As Mr. Masters came to this conclusion, his clerk (who had been killing time by playing patience) opened the door and presenting a card said: "A gentleman to see you, sir."

On the card was inscribed:

Mr. Bellwood Craven,
18 Lansdown Crescent,
Chelsea.
Thatched House Club.

"Show Mr. Craven in," he said to the clerk, and to himself, "Who the deuce can it be? A new client?"

The new comer, who carried a bowler hat in one hand and a slim silk umbrella in the other, was clad in a well cut suit of brown tweed; brown also were his hair and skin. As he wore a pair of gold-rimmed spectacles the colour of his eyes was not obvious, but they seemed wide awake and his manner was both neat and polite.

"I must beg pardon for presenting myself without an introduction," he began. "But the fact is, I have had no legal business to transact for years, and being unable to find my old lawyer, Mr. Green, who used to hang out in the next street, I just slipped into the law stationer's shop round the corner and asked if there was any respectable solicitor in the neighborhood. He mentioned your name, saying that you were likely to be in and that I should probably find you disengaged."

"I am greatly obliged to the gentleman. What can I do for you, Mr. Craven?" answered and asked Mr. Masters.

"Something very simple. Merely prove, or put me in the way of proving, a will of which I am one of the executors. Here it is."

Mr Craven took from an inner pocket a long envelope out of which he drew a document, docketed. "The last will and testament of Priscilla Brown, Spinster, 1 Cherry Street, Hampstead."

"Here, too, is the inventory. I think you will find them in order."

"Was this drawn up by a lawyer?" demanded Mr. Masters as he ran his eye over the paper.

"No. Fact is, the late Miss Brown being of a penurious disposition, would not employ a lawyer and I wrote it at her dictation."

"It seems to be quite correct, though there is no ambiguity in the language and the signature is properly attested."

"Good! We may as well put the matter through at once then. I have as much money with me, some ninety pounds in bank notes, as I think will defray the death duties and your charges."

"Ninety pounds will be more than enough, Mr. Craven."

"So much the better. Will proof of St. Lawrence Granulated

It would not matter so much if you only used sugar in one or two articles of food. But when you think how many of the dishes and drinks you serve, owe much of their goodness to sugar, you see how important it is to get the very best sugar.

By actual analysis St. Lawrence Granulated is 100 per cent pure cane sugar, with no impurities whatever. Being cane sugar, it is much whiter and sweeter than the ordinary beet sugar you so often get.

Because it is all sweetness, St. Lawrence Granulated goes farther and is most economical.

A VERY QUEER BUSINESS

the death be necessary? Anyhow, I have brought with me an attested copy of the certificate. Here it is."

"Not at all necessary. The probate people knowing that nobody would pay death duties or any others, for the fun of the thing, always take the death for granted."

Mr. Masters was right. The office made no difficulties and Mr. Craven presently departed with the probate in his pocket and minus eighty odd pounds, paid in satisfaction of the duties and the solicitor's costs.

Had Mr. Masters been a busy man the incident would have made no lasting impression on his mind. But having little else to think about, he thought about it a good deal, and there were two or three points that made him curious and suggested questions. Could there be any other reason than the one assigned for Mr. Craven coming to him? Who was he, and why, even when he made his affidavit and counted out his money, and took his change, had he never once ungloved his left hand?

To two of these questions no answers were easily obtainable. As for the second, however, information might be found in the Post Office Directory. But on referring to it Mr. Masters found only his new client's name and address, so was no wiser than before.

"I cannot understand a man in his position having no solicitor. The reason he gave for coming to me sounded more like an excuse than an explanation," thought Masters. "But a member of the Thatched House Club, who also lives in Lansdown Terrace, Chelsea, must be respectable. Anyhow, it is no business of mine. He asked no favours and paid up like a man. All the same, I should like to know why he kept that glove on all the time."

On the following day Mr. Masters revised the provisional bill of costs which he had presented to Mr. Craven and finding that he had inadvertently overcharged him by nearly two pounds sent him a cheque for the amount, inclosed in an apologetic letter.

As no acknowledgment came he wrote again, inquiring whether the cheque had been received, without however drawing an answer, which Mr. Masters thought strange and in the hope of solving what was beginning to look like a mystery made a journey to Hampstead and inspected 18, Lansdown Crescent.

All the blinds were down and it looked as though the house were unoccupied. Nevertheless Mr. Masters rang the bell; on which there appeared a bleary-eyed old woman, who told him that to the best of her knowledge Mr. Craven was in foreign parts that she had been engaged as caretaker by Mr. Pilcher, his agent, and any letters that came were given to a gentleman from his office who occasionally called for them. Two or three were lying on the hall table, and among them the solicitor recognized his second missive to his evidently client.

Masters, now more mystified than ever, went straightway to the agent, from whom he learnt that Mr. Bellwood Craven had been out of England the greater part of the year. He knew nobody else of the same name, and anybody else who had used it and given 18, Lansdown Crescent as his address must be a dodger. He (the agent) having been instructed to let the house furnished had given several applicants "Orders to view" and Mrs. Smith, the caretaker, had shown them round, but so far without result.

"What becomes of the letters?" inquired Masters.

"They are brought here and opened by me, but as all Mr. Craven's friends address their letters to his bankers nothing comes but circulars and such like," answered Pilcher.

"You have not had a letter within the last few days from me, containing a cheque?"

"Nor from anybody else."

"I sent one, though."

"The deuce, you did! Can that old woman?—"

"I don't think so. Isn't it more likely that one of the people to whom you gave an order to view is the culprit?"

"Suppose we go and see if Mrs. Smith can throw any light on the matter?"

Masters agreed, and the caretaker, evidently an old woman without guile, was straitly questioned. She answered frankly and told among other things, that one gentleman had viewed the house several times, and on his second visit took the letters away saying he would give them to Mr. Pilcher, to whose office he was going, and so save him the trouble of sending for them.

"That accounts for the milk in the coconnut. The beggar has stolen 'em. I'll have him run in," exclaimed Pilcher hotly.

"If you can find and plentily him," added Masters. "What was he like, Mrs. Smith?"

Mrs. Smith shook her head mournfully. Her eyes were dim, her memory defective, and so many people had been to see the house. She could not even tell whether the gentleman was dark or fair, tall or short; was even doubtful whether she should recognize him if he called again.

So Mr. Masters departed not much wiser than he had come, yet feeling that he was on the track of discoveries, and intending on the morrow to journey to Hampstead and make a few inquiries at the domicile of the late Miss Brown.

But before he could carry out this design he had another surprise. As he was deep in the Times next morning the door of his room opened with a bang and a gentleman entered unannounced and evidently in a state of great excitement.

"Pardon my abruptness, Mr. Masters," he said hurriedly. "You know me, of course. Perkins from the Probate Office. We have made a strange discovery. Something very queer has happened in which you are concerned. The other day, last Monday but one, you proved a will purporting to be executed by Miss Priscilla Brown, of 19 Cherry Street, Hampstead. Well, yesterday, another will, purporting to be executed by a Miss Priscilla Brown, of 28 Oak Street, Hampstead, was brought to the office. Now, Brown is not an uncommon name, and as the addresses differed probate was granted without question. But this morning my attention was called to the matter, and as both Priscillas were supposed to have died on the same day, I thought it rather queer, and on referring to the Directory found that though Browns abound in Hampstead, as elsewhere, there lived in Hampstead at the time in question only one Priscilla, who was both a Brown, a spinster and a householder. To make the thing queerer, it appears, as I learnt from one of our clerks who lives at Hampstead, that Cherry Street and Oak Street converge, run into each other, you know, and that the house, which is situated in both streets, was occupied by a Miss Brown."

"So she had practically two addresses."

"Exactly, and either executed two wills, both of which have been proved, or one of which is a forgery."

"Who proved the other will?"

"The executor, a certain Adolphus Terry, whose solicitors are Jones & Robinson, Old Jewry, a highly respectable firm."

"Of course they are. Well, if one of the wills is a fraud I fear it is that proved by myself and Mr. Bellwood Craven," said Masters, and when the probate man had heard his explanation he proposed that they should forthwith proceed to the office of Jones & Robinson. Which they did and interviewed Robinson, for he it was who had proved the second will.

"Yours is certainly the bogus will, Mr. Masters," he said when his visitors had told their tale. "Ours was drawn up by myself, and executed in my presence, only a few days before Miss Brown died, and I am quite sure she executed no other."

"And there has been no attempt by any other party to deal with the property?" queried Masters.

"Certainly not. Miss Brown's niece is in possession of the house, her deeds are in that strong box, her other securities in her banker's strong room."

"But my mysterious client must have had some object. He would not pay eighty odd pounds for nothing and risk being locked up without an object. Has he used the probate to collect any monies owing to the estate, the bank balance, for instance?"

"There is no money owing to the estate; we collect the rents and the bankers the dividends, and, as it happens, Miss Brown in order to complete a purchase had overdrawn her account by several hundred pounds. What the fellow's object may have been I have no idea. Anyhow, we have not suffered and the government has benefited to the tune of three or four score pounds.

"So far good. All the same, I am sure there is fraud at the bottom of it, perjury has been committed, and a bogus will palmed off on the office. And I shall spare no effort to discover and punish the delinquent."

This spoke Perkins, and before the day was over he had put two detectives on the quest. But they failed utterly, and no wonder. None to whom they applied for information could think of anybody who had aught to gain by making a bogus will for Priscilla Brown, and finding a spectacled man with brown hair and a brownish skin, who did not always anglove his left hand, and of whose true name they were ignorant, was as hopeless an enterprise as seeking a needle in a bottle of hay.

They gave it up, and the incident was in the way of being forgotten when still another thing happened. Three months and a few days after the proving of the will, Masters was once more interrupted in his reading of the Times by an unexpected visitor, in the person of Mr. Phineas Forbes, known to the solicitor, by repute only, as an unscrupulous usurer, who conducted his nefarious business in various towns under divers aliases.

"What can the wretch want with me?" he thought.

The money-lender came in cringing, and smiling an ogre-like smile.

"I hope I don't inconvenience you, Mr. Masters he began, "and if I trespass on your time I am quite willing to pay you for it at the usual rate. I have a favor to ask of you. I am greatly interested in a gentleman of the name of Montgomery Brown—"

"Never heard of him," interrupted Masters.

"No! Then you have perhaps heard of somebody called, or calling himself, Bellwood Craven?"

Mr. Masters sat up and invited Mr. Forbes to sit down.

"Bellwood Craven! So that is your business. What do you know about him?" he demanded.

"That is exactly the question I have come to ask you."

"And before I answer it I must know your object. A lawyer does not disclose his client's affairs to gratify the curiosity of the first comer."

"That is quite right, Mr. Masters, and with your kind permission I shall fully explain my business. Some time ago a gentleman of the name of Montgomery Brown, who described himself as a clerk in the War Office, applied to me for a loan of fifty pounds, giving as his reference Bellwood Craven, Esq., Lansdown Crescent, Chelsea, to whom I wrote, and the answer being in every way satisfactory the money was lent. Mr. Craven mentioned incidentally that Mr. Brown was likely to inherit a handsome fortune from his aunt, Miss Priscilla Brown, an old lady living in Hampstead. Not long afterwards I had another call from Mr. Brown who showed me an announcement of his aunt's death in a morning paper and asked me to advance him ninety pounds for the payment of the death duties, which I did, and offered to advance him, on exhibition of the probate, any further reasonable sum, pending the realization of the estate. Before going away he mentioned that Mr. Craven was one of the executors."

Forbes added that on being satisfied that the late Miss Priscilla's will had been proved, he advanced Brown a thousand pounds, for which, and the two previous loans, he took her supposed nephew's acceptance for sixteen hundred pounds. The bill was not met and a letter demanding immediate payment, directed to 19 Cherry Street, Hampstead, which Brown had given as his latest and permanent address, had been returned with the endorsement: "No such person known here."

Then Forbes himself went to Cherry Street, where he saw a lady who told him that the late Miss Brown had no nephew and referred him to Jones & Robinson, who could or would give him no information, but suggested that Mr. Masters might possibly be able to throw some light on the matter. "That is why I am here," added the usurer "and if you will kindly help me to obtain my money I will gladly pay your costs, as between solicitor and client, and a commission of ten per cent. on the amount recovered."

Masters was minded to bundle him out of the room, but curiosity getting the better of repulsion he decided to ask Forbes a few questions.

"You lent Brown first fifty, then ninety, then a thousand pounds, in all eleven hundred and forty, for which you got a promissory note for sixteen hundred. At what date?" inquired the solicitor.

"Three months," answered the moneylender.

"That is nearly a hundred per cent., isn't it?" quoth Mr. Masters, after doing a rapid sum in mental arithmetic.

"No, only a little more than ninety. It seems a good deal, but consider the risk, my dear sir, consider the risk," said Forbes deprecatingly.

"Risk! Any respectable solicitor would have found the money at four or five per cent., always provided—However, that is no business of mine. In what shape did he take the money?"

"The fifty, first loan, and ninety, second loan in bank notes, the thousand, consolidated loan, in an open cheque."

"Do you remember the denominations of the notes constituting the second loan?"

"I have it all down here (referring

I could not sleep at night, and it was impossible for me to walk ten yards without resting myself. I cannot speak too highly of your Heart and Nerve Pills, for they are the greatest pill I have ever used and I can recommend them to all sufferers."

Thousands of people go about their daily work on the verge of death and yet do not know it.

Little attention is paid to the slight weakness of the heart for the simple reason that one thinks it will right itself, but there is where the mistake is made. It is only when a violent shock comes that the weakness of the heart becomes apparent.

On the first sign of any weakness of the heart or nerves, flagging energy or physical breakdown, the use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will soon produce a quick and permanent cure.

WORTH MOUNTAINS OF GOLD

During Change of Life, says Mrs. Chas. Barclay

Graniteville, Vt. — "I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter." — Mrs. Chas. Barclay, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures of female ills as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than 30 years it has been curing female complaints such as inflammation, ulceration, local weaknesses, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life. It costs but little to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and, as Mrs. Barclay says, it is "worth mountains of gold" to suffering women.

Temporary Heat Quickly

Did you ever stop to think of the many ways in which a perfect oil heater is of value? If you want to sleep with your window open in winter, you can get sufficient heat from an oil heater while you undress at night, and then turn it off. Apply a match in the morning, when you get out of bed, and you have heat while you dress.

Those who have to eat an early breakfast before the stove is radiating heat can get immediate warmth from an oil heater, and then turn it off.

The girl who practices on the piano in a cold room in the morning can have warmth from an oil heater while she plays, and then turn it off.

The member of the family who has to walk the floor on a cold winter's night with a restless baby can get temporary heat with an oil heater, and then turn it off. The is invaluable in its capacity of quickly giving heat. Apply a match and it is immediately at work. It will burn for nine hours without refilling. It is safe, smokeless and odorless. It has a damper top and a cool handle. An indicator always shows the amount of oil in the font.

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

Absolutely smokeless and odorless

It has an automatic-locking flame spreader which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back so that the wick can be cleaned in an instant.

The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged, and can be quickly unscrewed for rewicking. Finished in japan or nickel, strong, durable, well-made, built for service, and yet light and ornamental.

to a note book), a fifty, a twenty, and two tens."

"Did you ever see Bellwood Craven?"

"Never. I had to do only with Brown."

"Did he seem a sharp sort of gentleman?"

"A regular duffer; didn't know the difference between a crossed and an open cheque, till I explained it to him."

"Nor between five per cent. and ninety, I suppose. A regular duffer evidently. All the same What was he like, tall?"

"Middling, about five feet nine or ten and slightly built."

"And his complexion?"

"Blonde, light hair, pale face. What has that to do with it?"

"You shall know presently. Had he any hair on his face?"

"Not a particle."

"Did you see his hands?"

"What a question! Of course I did."

"Now, when I think of it, I never saw his left hand; he kept it gloved, which I thought a piece of affectation, and he was always sucking the head of his silver-mounted cane. He was very dandified."

"I suspected as much. I began to suspect it almost as soon as you opened your mouth. Bellwood Craven was Montgomery Brown with his hair dyed and his face stained. The man who came here kept his left hand gloved, just as you have described. The notes with which he paid the death duties and my costs were those he got from you—a fifty, a twenty and two tens. He was his own reference—two single gentlemen rolled into one. The will he proved was forged, and I am very much afraid you have been taken in, Mr. Forbes."

"Impossible! Brown was a nincompoop, as green as they make 'em, a regular duffer, as I said just now."

"He made you think so with an object, and you took a base advantage of his supposed ignorance. You are hoist with your own petard, Mr. Forbes; you will never see a farthing of your eleven or twelve hundred pounds again; and I am glad of it, devilish glad. But as this rascal, whoever he is, has made me instrumental in the perpetration of a fraud, I shall have him run in—if he can be found, which I fear is doubtful."

Forbes was quivering with rage, and swore large both in his native and his adopted tongues.

"Lose my money! Never, never; it would be too shameful," he screamed. "Rather will I spend four or five hundred more pounds in prosecuting Brown and exposing you. Yes, you, for I do believe you put him up—"

"If you don't clear out this minute, you blood-sucking scoundrel, by heaven I'll kick you out, old as I am," exclaimed Masters, rising from his chair.

Forbes, who was no fighter, cleared out instanter.

Later in the day the solicitor saw Perkins of the Probate Office and the detectives were set to work again. They believed, with Masters, that Brown and Craven were one and the same, and found at the War Office the gentleman whose name he had first appropriated. As it was obvious that the forger had some knowledge of legal procedure, as also of the affairs of the late Miss Priscilla Brown, the clerks of Jones & Robinson were closely questioned and a clue obtained which, had it been forthcoming sooner, might have led to results. A few months previously, during a pressure of work, several clerks had been taken on temporarily. One of these was a certain Saul Stevens, who answered to the description of the soi-disant Montgomery Brown as given by Forbes, had the tattooed figure of a mermaid, "very large," on the back of his left hand, for which reason his comrades called him "The sailor man." He was very close as touching his family and antecedents and was supposed to have gone to South Africa. Altogether, as Perkins remarked, it was a very queer business. Nothing more to the purpose did the detectives succeed in discovering which, seeing that the delinquent had a three months' start, and, in all probability, had taken himself to foreign parts was not surprising. But Mr. Masters consoled himself with the reflection that sooner or later, and somehow or other, the rascal would get his deserts, and the fact that Phineas Forbes had been made the victim of his own greed would have atoned for a yet greater disappointment.

Shiloh's Cure

WILL GIVE AWAY MILLION POUNDS

Dr. D. K. Pearsons, Aged 90 Years, May Not Get Rid of It All Before His Death

Mr. Andrew Carnegie is not the only millionaire who has determined to "die poor." His bosom friend, Dr. D. K. Pearsons, of New York, who, after earning a modest livelihood as a medical practitioner, made two million sterling by buying real estate and timber, has made a similar resolution. But he is finding it a difficult matter to get rid of his wealth and even now, after giving away with a lavish hand for over twenty years, he finds that he still has a million pounds to dispose of. And, as he is ninety years of age, it is quite possible that he will fail in his determination to die poor. The aged philanthropist, however, is firmly convinced that he will live to the age of 100, and that he will be able to get rid of his million of money in that time.

Certainly he does not lack suggestions from outside. Last month he received no fewer than 5,000 begging-letters, mostly from worthless people. "There are beggars of all kinds," he says. "Mothers with daughters approaching the marriage age have sent me photographs, asking me to provide them with a marriage portion.

A Cool Request

"One of the funniest was from a German burgomaster. It contained photographs of the German official, his wife, and twelve children, half of whom are daughters who are soon to be married. 'My income is only £750 a year,' he wrote, 'and I find it very difficult to maintain myself and family in the position which my office demands. Will you not bestow a "dot" of £5,000 on each of my daughters, so that they can make suitable matches?'"

Like Mr. Carnegie, Dr. Pearsons has given a great deal of money to education. Forty-seven colleges and institutes of learning are what he calls "his children," for he has no real offspring of his own. They are scattered throughout twenty-four States, and range from a seminary in New England, where he attended school as a boy, across to the Pacific University.

Gives Away "Savingly."

His favorite institution is Berea, in Kentucky, to which he has given over $500,000, and he is at the present moment making arrangements to give another $500,000 to this institute, where, he states, "a country boy or girl can get a better education than at any other college in the States."

Dr. Pearsons has some original ideas about charity.

"I give my money away," he says, "in the same manner that I made it—savingly." The beggar, adventurer, and swindler find little encouragement. Every request for a donation is thoroughly investigated, and if it is found to come from a needy and worthy institute, the purse-strings are opened freely, but otherwise no amount of pleading can get a single penny out of Dr. Pearsons.

He declares "that he has spent more sleepless nights in the twenty years since he has been giving away money than all the rest of his life," but adds that "he has had a bushel of fun." "Coffins were not meant to carry money in" is one of his sayings, two others being, "Always be your own executor" and "When people call me a stingy old Puritan I take my hat off to them and consider that I have been complimented."

CARDINAL VIRTUES

Some of the Things Benjamin Franklin Set Himself to Acquire

Among the cardinal virtues which Benjamin Franklin set himself to acquire were:

Silence.—Speak not but what may benefit others or yourself; avoid trifling conversation.

Order.—Let all your things have their places; let each part of your business have its time.

Resolution.—Resolve to perform what you ought; perform without fail what you resolve.

Frugality.—Make no expense but to do good to others or yourself; that is, waste nothing.

Industry.—Lose no time; be always employed in something useful; cut off all unnecessary actions.

Sincerity.—Use no hurtful deceit; think innocently and justly; and, if you speak, speak accordingly.

Justice.—Wrong none by doing injuries, or omitting the benefits that are your duty.

Moderation.—Avoid extremes; forbear resenting injuries, so much as you think they deserve.

Cleanliness.—Tolerate no uncleanliness in body, clothes, or habitation.

Tranquility.—Be not disturbed at trifles.

AN EXPENSIVE SPORT

The United Kingdom Spends $35,000,000 a Year on Sport

Deerstalking is apparently one of the most expensive forms of sport ever invented. According to a Crofters' Commission Report, there are 109 deer forests in Scotland, with a total area of about 3,000,000 acres. The yield of stags from these forests has been set down to 4,500 each season, and the rental at about $675,000. So, in rent alone, the tenants of deer forests pay $150 for each stag they bring down, and other expenses bring this sum up to nearly half as much again. The totals of the cost of shooting and fishing in the United Kingdom have been set down as about $35,000,000, of which nearly one-third is spent in Scotland.

GENERAL BOOTH, HIS COURTSHIP

Gave the World a Peep Into His Personal History—A Lifelong Attachment

General Booth gave the world a peep into his personal history full of touching incident—on the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of the death of his wife. He said:

"In tender remembrance I recall to mind the day—April 10, 1852—when I met my beloved wife, and commenced a relationship which has lasted from that day to this and which I am reckoning will continue to the closing hours of my earthly history, and be renewed at the gates of the Celestial City. We met that evening at a sort of public festival of some Methodist people with whom we were both associated. Between the tea drinking and the speaking Catherine Mumford was introduced to me by a mutual friend, who spoke of her in terms of the strongest admiration."

Never Dislodged

"No doubt," proceeded the General, "I involuntarily threw my heart's door wide open, not knowing, perhaps, what I was doing, and she, not what she was doing, walked in and took the first place there. From that place she was never dislodged—indeed, from it there was never the least inclination to remove her, and there never will be."

There were difficulties in the way of an engagement. He felt that his position was not equal to the responsibility of keeping a wife and home in comfort.

"These views led me to look upon the unexpected situation in which I found myself as a real calamity, and I fought with all my might against the strange feelings that had taken possession of my breast. What could I do with a wife? In the first place I was without any settled income, and had no immediate prospect of finding one, having just separated myself not only from business, but from the people in whose ministry I had the prospect of a call. . . . However, we looked carefully at each other and at our circumstances, and found that we were both quite prepared to wait any number of years that might be necessary before marriage; and with this understanding we entered into an engagement that lasted for nearly forty years in this world, and will, I fondly believe, last forever in the world to come."

Three Years' Courtship

Three years, as a matter of fact, elapsed before the marriage was celebrated. These years were devoted by the General to making the most of his opportunity for saving the people to whom he ministered. "In all this," he went on, "this beautiful woman strove, in season and out of season, in circumstances pleasing or painful, to keep me faithfully and self-denyingly to my task."

Mrs. Booth did not speak at any of her husband's meetings until some years after her marriage, always giving as her reason her conviction that she was not called to the duty.

"We had had a number of testimonies" said the General, referring to a meeting at Gateshead, "and I was on the point of closing the meeting, when I saw my wife rise from her seat, and, trembling with emotion, walk up the aisle, asking for permission, as she did so, to deliver a message which was on her heart. I thought something had happened to her, and so did the people. Stepping down from the pulpit, I asked, 'What is the matter, my dear?' She replied, 'I want to say a word.' I was so taken by surprise that I could only say, 'My dear wife wishes to speak,' and I then sat down. The influence which rested on the congregation convinced every thoughtful person present that this was the beginning of a marvellous career. When men listened to her all questions of sex were forgotten. That it was a woman who was speaking was seldom thought about. Her personality was lost in the message she delivered.

Her Fatal Illness

"I shall never forget," said the General, in conclusion, "the day that my darling wife crossed the room in which we were sitting and, putting her arms round me, told me how she had received the sentence of death in herself. She had been to consult some eminent surgeons, and they had each informed her that she was smitten with the terrible disease of cancer, which in a couple of years' time, unless some miracle were performed, would certainly carry her away. The agony I suffered through the thirty-two long months which intervened between the announcement of her sad fate and its realization I could not describe. All that time I seemed to see death drawing nearer and nearer, until at length, with her hand pointing to the text, 'My grace is sufficient for thee,' which was hanging before her, she passed away into the presence of her Lord."

ON GABLEHORN IN GREAT STORM

The Remarkable Experience of Alpine Travellers During a Passing Hurricane

From Zermatt, says George D. Abraham, we had climbed to the top of the Unter Gablehorn in perfect weather. Not a cloud was visible until late in the morning, but during the halt on the summit curious mist-wraiths accumulated, and after descending to a point just above the first gap on the ridge, a sudden wind sprang up, and clouds began to spin around the peak somewhat like a whirlwind. Almost simultaneously a shrieking northerly gust brought along a stinging shower of hailstones, followed by vivid flashes of lightning. Clinging to the exposed narrow ridge of the tip of that fragile peak, I remembered contrasting myself with a squirrel on the top of a small tree, an easy target for a small boy's aim. We must certainly have seemed tempting prey for Nature's thunderbolts.

The storm increased impetuously, but fortunately the rocks were easy enough to allow of a hurried descent. Then with curious suddenness the wind dropped, an ominous calm succeeded the tourmente, though the lightning flickered incessantly. The first peculiarity I noticed was a tingling sensation in the tips of my fingers whenever they grasped or released a handhold. One of my companions was hatless, and his hair had assumed such an upright bristly appearance, that we made feeble jokes at his expense. Still, he was not the kind of man whose hair stands on end with fright, and we soon began to realize that we were all more or less alike, and simply charged with electricity, which was silently discharging from our fingerends. Our ice-axes began to give off sparks that would have roused to envy the electrically belated motorist.

Just before we gained the shelter of the gap, a tremendously vivid flash of lightning spluttered on the opposite rocks, and the whole mountain, ourselves included, seemed to shudder with the simultaneous thunder crash. Instinctively we leeked up for falling stones, but nothing fell in our direction. A few seconds later there was an even still brighter flash, and at the same time I felt an electrical shock in my arm which held the ice-axe. My companions suffered likewise, so, as we were now only a few feet above the gap, we dropped our axes precipitately, for they were evidently a source of danger.

When we reached the neighborhood of the axes some rocks afforded partial shelter whilst the storm continued, and dense black clouds rolled across, heavily laden with powdery snow. All the time a strange fizzling noise appeared to flit here and there amongst the rocks, but gradually the space between the lightning and the thunder-crash grew appreciable. Then, after a fierce repetition of hailstones, the disturbance began to subside. In rather more than half an hour we were able to breathe more freely and enjoy the prospect as the mist rolled up, disclosing the sunlit valley 5,000 feet below with the monolithic Matterhorn piercing the surging vapor.

AN ELDERLY SPINSTER

How She Got Even With an Inquisitive Lawyer

At a recent trial in Scotland an elderly spinster was called to the witness-box to be examined.

"What is your age, madam?" inquired the counsel.

"Sir," answered the witness, "I am an unmarrit woman, and dinna think it right to answer that question."

The Judge interposed, and told her she should answer.

"Oh, weel, then," she said, reluctantly, "I am fifty."

"Not more than fifty?" questioned the counsel, sternly.

"Weel, dinna fash yersel'," she replied, "I am sixty."

The inquisitive lawyer still futher asked if she had any hopes of getting married, to which Miss Jane replied: "Weel sir, I winna tell a lie. I hinna lost hope yet"; scornfully adding, "but I widna marry you, for I'm sick and tired o' your palaver already."

CONGRESS IS SUPREME.

Canadian Labor Executive Is Granted Autonomy.

St. Louis, Nov. 22.—After a strenuous debate at yesterday afternoon's session of the American Federation of Labor Convention, the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada was declared supreme in the chartering of trades and labor councils in Canada. Among those debating in behalf of Canada were: P. M. Draper, Ottawa; J. H. Kennedy and Robert Glockling, Toronto, and S. L. Landers, Hamilton.

The Canadians contended that the labor movement in Canada was ultra-international in character, but, as the trades councils were more than city legislative bodies, they should be chartered by the Trades Congress of Canada, rather than the American Federation. One concession was made, that after the trades councils in Canada had affiliated with the Canadian Congress, and then desired further affiliation with the American Federation for moral purposes, there should be no objection.

There are about fifteen Canadian delegates in attendance and two British fraternal delegates, and there is a profusion of Union Jacks among the decorations. During the debate one delegate asked what constituted the Canadian Federation of Labor, to which a reply was made that the body was composed of a few disgruntled labor unions, who was disqualified at the Berlin Convention in 1902, and started an opposition movement.

The convention endorsed a resolution unionizing the "hoboes" of the country, as members of the "Migratory Laborers' Union." It was also voted to admit "the white rats" along with the Actors' Union of America. The dues of the members of the Federation of Labor were raised by resolution and a committee was named to decide on the amount of the increase.

Shortage of Labor.

Fort William, Nov 22 The departure of the foreign element to their native countries for the winter, and resulting shortage of laborers in Fort William, has crippled the staff of the C.P.R. freight sheds, and, unless 300 or 400 men are secured immediately, it is feared a blockade will result. Where 600 men were engaged early in the spring, it is now impossible to muster more than 400.

Employment agents in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg have been asked to supply 500 men.

During the 1910 season of navigation approximately 700,000 tons of bituminous coal was unloaded at the Canadian Pacific docks, about 100,000 tons more than was ever handled by any other single dock on the continent. Several more cargoes of anthracite will be brought here before the close of the season. While the figures have not been compiled, it is known that hard coal receipts for the season are considerably larger than during any former year.

A Unique Paper.

Paris, Nov. 22 The strangest of all newspapers is being published in Paris now. "Excelsior" with a million dollars capital, is an illustrated morning paper, and though it has "appeared" for 58 days, complete in every department, the public has not seen a single copy of it. Until everything is in smooth working order, the daily out put, as composed and edited by a huge staff of men, is tossed into the furnaces.

London, Nov. 22 (CAP Cable.)—Mr. Hamar Greenwood will be the Liberal candidate in Sunderland. There will also be a Labor candidate.

Real Blood Shed.

Paris, Nov. 22 Real blood was shed in two French duels yesterday. Count Raymond de Castellane spitting Count de Lerange's right arm in the first duel, and George Casella punching the same paper through Jean Marnot's right arm in the second affair of honor. None of the participants was seriously wounded, and honor was perfectly satisfied.

Quadruple Murder.

The supply on the market this morning for sale consisted of 1400 cattle, 1600 sheep and lambs, 1000 hogs and 150 calves.

DETECTIVE WIRELESS.

A Chase After a Man With a Big Diamond.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

It was a put up job on the part of Merford, who hated me like poison. We had both worked together in the Kimberley mines, I as foreman, Merford with the pick. It was at this time that I detected him in an effort to carry out diamonds in his throat. I considered it my duty to report him.

Then came my big find. I was walking one day far from any mine with no more thought of diamonds than of doughnuts. One of my kids wasn't well, and I was out after fresh milk for him. I walked without finding what I wanted till I was tired, then sat down on a rock to rest. While sitting there my eye became fixed on a stone beside me about the size of a walnut.

Now, I had been working in diamond mines for ten years. Many's the stone I have thrown out with my pick whose value would run from thousands to tens of thousands. As soon as I looked at this one I knew it for a prize, and yet I couldn't believe my eyes. Was it an outcropping of diamond soil or had some one dropped it there? I didn't stop to answer my own question—in fact, I didn't care. I looked at it carefully to make sure I wasn't deceived and put it in my pocket, certain that if I could get away with it I and my family would live, instead of working people, as swells all the rest of our lives.

And so we would had it not been for that most uncontrollable of all things—a woman's tongue. I confided my secret to my wife, enjoining her not to tell a single person, as her future depended on her secrecy. But when a woman is burning to tell a secret it's like a drunkard thirsting for liquor. Meg was so full of the fine future before us that she must needs tell just her own dear loving sister, who would rather die than injure her. The sister had a bosom friend from whom she could not possibly keep a secret. And so it went from one to another till it got to Jim Merford's wife.

I knew it by the devilish look in his eye the next time I met him. Going straight home, I told Meg to trace the secret as quickly as she could, and within an hour she confirmed my inference. Here was a pretty condition of things. Merford would take one of two courses—he would either accuse me of having stolen my big diamond from the mine in which I worked or he would move heaven and earth to get possession of it himself. With him ready to swear to anything against me I could never hold the stone in spite of the company's efforts to get it.

I had no time to fool away in considering—that is, if Merford decided to accuse me to the company. He hadn't the secret an hour before I had borrowed—I hadn't the money to purchase—the best horse in the place and was galloping away. I knew that if I was wanted it would be supposed I had made for the coast in order to take ship and get out of the country.

It was a month after I had left with my diamond that I made up my mind to take the risk of getting across the Atlantic ocean. I knew I could manage it all right if it were not for the wireless telegraph. But what can a man do when an enemy traces him aboard a ship that requires from one to two weeks to get to her destination and can send word of her coming and order his arrest?

Procuring some ostrich eggs, I borrowed a calico dress and a sunbonnet and went into a town to sell the eggs. Posters stared me in the face that £5,000 was offered by the company for my arrest. That was all I wanted to know, and I didn't stay in the town ten minutes. But I stuck to my woman's disguise. There were risks in appearing either as a man or as a woman. I concluded that so long as I didn't mingle much with people I was safer as a woman.

Well, to do a little skipping in my story, when the ship Unicorn sailed from a port in the Transvaal for Southampton, England, on the passenger list was the name of Barton Dexter and wife. Two days after the vessel sailed a man stepped into the office of the agent of the diamond company and said that he knew where the man they wanted was. After securing papers that would give him the £5,000 offered for my capture in case it came through his information, he told the agent that Barton Dexter was none other than Edward Michler—in other words, myself.

The case was at once put into the hands of a prominent detective agency, with instructions to see that the so called Dexter be arrested on arrival and held till an identifier arrived. The next morning an enterprising reporter sent a message to a New York paper giving the whole story.

And so the attention of the world was concentrated on a man and a woman in midocean on the British ship Unicorn, who had robbed the Kimberley mines of an immense diamond, but whose game was to be spoiled on his arrival at Southampton by a gentleman from Scotland Yard.

A hundred or more American newspapers wired passengers on board the Unicorn to send them news of Michler. I can't give all the items that were sent, but I will give a few from a single paper:

"Michler is a small, delicate man, with a feminine voice; his wife is rather masculine. It has got out on board that they are under suspicion, and they seem very much troubled. At first they were on deck the same as other passengers. Now they keep to their stateroom nearly all day."

"It is now pretty well determined that Michler in addition to being a diamond thief is eloping with another man's wife, or, rather, another man's wife is eloping with Michler, for no one would accuse so gentle a man of leading such a woman."

"While Michler and his wife were sitting on deck last night in a secluded corner suddenly a passenger flashed a match to light a cigar. Mrs. Michler was seen to thrust something under the folds of her dress. The case is being discussed in the smoking room, and some say that the diamond thieves will throw the stone overboard if arrested on the ship. All are interested to know how the officials will manage to take the diamond as well as the thieves."

"The Michlers today had a terrible quarrel. Passengers in staterooms near their's heard Mrs. Michler say to her husband that if he did not settle a large sum of money on her after their arrival in New York she would inform on him to the police, whereupon he asked her if she wished the whole ship to know that they were diamond thieves."

"As we near port Michler and his wife are becoming more and more agitated. Mrs. Michler was yesterday found weeping by the room steward-ess, who took her stateroom for the purpose of making up the berths. It is not known whether the diamond thieves are aware that they are to be arrested on their arrival at Southampton or not. Every passenger on board is in the secret, but since it is a delicate matter to speak of to the parties concerned they are doubtless uninformed."

"The sea was very rough today, and Mrs. Michler, who is inclined to be seasick, kept her room all day. Michler was also affected, but he kept the deck. He was observed to go to the side of the ship for the purpose of relieving himself of his dinner. A passenger who was watching him says that a lump the size of a walnut was cast into the sea. In the smoking room they are now betting—odds 3 to 1—that this lump is the diamond. It indicates that the thieves have given up all hope of saving it and part with it to avoid its incriminating them."

"By Cable Off the Lizards.

"An inspector from Scotland Yard came aboard for the purpose of arresting the Michlers. To avoid being known as a detective he was dressed in the uniform of a British admiral. When the Michlers saw him Michler fainted. His wife ground her teeth and stood firm as a British tar on the deck of a battleship. The dramatic climax of an inspector dressed as an admiral putting his hand on a man's shoulder and saying 'I want you!' was spoiled by Michler's lying like a wet rag on the deck. The supposed admiral was obliged to lift his prisoner up by the collar."

"By Cable From Southampton.

"The Michler affair has collapsed. When taken ashore and examined Mrs. Michler was found to be the husband and Mr. Michler the wife. They proved their identity as a respectable married couple from Capetown. Scotland Yard is furious, it being supposed that the real diamond thief hired them to let it be supposed that they were carrying it to Southampton, while he took another ship for New York. But there is no proof of this."

This last item is true so far as it goes, but it doesn't tell all. I was the person who informed upon Michler and his wife. I found in Michler an old friend who was going home to England, confided in him and offered him a quarter interest in my diamond to fool the detectives. As soon as the world was agog over the diamond thieves on the Unicorn I slipped out of port with the diamond. I was disguised as a superannuated Jew.

The diamond was so shaped that in being cut it required to be made into two gems. It is not, therefore, one of the large gems of the world. But the smaller stone made Michler rich and the larger one made me richer. After it was sold I sent for my family and am now an American capitalist.

Try This Home-Made Cough Remedy

Costs Little, But Does the Work Quickly, or Money Refunded.

Mix two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle; then add the Sugar Syrup. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

You will find that this simple remedy takes hold of a cough more quickly than anything else you ever used. Usually ends a deep-seated cough inside of 24 hours. Splendid, too, for whooping cough, chest pains, bronchitis and other throat troubles. It stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough.

This recipe makes more and better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly and tastes pleasant.

Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and all the natural pine elements which are so healing to the membranes. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

This plan of making cough syrup with Pinex and Sugar Syrup (or strained honey) has proven so popular throughout the United States and Canada, that it is often imitated. But the old, successful formula has never been equalled.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

Cabbie Scared.

A certain nobleman, who may be called Lord X——, bears the reputation of being somewhat stingy in money matters. On a wet afternoon he hired a cab to take him to Victoria Station. Arrived at the station he handed the cabman a shilling, and, of course, was met by the inevitable demand for an extra sixpence.

"Certainly not," said the other, promptly. "You came the longest way as an excuse to extort money."

The cabman saw he had no chance, and said, sneeringly:—

"'Cos St. James' Park is closed, that's why."

"Nonsense," said the other, sternly.

"It's right, though," was the grave reply. "They say Lord X—— dropped a shilling coming across the park last evening, and the gates are closed until they find it."

Struck by Teacher.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 22.—Rose Bell, daughter of an Italian contractor, is seriously ill. She was struck on the head by a public school teacher, Miss Mulroy, two weeks ago, she says. She is suffering with pleuro-pneumonia. Chairman Phemister of the public school board yesterday said he would investigate the case. Miss Mulroy, when questioned concerning the child's story, said she might have done it.

A Useful Lesson.

Had any late reveller on his way home Monday night spied that one legged man, clad in a hospital night shirt, attempting to pull up a tree this weird scene being the result of a delirious patient's escape from a local hospital, the sight might have been more effective than a dozen temperance lectures.—Ottawa Journal.

CZAR PAYS A TRIBUTE

Special Train Leaves Astapova For Late Count's Estate, Where Remains Will Be Buried — Greek Church Finds a Loophole to Avoid Interferring With Religious Ceremonies at the Funeral.

St Petersburg, Nov. 22.—The Russian Emperor has written the following note on the margin of the report, which M. Stolypin sent to his Majesty of Tolstoi's death

"I heartily deplore the death of the great writer who embodied the golden age of his talent in his creations of types of the fatherland, constituting one of the most glorious periods of Russian life. May he find in God a merciful judge."

The Douma adjourned yesterday's session out of respect for Count Leo Tolstoi, though the decision to do so was reached only after a wrangle, the members of the extreme right contending that to honor the memory of the Russian reformer and novelist would be to challenge the Greek Catholic church. It was asserted that the Douma was a state institution to which the count was especially opposed.

It was reported here yesterday that the Holy Synod of the Greek Catholic Church will adopt the view that Tolstoi's visits to the monasteries of Schamardin-sky and Optin indicated his wish to return to the church and will raise no objection over religious ceremonies at his funeral.

The Homeward Journey.

Astapova, Nov. 22.—A special train, bearing the body of Count Leo Tolstoi to Yasnaya Poliana, the family estate in the Government of Tula, left here at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The countess and the other members of the family and intimates who were here when the author died Thursday, accompanied the body.

A halt for the night was made at the railway junction at Gorbatchevo, and the train will arrive at Daseika, the station near Yasnaya Poliana, early to-day. The distance from the depot to the Tolstoi home is not great and the casket, according to Russian custom, probably will be borne to the house on the shoulders of the mourners.

Since early morning the countess had sat in the station-master's hut, where her husband died, with her head bowed upon the casket, and weeping. She appeared not to notice the peasants admitted to the death chamber, and quitted her position only when M. Gunzburg, the sculptor, came to take a death mask.

Leonido Pasternak, the portrait painter, sketched the scene. This was as simple as Tolstoi could have wished. The body reposed in a plain oak coffin, at the foot of which a few wreaths of fir, emblematic of immortality, had been placed, and the platform of the railway station was covered with fir boughs, spread by the peasants of the neighborhood.

Defaced the Tablets.

Philadelphia, Nov. 22.—Dr. Herman V. Hilprecht, the famous scientist, who resigned two days ago as head of the Department of Assyriology and Semitic philology and Archaeology at the University of Pennsylvania, in his letter of resignation openly charges that while he was away on his vacation last summer, his office was broken into, his desk ransacked, and many valuable papers stolen.

The hardest blow of all, he declares, was when he discovered that the ancient tablets he dug from the mounds at Babylon and deposited in the University museum had been mutilated, defaced or stolen. The tablets bore the inscription upon which he had based his most famous theories.

Emperor Counselled Temperance.

Flensburg, Prussia, Nov. 22.—In opening the new naval academy at Muerwick yesterday Emperor William read an order in council laying stress upon the qualifications necessary for naval officers, and later, speaking extemporaneously, made a plea for temperance on the part of the cadets.

The times, the Emperor said, required iron-hearted men. Character was the first essential and character was founded upon strong moral and religious convictions. He cautioned the cadets against excessive drinking, which, he said, undermined the nerves, and the strenuous naval service of to-day required strong nerves.

Let Americans Dictate.

Calgary, Nov. 22.—At the Technical Education Commission Saturday Inspector of Schools Boyce of Red Deer in reply to Dr. Bryce, said that some trouble had arisen in respect of the singing of British patriotic songs in rural districts such as "Rule Britannia." Americans did not mind so much Canadian national airs, but feeling arose when purely British songs were sung.

"Is the singing of these songs insisted upon?" asked Hon. Mr. Armstrong.

Mr. Boyce replied that where objections were taken the songs objected to were mostly dropped.

A Martial Lass.

New York, Nov. 22.—"I can't be a soldier, so I'm going to be a nurse on the battlefield." Gladys Amy Graham, 12 years old, daughter of James Graham, a retired officer of the Second Royal Munster Fusiliers, and for 22 years a British soldier, made this statement when she arrived yesterday on the Anchor liner California, en route to Toronto, Canada. There she is to enter a convent to complete her education.

The girl traveled alone. She said her uncle, John M. Cruse of Toronto, would take her to that city.

Boisterous Buffalo.

Winnipeg, Nov. 22.—Word has been received here that the Montana authorities have entirely changed their attitude towards the proposed hunt by Canadians of the old bulls of the Pablo buffalo herd. These animals are striking terror throughout the Flat Bush Reserve, near Missoula, Montana, running amuck, and even tearing down buildings. Montana will be glad to have them exterminated.

ORCHESTRA SHOOTING DISCLOSES VENDETTA

Examiner Special.

PALERMO, NOV. 19.—During the performance of a melodrama at one of the Palermo theatres, a very real tragedy was enacted in the orchestra. It was noticed in the course of the play that two of the musicians of the orchestra, named Propeta and Olivieri, were quarrelling, and in the entr-acte they came to blows. The two men were, however, separated, and took their seats for the third act.

Suddenly, as a soft passage was being played by the band, the audience was horrified to see Propeta rush towards Olivieri with a revolver. He fired four times, and Olivieri fell, gravely wounded. Another musician, who happened to be in the line of fire, also collapsed.

Hearing the shots, the theatre firemen took them as signals of an outbreak of fire and drenched actors, orchestra and audience alike to the skin with the hose. The wounded men were taken to the hospital and Propeta to gaol.

It seems that the quarrel was about nothing more serious than the price of a telegram which the two men, who were close friends, were dispatching jointly. The incident will inevitably prove the origin of a vendetta between the two families.

BABY'S SKIN TROUBLES.
"My baby was while nursing broke out with running, watery sores all over his head and behind his ears," writes Mrs. Oscar Vancott, St. Antoine, Sask. "Many salves were prescribed to no effect. LONDON TIMES CONTAINS DR. CRIPPEN'S CONFESSION EMPLOYED SLOW POISON

"The Thunderer" Has the Story of the Crime as Written by the Condemned Man-----Bitter Quarreling Between Prisoner and His Wife---Miss Le Neve Knew Nothing of the Murder.

Examiner Special.

LONDON, ENG., NOV. 22.—Crippen had confessed. The London Times, which never makes a misstatement of fact, came out to-night in its evening edition with the story of the crime, as written by the condemned Doctor himself. It is understood the story has been written for days, and has been held till all chance of intervention had passed. Just what the Big Thunderer paid for it is not known but the proceeds go to Miss Leneve, and their unborn child. It was stipulated first that a portion of the money should go to the father of Crippen, who has since died. The confession states that there were quarrels caused first by the attentions of the male admirers of Mrs. Crippen, and the intimacy between Crippen and Miss Leneve. Following the party last January the quarrels were more bitter than ever and Crippen began administering slow poison. When it was effective he buried the body. In conclusion, Crippen says Miss Leneve knew nothing of the murder.

PROPERTY ASSESSMENT IS UNJUSTLY HIGH AND LOW

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—It looks as if the Board of Trade is expected to discuss all subjects before being acted on by the Council. I respectfully suggest that the assessment be taken up at the meeting on Tuesday night. It is the opinion of a large number of ratepayers that the assessment roll contains a large number of defects which might be classified as over assessment and others under which a considerable number of properties are rated at from 80 to 100 per cent of values when others are rated at 50 per cent of real values. It is also believed that those who are well to do are generally rated lower according to value, than the poorer classes. If the conditions noted are without foundation in fact it would be advisable to have them disproved by the assessment roll and if true to devise means whereby they shall not be repeated in future.

As two suggested remedies let the Council publish the assessment roll once in three years and if not too expensive, each and every year, and in addition ask for the amendment of the assessment act, so that there may be an opportunity to have the unduly low assessments come before the court of revision.

Yours truly,
RATEPAYER.

MORE DONATIONS RECEIVED FOR THE CHIMES FUND

The clerks in the city post office who had not individually subscribed of their own idea, clubbed their subscriptions and sent in $3.00. All present and past employees of the post office have now taken a part in this enterprise. Mrs. Rose, of Berkhamstead, England, sent $5, and a similar sum has been received from Mr. Royal Clayton, of Peoria, Ill., where Mr. Clayton, who is an old Peterborough boy, holds a very important position. Mrs. Rose also spent several years in Peterborough as visitor for Dr. Barnardo's Home, when she was Miss Clack, and was a devoted member of St. John's congregation. A school boy aged eleven, also sent in one dollar which he had received as a birthday present.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION

In view of the consideration by the Board of Trade to-night of the subject of MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION, the Examiner reproduces on its Editorial page—8—a series of short articles on the subject, printed last May.

The Board of Trade takes timely action, in bringing the subject of MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION into prominence. Other cities, St. Catharines and Guelph, are considering its adoption. They evidently feel as Peterborough experiences, if it does not consider, that as far as desirable results, as far as obtainable results, are concerned, the present systemless system of municipal administration is a failure.

Peterborough has a number of large and important needs, which require energetic initiative, and resolution, and well directed action to realize. A definite, coherent, and systematic policy is needed. Can we hope for that under a system which frequently changes the personnel of our City Council and absolutely prevents the adoption of a definite policy that promises results—with any hope of continuity of application?

The attention of every reader of the Examiner is directed to these articles, on page 8 of this issue. They do not claim to be exhaustive of the subject of MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION, but they contain enough to set thinking ratepayers thinking.

WARDEN'S ADDRESS

Warden Moher's Remarks at the Opening of the Last Session of the County Council of 1910.

A GOOD YEAR

The last session of the County Council for the year 1910, was opened this afternoon at two o'clock in the County Council chamber, with all the councillors present, and Warden Moher presiding. Upon opening the Warden read the following address:

To the Members of the County Council of 1910—

Gentlemen,—Permit me at this, the closing session of the year, to again thank you for the honour you have conferred upon me by placing me in the chair, and for the courteous treatment I have received at the hands of each of you.

In referring to the work of the year, I am proud to state that everything has been satisfactorily carried out and I trust the matters that are yet to be dealt with will be disposed of in the same way.

This has been a year that has had its share of permanent work, from the fact that the long talked of change in the heating system of the Court House and other buildings has been brought about, and I must congratulate the chairman of the County Property committee on the satisfactory manner in which everything has been done and especially do I refer to the painstaking efforts of him and his committee.

Other work has been carefully looked after, and the same pains has been exercised by the Roads and Bridges committee and the special Bridge Construction committee.

Noggy's Creek Bridge is now completed well within the limit of estimation and the chairman has the proud satisfaction of accomplishing the building of the abutments by day work at a much smaller figure than the lowest tender. The bridge is built of steel with concrete floor, the same being a credit to the Dickson Bridge Company, who built it.

I merely refer to these matters briefly as you all will hear everything in detail from the different councillors, as their reports come in, as well as a complete report from the chairman of the County Property committee.

Provision made by the chairman of the Finance committee will, as far as we can see at present, be ample to carry out all expenditures for the year 1910.

There will no doubt come before you the matter of having the boiler attended to, and the providing for the $3,000 for the government in lieu of the Buckhorn bridge is yet to be done, other emergencies over which we had no control cropped up, which necessitated the expenditure of our debenture proceeds. I refer to the paying for the construction of Little Bob bridge, this county being liable for one quarter; also the placing of a septic tank at the House of Refuge, the cess pool having failed to do its work, and the rebuilding of the Lily Lake bridge besides improvements to the County buildings.

The greater part of the accounts are in, or at least enough of them, so that before the close of the session the Chairman of the Finance committee will be able to present you with a statement re the permanent work.

Again thanking you, to whom all credit is due, I trust the same harmony and progress will be characterized in completing the business of the year.

Respectfully yours,
FRANK MOHER.

LADY WELL KNOWN HERE GOES TO LIVE IN CHINA

Fearless and Romantic Bride Will Sail With Her Missionary Husband Through the Grand Canal Into the Heart of China---Marriage of Miss Alice Buell to Rev. Dubois S. Morris.

The following interesting story has reference to a lady who is well known among Peterborough citizens who summer at Stony Lake. The lady referred to is Miss Alice Ray Buell, daughter of Mrs. George C. Buell, of Rochester, N.Y., and who was recently married to Rev. Dubois S. Morris. Miss Buell, with her mother, has spent many summers at Stony Lake. Their cottage, which is known as the "Shanty," is situated just at the entrance to Stony Lake, and almost directly opposite that of Mr. John Crane, of the Dominion Bank. Miss Buell spent the greater part of the past summer at the Lakes, and Rev. Mr. Morris was also a visitor at the Buell summer home, and it was while there, it is said, that the engagement took place, which resulted in their marriage on October the tenth. Mr. Morris is a missionary at Nankin, China, and he will be assisted in his work by Mrs. Morris.

—And we'll sail away
For a year and a day
On our Chinese honeymoon.

So sang Mr. and Mrs. Pineapple in "The Chinese Honeymoon," and well might the Rev. Dubois S. Morris and his young bride sing the same refrain. Theirs is not a musical comedy romance, but a romance in real life, with a honeymoon in China as its climax. Before the end of the month the young New York clergyman will sail for the Flowery Kingdom with his bride, whom he married on October 10, after a brief courtship. They will spend the aftermath of their courtship on the Grand Canal in Central China on their way to their future home at Hwai Yuen.

The Rev. Mr. Morris has spent many years in China, and it will be no novelty for him, but it will be an entirely new experience for the bride, who was Miss Alice Ray Buell, daughter of Mrs. George Candee Buell, of No. 9 Livingstone Park, Rochester. Mrs. Morris has never been in China and of course knows nothing of the language or customs. But she married her husband knowing that his life's work lay in the heart of the Celestial Empire, and she is willing to become a Chinese woman, to all outward appearances at least, in order to remain by his side.

To reach the mission at Hwai Yuen, where the Rev. Mr. Morris is in charge of the evangelical work, they will charter a barge at Nankin, three days by steamer from Shanghai. It will be a large barge with a cabin and a huge lateen sail. This will be their temporary home — their honeymoon home—for at least three weeks, and possibly five. If they are favored by northerly winds they will sail down the Grand Canal and across the Huangtse Lake to the Hwai River. There they will engage half a dozen boatmen to pole them up the river to the ancient walled city of Hwai Yuen, which is to be their future home. It will be a delightful journey — from the Chinese point of view. The Grand Canal flows through the most dispersed and beautiful part of the Celestial Empire. Its banks are lined with ever-blooming gardens, pomegranate groves, pagodas, and the estates of rich mandarins. Every few miles are walled cities, and there the young couple will stop from time to time for fco dand other refreshment. The sail across the Huangtse Lake will be even more delightful. The whole vista of Chinese life will be revealed to the young American bride before she arrives at Hwai Yuen and joins the ten Americans at the mission station—the only other Europeans in the Province of An-Hui.

To be sure they could arrive at their destination much more quickly if they were to make the trip on mule back from Nankin, but the Rev. Mr. Morris' leave of absence does not expire until the first of the year, and it is his idea to introduce his bride to China and its strange ways in the most agreeable manner possible on this extended honeymoon on the Grand Canal. Hard work, and lots of it, will come soon enough when they reach the mission station.

It is unlikely that any unpleasant incidents will mar their journey.

Almost immediately after the wedding Mr. Morris and his bride went to New York to visit his parents at No. 20 Fifth Avenue. Before the ceremony they had arranged to take their honeymoon trip on the Grand Canal in China, so they are spending their time now visiting their friends and saying good-byes, for it will be seven years before they return to America. Mrs. Morris is not under the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, and so the seven year rule does not apply to her as yet, but as soon as she masters the Chinese language she intends to take up the work by her husband's side. In all probability she will teach in the girls' school at Hwai Yuen, which is one of the most important branches of the missionary work there.

"When we first established the mission station at Hwai Yuen, shortly after the Boxer troubles, we encountered serious opposition," said the bridegroom the other day after he had returned from a walk with his bride to his father's home at 20 Fifth Avenue. "We were accused of cutting out the eyes of Chinese babies and holding their bodies under the floors of our buildings. Half the population suspected us of poisoning the wells, and the feeling against us was so strong that they set fire to the station and burned us out.

"Fortunately, conditions have changed"—a sigh of relief escaped from Mrs. Morris—"and as the Viceroy of the province is proforeign in his sympathies we have nothing to fear. The work is progressing slowly but surely. The Chinese never do anything in a hurry, but when they become Christians they become good Christians. Naturally we dress like the Chinese—until three years ago I wore a queue—and we live as much like them as possible. I love the work there, and I'm looking forward to returning to Hwai Yuen, which, by the way, means the 'longed for when far away.' I don't know how my wife will like it, however. It takes a brave girl to isolate herself from the entire world in the heart of China and to dress and live practically as a native. But she knew what she was getting into when—"

"Of course I did," interrupted the bride, flushing prettily under the writer's gaze. "I think it's a wife's duty to go wherever her husband goes. She isn't a wife if she doesn't believe that. And, besides, we're going to have the most wonderful honeymoon in a crazy old boat on the Grand Canal and a lot of rivers with crazy names that I can't pronounce. It's going to be a regular Chinese honeymoon—just like the play."

In spite of the fact that he has been in China since 1899 the Rev. Mr. Morris is well known in New York. After his graduation from the Union Theological Seminary he became identified with Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst's church and took up missionary work on the east side. He acted as an assistant to the Rev. John Hopkins Denison, who was then pastor of the Church of the Sea and Land at Market and Henry Streets. The settlement work of the Sea and Land Church had a broad field in those days, and Mr. Morris and Mr. Denison spent most of their time visiting the sick in the tenements and preaching the Gospel in the open air.

In 1899 he went to China as a representative of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. During the Boxer uprising it was thought that he had perished, but he escaped unharmed, and a year ago last summer he returned to New York for a well earned vacation. Last January he attended the Student Volunteer convention at Rochester, N.Y. There he met Miss Alice Ray Buell, one of the most beautiful girls in the Flour City, and an heiress sought after by many eligible young men in her set. She was interested in mission work, although she had never taken any active part in it. It was a case of love at first sight, and before the convention was over Miss Buell was engaged to the tall, handsome missionary from New York and Hwai Yuen.

The wedding took place on October 10.

Arthur Morrin and Geo. Morrin drowned while crossing Lake Temiscaming.

COBALT, NOV. 22.—Four more fatalities were added to this list this morning, among prospectors and miners searching for silver and gold. Labelle was to have been married shortly. He was working in a shaft when a rock fell on him. Dan Corney and others sustained wounds more or less serious in the explosion which killed Annandale. The Morrins were brothers and well known in Haileybury, where the funeral to-morrow will be largely attended.

SEVERAL MEDALS

Mr. Thomas Checkley, who recently came to this city from Sheffield, England, has seen considerable active service in the English army. He has medals he received for service given in the South African war, and at Khartoum and Atbara, with Kitchener. He was for twelve years connected with the Royal Warwickshire Regiment. He also showed the Examiner two chocolate boxes, which had been sent the soldiers in South Africa, by the late Queen Victoria, and these bear Her Into Majesty's monogram.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION.

No. 1

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION is attracting renewed and practical attention as one of the means of improving civic government, preventing waste of civic funds, involving inadequate value for expenditure of the taxes paid by hte people. St. Charines is considering the subject seriously, and the Guelph Board of Trade will petition the Legislature to make such amendments to the Municipal Act as will make it possible for any municipality of not less than 10,000 population to adopt CIVIC GOVERNMENT by COMMISSION on the lines at present in force i nthe state of Iowa. Reference is here made to Des Moines, which has a splendidly satisfactory experience with GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION. And tonight our Board of Trade will "tackle" the matter. From time to time the Examiner, with a desire to better the civic government of Peterborough, has given considerable attention to this matter. In May, of this year, it printed a series of articles on the subject of MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT by COMMISSION. Though all that could be said on the subject was not said, enough was given to set forth the main features of what all thoughtful students of civic government consider an effective means to secure the competent and effective administration of civic affairs, which it is generally admitted is not obtained under the present system, that does not provide any system, but haphazard inefficiency. In view of the revived importance of the subject, The Examiner will repeat its series of articles on CiViC GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION, including the introductory sentences relating the circumstances that suggested dealing with the subject. As follows:

On three or four occasions—on Nov. 27th, of last year, and on Jan. 3rd, and Feb. 12th, of this year, the Examiner has referred to the question of MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION as a beneficent alternative to the admitted failure to secure efficient municipal administration, under present conditions. The outrageous condition established at the corner of Charlotte and Park streets, where, at a point where the traffic of four streets converges, and where three street car lines come together, the driveway is narrowed between curbs from 12 to 15 feet less than the street at a few rods east and west of the stricture. Whatever reasons have influenced the action of the street authorities, in taking this extraordinary course, respect for public interests is not one of these reasons. It is hardly possible that a Commission independent, or practically independent, could so far forget its duty to the public as has been done by the City Council in this case. This seems to be an opportune time to attempt to show the advantages of municipal government by commission, by which we could avoid the waste of ineffective and systemless expenditure of public money on, especially our streets, which has obtained for so many years. The Examiner, therefore, proposes to present in a series of articles some reasons why government by commission should be substituted for the expensive failure which has resulted from the present way of doing and not doing things.

No one, we assume, looks for perfect government, by commission, or otherwise, for no matter what system is adopted mistakes will be made. But what is wanted is that form of government that offers the best opportunities and prospects for success, and then the choice of the most capable men available to carry it out.

Under the present system it seems that there are serious defects, one being the lack of clear-cut policy, of concentrated effort, on matters of importance, and another the absence of continuity of policy. In Peterborough an effort was made to overcome the latter difficulty by having aldermen elected for two years. This should have been an improvement, but it was hardly a remedy. There would, under that system, still be possibilities of frequent changes in the membership of the Council, and consequent changes on the committees, perhaps not as often as in the past, but still too frequent to allow of a continuous settled policy in the administration of the departments. A chairman of an important committee usually holds this position for a year or two, and is only fairly in possession of the knowledge and experience necessary to develop and carry out a policy when he is compelled to, or at least, does, retire from the position, to be replaced by a man with different ideas in regard to the work, which it is desired to put into practice, causing confusion, trouble and waste. A continuous policy, even if not the best that can be desired, would be better than beginning on a new line with new ideas every year or two. The information gathered, by reading, observation, and consultation, is lost to the city when a chairman retires and another steps in without experience and without the same knowledge of what has taken place, or is contemplated, to gather up the strings and try to guide the department.

The number of members in the Council militates against a concentrated effort in one direction. A discussion of a matter of business by thirteen men, more or less—generally less—informed upon the matter, leads to considerable talk, consumption of time and delay. A committee of perhaps three to five members, may give attention to a matter and acquire information and form conclusions, but when it comes before the Council members who were not on the committee—or members of the committee unable to attend its sessions—have to be, and no doubt should be, informed of all the details, and there may appear several important opinions as to the course to be pursued. Explanations and discussions use up time, adjournments take place, with perhaps more meetings, discussions and adjournments, without anything being accomplished. Is this putting the case too strongly? We are not referring to Peterborough solely, but is not this what takes place in municipal councils generally? It is not owing to any particular men in these councils, but to the system by which a number of men are expected to attend gratuitiously to the business of the community, and by assembling in a body at intervals to develop a policy in regard to the matters needing attention and to guide the administration of its affairs. It would be better to have a definite policy formed and carried out, even if mistakes were made, than to have nothing done and no progress made.

At times, too, the course of business is checked or paralyzed by jealousies in the Council. Where there are a number of members, and, as is often the case, the positions are looked upon more as positions of honour than as opportunities for usefulness, such jealousies are sure to arise, and the feeling against some member, or among sets of members in the Council, may have a serious effect upon the course of business.

In yesterday's article it was pointed out that there were serious defects in our present system of municipal government — that there was a lack of continuous policy and of concentrated effort, resulting in confusion, trouble, delays and waste. Would GOVERNMENT by COMMISSION be an improvement?

By the term, GOVERNMENT by COMMISSION, one understands a governing body composed of fewer men and elected for longer terms than one year—say, such as our Board of Water Commissioners, composed of three members and elected for three years, one retiring each year.

The first requisite and no doubt the first result, under such a system as this would be the selection of men of ability and integrity at the beginning, and could we not assume that when the electors were placing the affairs of the city in the hands of three or five men only that they would see that these three or five men were the best that could be secured? Then it could be safely assumed as we have had experience with the Water Commissioners, that giving acceptable service, some or all of the commissioners would be re-elected, so that one of the desired results would be attained; for, with the members elected for three years and the probability of re-election, a well defined policy would be capable of continuous application. There being only three or five members, each one would feel the responsibility of the position and would give such attention to the business that he would acquire the necessary information, and the information obtained, would become a storehouse, continually added to and continually drawn upon for the benefit of the city. There would not be the frequent changes, but the situation once grasped and the needs learned, a settled policy could be adopted and carried out year after year, without the costly interruptions, the experimenting and changes resulting from the present system. There should be better results for the money expended and a better service—better results in every way.

There would be an advantage in concentrating the efforts of the governing body on any problem that arose. Instead of thirteen men referring an important matter to a few of their number, and then discussing, criticising, referring back or overthrowing their conclusions, there would be three or five men, feeling their responsibility, gathering the necessary information together as to the best course to pursue, and settling upon a policy and carrying it out. In place of delays, inconsequent discussions and a zig-zag course, there should be prompt and definite action. Instead of a minature parliament dealing with municipal matters there would be a small business board looking after the city's affairs. It would seem proper, too, that the presiding officer should be chosen by the Commissioners, and not elected to a separate position by the ratepayers, so that the members who would be elected on a level, each with the same responsibility.

With such a commission there might be less interest taken in municipal government by those who give attention to it only when something spectacular takes place — there would be an absence of "hot times" and crowded benches to witness a "scene," but there should be more interest felt in the real business when carried out in a business way. To have the business carried on in a business way is what is required. There should be no effort to "hit" the other fellow, no sharp talk to make an impression among the electors, no eloquence or other exhibitions of oratory, but quiet, serious business conversation and consultation. The business of a municipality is chiefly administrative and parliamentary methods are out of place and are harmful, for what is needed is the methods of a good business board. Yet the present system tends to the speech-making, parliamentary style, with the accompaniments of debate and striving to show well and to defeat opponents or curry favour with voters, instead of the business board methods of consideration solely with a view to the best course to be pursued, in the public interests, and with the public interests the sole guiding principle.

With government by commissioners each one would feel a greater responsibility than under the present system with the larger numbers in the Council. A member may feel that if he is not present there will be enough on hand to deal with the business, and consequently not give full attention when attention is needed most; or he may absent himself from a committee meeting with the consolation that the matter will have to be dealt with in Council anyway, and then come to Council with inadequate information and consideration, and crude ideas of what is the most advisable course to take. When the fewer number would have to deal with the business each would feel that he must give it close attention and would realize his responsibility for every step taken.

In two previous articles we hazarded some suggestions in regard to municipal government by commission, tending to show that such a form of government would be an improvement on the present one, and something further may, perhaps, profitably be said.

Government by commission should result in a better organization and control of the civic departments. The different departments interlace or overlap to a certain extent. The Waterworks Department necessarily does work on the street, in the laying of mains, and so does the Street Department in other ways. These two could with advantage be under one management, both as to the civic control and as to the officials, so that the laying of the mains, construction of sewers and sidewalks and the grading of streets would all be under the direction of one body and one officer, and in cooperation and not in antagonism, as now frequently is the case. The controlling body and directing officer would always know upon which streets mains were to be laid, sewers constructed, sidewalks built and roads made, and there would be no interference by one work with the other. If the laying of gas mains could be brought under the same direction it would be still better. The fire department and the waterworks department, too, have interests in common, for the water mains and hydrants are needed for fire protection, and the street and water departments are both interested in street watering, one doing the work and the other supplying the standpipes and water. With these interlacing interests, and the necessity for one department to be familiar with the work and projects of the other, so as to avoid waste in the work on the streets, it would seem to be wise to have them under one control, especially in regard to the adoption of a system that would be consistently carried out, and lead to an avoidance of unnecessary work. Would a commission, with a grain of judgment or sense of responsibility, grade a street one year and destroy it the next, by providing for a sewer being built and allowing a careless filling of the trench that destroys the street and compels expenditure of public money to restore a good street, which a sewer contractor has been paid for destroying, though he signed a contract under forfeit, to leave the street as he found it?

The organization of the departments would then be under the control of the one small responsible body, and not of different bodies or committees, and if they could be consolidated with advantage or made to work into each other to effect a saving it could be done more readily.

Could three or five men of business ability and experience be secured who would give sufficient time to direct the whole of the municipal machinery? That is a most important question. A small city might not, it may be argued, afford to pay such men for their whole time, and such time as they would give would have to be taken from their own business. But there is this to be considered. Would not a commission, by the application of system, and foresight, and by doing things right give us good value for our money which under the present system is wasted? We should get better results for less money and could afford to pay a commission a reasonable indemnity if not a salary. We do not think the commissioners would have to devote as much time to the civic business as at first glance might appear necessary. Under the present system there are many meetings, and this is partly caused by the number of committees and the much discussion. The smaller number should secure prompter action, and a settled policy in regard to the different classes of work should result in less need for much time being given to them. A commission might easily do the work, while a Council was squabbling over it.

This system of government by Commission should be suitable for ordinary towns and cities, and perhaps for the larger cities as well. If, however, the people do feel like giving up the privilege of electing a larger number of members of the Council, or it this system should not be thought suitable for larger cities, some of the benefits might be secured by retaining the City Council for legislative purposes and having commissioners for the administrative work. Under this system the Council would pass the general laws, so far as they come under the province of the Council, for the government of the community and would levy the taxes and make the appropriations. The Commission would take the money as levied and as appropriated and carry out the work. For instance, the Council would appropriate a certain sum for the streets. The Commissioners would inquire into the work required and its cost and do the work so far as the appropriations allowed. All the departments should be under the control of the commission, so as to secure the most advantageous organization and the best system of cooperation in carrying out the work. With this form of government it might be possible, if thought desirable to have the commissioners appointed by the Council—for say three year terms one retiring each year—instead of being elected. If the Commissioners were elected by the same constituency as the members of the Council there would be a danger of a conflict of opinion and recrimination, each claiming to have authority direct from the people to act. This does not, however, seem to be the best system, at any rate for towns and smaller cities, but it should lead to improvements in the work of administration and better results for the expenditures made.

Space is given to further consideration of one of the most important subjects of discussion that can engage the attention of thoughtful ratepayers, the subject of municipal government by commission.

One of the many defects of the present system is that, in practice there is too small a part of the year given to the work of the Council. The Council meets for organization in January, when the committees are appointed. It takes some time for the new members of the committees to get familiar with the work, or to become seized of the information required upon subjects introduced, and then the holiday season is soon upon them, when it is difficult to get quorums and to have business attended to. After the holiday season is over, the end of the year soon draws near and there is a disinclination to deal with matters of importance and an inclination to let them lie over until the next year—for "next year's Council" to deal with and then the process has to be begun over again. In this way business is neguected or shelved.

The expression "next year's Council," which is sometimes heard, exposes a weakness in the system; for the fact that the Council is in theory a continuing body looking after the business of a corporation that does not cease to exist, is at times not sufficiently recognized, owing to the frequent elections and changes in the memebrship of the Council.

Municipal government by commission is not an untried system. In Galveston, Texas, it was introduced to try to bring order out of the chaos and it did it. There the Commissioners were appointed by the Governor of the State, a method of selection that has not and should not be followed. In a number of cities in the United States, and in different states, the system has been adopted, the commissioners being elected by the ratepayers of the municipality. The idea is gaining ground, and every year more cities are adopting this method of government, some of them adding provisions for the "recall" of the commissioners by the electors and some providing for an initiative by, and referendum to the electors.

SCHEDULE DRAWN UP FOR PROFESSIONAL LEAGUE DATES FOR PETERBOROUGH

Buck Irving announces that he has secured Pete Charlton for the Belleville professional team. Pete is old enough to have a team of O.H.A. juniors, but should be fast enough for Belleville or the company he has to play in.

The Port Hope Guide says that representatives from Trenton, Picton Belleville and Port Hope met there Friday night to form a new professional hockey league, and just as the business was concluded Peterborough wired that they intended to enter a team, and asked to be included in the schedule. The schedule, however, had been arranged, but at the next meeting it will be amended, and the Peterborough club given dates.

The representatives present were S. R. Burrows, J. P. Connolly, Belleville; George Nolan, Trenton; N. E. Irving, and G. E. Boulter, Picton; Capt. Colwill and G. A. Brown, Port Hope.

It was decided to play the games in three periods of twenty minutes each. To assure the patrons that all games will be started on time a resolution was passed to impose a fine of $50 on any team delaying the commencement of a game more than five minutes. The schedule is as follows:

Jan. 6—Trenton at Picton.
Jan. 10—Picton at Port Hope.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION.

In Canadian cities another method has been tried. the Board of Control. Toronto set the example in this, and it has been followed by Ottawa, Winnipeg, Hamilton and now Montreal. In these cities the aldermen are elected by wards and the controllers by a general vote of the lectors of the city. The Ontario law provides that the Board of Control consisting of the mayor and the four controllers, who are also members of the Council, shall prepare the estimates of expenditures and no expenditure shall be made that is not provided for; it shall prepare specifications for and award all contracts; inspect and report to the Council upon all municipal work being carried on; nominate all officers required to be appointed by the Council; dismiss or suspend any head of department and report the same to the Council; direct by whom and in what manner subordinate officers and employees shall be appointed and employed; submit bylaws to the Council, and amalgamate departments and sub departments, and such other duties as may be imposed upon it by the Council. The duties assigned to the Board shall be discharged exclusively by it, except the submission of by-laws to the Council, and the amalgamation of departments, but the Council can, in respect of most of these matters, set aside or vary the action of he Board by a vote of two-thirds of the members present and voting, or it may by a majority vote refer back to the Board any matter for reconsideration. The members of the Board of Control are paid. This system is restricted to cities of over 45,000 population.

This Board of Control system provides a cabinet to prepare measures for submission to the Council and to carry on the work of administration to some extent, but the committees of Council are still retained and the old Council can, by a two-thirds vote reverse the action of the Board or by a majority refer back, and, if the two bodies cannot agree, by the power to refer back, matters may be brought to a standstill.

The Board of Control system looks cumbersome, and would seem to leave opportunities for conflicts with the Council and delays in the carrying on of the business, yet it has been in operation in Toronto for a number of years, has been adopted by other cities, and Montreal has now, no doubt after investigating the other systems, adopted that of the Board of Control.

No government, municipal or other, will ever be perfect, for imperfect men have to carry out whatever system is adopted. In Peterborough, whatever complaints have been made, we have been free from any "hoodling" by our civic rulers and have had members of the Council who wished to give the people good government, but here or elsewhere satisfaction cannot, from the very nature of things, be given under the present system. Our larger Canadian cities evidently believe that the Board of Control is an improvement, and no doubt it is, but it seems evident that GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION would be better for a city of our size, any rate no harm, and much good, may be done by discussion, and if these articles have furnished any information or made any suggestion that will lead to thought upon the subject, part of what the Examiner earnestly desires, the promotion of the best interests of Peterborough will have been accomplished.

CONCLUSIONS

During the past week the Examiner, in a series of articles has endeavoured to impress upon the public the advantages of municipal government by some form of commission, as a profitable substitution for the present expensive and unsatisfactory condition of administering certain city services. The considerations submitted in the articles mentioned are left with the public with the hope that what they suggest will form the subject of discussion. Not all that can be said upon the subject has been advanced, but the chief points have been presented. Here it may be remarked that the apathy of the ratepayers is one cause of the ineffective civic government that has prevailed under existing conditions for years past.

The ratepayers see that the rate and amount of taxation are rapidly advancing and, are injuring the progress of the city. A day or two ago a prominent citizen who has done much to build up the city and has erected many houses and generally played the part of a public spirited citizen, was asked as to the wisdom of building a house for rental upon upon a plot of property that was available. He advised against it, asserting that in taxes and rates of various kinds, the city tax collector would practically own a third of the property and collect that proportion of the revenue value. Whether or not this was an exaggeration, it is evident that taxation is becoming onerous. The ratepayers grumble at this condition, but do nothing in the way of successful and organized protest to prevent it. They are told by aldermen who return from delegation trips to other cities that Peterborough has better streets than most of these other cities. That may be so; but Peterborough has natural soil conditions, that make many of her streets better without expenditure upon them, than the streets or less favoured places would be with considerable improvement. Every ratepayer knows that Peterborough streets do not show the results of the geat amounts spent upon them or sunk in them, and if by proper administration and system the money were spent to advantage, we should have permanent streets, which, by a minimum of expenditure and saving of taxation, could be kept in first-class condition. The plan of placing improper material upon the streets at great expense for haulage, one year, and scraping off and carting away a large portion next year, in the form of mud, is something that would not eat holes in the city treasury under a proper system of street construction and administration.

It is claimed that Municipal Government by Commission would give better results for less expenditure, systematically expended, in respect to all [illegible] rutcural corporation work.

Considering the immense importance of the inte[illegible]al civic administration, and considering the promise, judged by the experience of other places, of securing vastly improved results from Government by Commission, the ratepayers are requested to give their attention to the matter. For the purpose of discussion, the Examiner opens its pages to letters or articles on the subject. Correspondence expressing favourable or adverse opinion from every class of ratepayers will be welcomed and, especially if briefly expressed, will be given insertion. This applies to the reproudtcion as well as to the first publication of the series of articles.

REOPENING OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The re-opening of the Centreville Presbyterian church took place last night. The church has undergone some renovations and its re-opening was marked by a very enjoyable event. The church was built of solid brick, in 1863, and is large and commodious, and the present renovations will render it unsurpassed both for beauty and accommodation by any other country church in its section. The old seating has been taken out and new seats installed. The old wooden pillars have also been removed and replaced by fine iron ones. The old pulpit is substituted by a new one. A new platform also has been built, with steps leading up to it, on either side, and a provision for a choir made; a new window has been put in at the west end of the church. The walls have been handsomely decorated and the platform and the aisles carpeted with a carpet of appropriate design. These are only a few of the many improvements.

A choice programme was given. Rev. Mr. Mackenzie presided. The music for the evening was provided by Millbrook talent. Miss Richardson sang two solos, which were greatly appreciated. Mr. Morrison and Mr. Geo. Duncan of Millbrook, also took part in the programme. A splendid supper was also provided, all the events of the evening being under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of Centreville church.

In addition to the renovation above mentioned a number of splendid improvements were made. A new, first-class heating system was installed, also an acetylene gas plant, for lighting purposes.

Addresses were given by Rev. Dr. Marsh of Springville, Rev. Mr. White of Fraserville, and Rev. Mr. Thompson, who gave a reading entitled "We Want a Man". This was a very much appreciated item and caused laughter in the audience. The programme was a choice one and the event was marked by a very large attendance. Among the more prominent guests, were the following: Reeve Kell of Millbrook; Mr. Simms, Bank of Toronto; R. E. Wood, Esq., Peterborough, and Robert Fair, Esq., Peterborough.

A number of other prominent men were expected, but were unable to be present.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

DURING the Christmas season all the girls stood all day long—from eight to twelve in the morning and from one to eight at night the last days, from one at noon to ten and eleven at night, as the season progressed, and on the last dreadful nights, from noon to the following midnight.

One of the girls had been through the last terrible day under pressure of sharp suffering. She could not afford to go home, and the floor walker would not let her sit down. "At midnight on Christmas eve," as the still crowd of girls walked wanly out of the great store into the brilliant New York street, someone said, "How are you, Kitty?"

"She made no reply for a minute. Then she said wretchedly, 'Oh, I hope I'll be dead before next Christmas.'"

These are two quotations from a recent magazine article on the working girl that probably concern you intimately.

Maybe you don't see just how, so I'll tell you.

We are responsible for any evil to which we give countenance by accepting the benefits and conveniences that come from it.

If you are one of the majority of people who do their Christmas shopping in the last week or two before Christmas you are one of the people responsible for the conditions which these quotations show.

All of which is just a roundabout but I trust more graphic way of giving the old advice, "Do your Christmas shopping as early as you can."

The Yuletide is supposed to be the season of the year when everybody is happiest.

Surely you can't be happy on Christmas Day if you think you have helped to make the season the most dreaded and the most unendurable time of the year of some of your sisters.

I recently heard of a sane and simple way in which one of my friends has long solved the problem of Christmas shopping.

She begins in October and every time she goes into the shopping district for any purpose whatsoever, buys at least one Christmas gift.

She makes that a Medes-and-Persians rule for herself and behold the results.

In the first place, her shopping is all done before the rush season so she can hold herself not guilty of adding a last straw to the shop girl's back and heart and health breaking straw.

Moreover many benefits accrue to herself.

She doesn't get tired out by trying to do up all her Christmas shopping in one or two days.

She often gets the benefit of better prices than prevail just before Christmas.

She has time for more care and thought in selecting her gifts.

She gets better attention from the clerks.

The strain on her purse being spread out over two or three months seems much less acute.

Doesn't all that sound reasonable and logical and attractive?

I don't mean just as a theory but to the point of inspiring imitation.

Of course it's too late for you to begin in October this year.

But it isn't too late for you to begin now.

And it isn't too late for you to begin in October in 1911.

Ruth Cameron

From Soldier Of Fortune To Air King
A Spectacular Career

John B Moisant, the daring Chicagoan, who won the admiration of the world by his flight around the Statue of Liberty, has had a spectacular career.

Moisant plans to try for the Hearst $50,000 Coast to Coast aero prize. To accomplish this flight he regards as the greatest of aviation feats.

Before his airship feats Moisant was known as a revolutionist, and feared by every Central American President. He was a fighting hacendado, business genius, banker, coffee grower and diplomat, adviser to chiefs of state, a crack rifle and revolver shot, and a "diablo" at the head of a group of revolutionists making a raid on an "unfriendly republic."

Moisant's most daring feat in all his Central American career was when in command of 300 men he undertook to free his brothers, George and Alfred, who had been imprisoned on the charge of fomenting a revolution. Of course, Moisant had it in mind to overthrow the President and set up a new Government. He had appealed to the American State Department without avail.

George and Alfred had been arrested on the Moisants' coffee plantation, the Santa Emilia.

Zelaya, then President of Nicaragua, cheerfully hated by Secretary Knox and other officials of the American State Department, took a friendly interest in the young American's plan, so he furnished him the Nicaraguan gunboat Monotombo and 100 picked men from the Nicaraguan army.

At the head of 300 men Moisant steamed for Salvadorean waters. What he accomplished in five hours toward overturning the Government of a well-established State will probably stand for ever as a record, even in Central America, where lightning changes in administrative affairs are taken as a matter of course.

Moisant boldly steamed into the bay of Acajutla, a well garrisoned, fortified Salvadorean port, at noon on June 12, 1907. Before the commander of the fortress knew what the visiting craft was about Moisant had captured it.

Twelve Salvadorean soldiers were killed, but Moisant lost not a man.

Moisant set out to capture San Salvador, the capital, sixty miles from Acajutla. It was there that his brothers were in jail. There the the flower of the Salvadorean army, 3,000 strong, was garrisoned.

Moisant finally had to retreat because of the cowardice of his men. His invasion of the country did not inspire a friendlier feeling on the part of Figueroa for his imprisoned brothers, George and Alfred, and these two men narrowly escaped death. American Minister Merry called a halt on the actions of the Government when he wrote his note declaring that men had been tortured and hanged to force testimony against the two brothers. Meanwhile John Moisant was using other tactics. Influence was brought to bear at Washington from Nicaragua and Honduras, and when Merry's report was received at Washington Roosevelt sent the cruiser Olympia to Salvador to stop the threatened execution.

The men were jailed in April, 1907. They were released in July of this year and the embargo, at the instance of Washington, was lifted from the Santa Emilia plantation.

Moisant's exploits in Central America sufficiently explain his character to account for the daring Paris-to-London trip. In six months he has mastered the fine points of this new game.

In England aviators marvelled at the straightness of his course in the Paris-to-London flight. "Our compasses go back on us," they said.

"What about my English compass?" replied Moisant. "Floating in glycerine, air-tight, placed just between my feet, it took me straight to Amiens, to Calais, and London."

INFANTS' DELIGHT SOAP

The principals in the event were Mr J. J. Collins, of Hastings, and Miss Mary, eldest daughter of Mr and Mrs. B. Mulhearn, of Campbellford. The bride, who was given away by her father, looked exceedingly well, being attired in an Irish lace robe over duchesse satin, wearing a veil of embroidered tulle with orange blossom, and carrying a shower bouquet of bridal roses. Miss Lily Collins, sister of the groom, was bridesmaid, and wore a gown of white silk chiffon over taffeta silk trimmed with seed pearls and a black picture hat carrying a bouquet of pink carnations. Mr. Matthew Mulhearn, of North Bay, the bride's brother, assisted the groom. After the ceremony, the bridal party and guests, numbering eighty, repaired to Mr Mulhearn's residence, where a few hours of social intercourse were happily spent and where a sumptuous wedding dinner was served.

The gifts were numerous and exceptionally valuable, including many pieces of cut glass, silverware, and china, and among them being a substantial cheque from the bride's father, a beautiful buffet sideboard from her brother Matthew, and a dinner set of Limoges china from her brother Bernard.

On the evening previous to the wedding, the bride, who was one of Campbellford's most popular young ladies, was presented with a beautiful clock and an address by the Sodality of St. Mary's.

Among the guests from a distance were Mr and Mrs. O'Neil, Cobourg; Mr and Mrs. Collins, Mr and Mrs. Howard, and Mrs. Lambert, Hastings; Mr. and Mrs. Lohane, Petertoro; Mr. and T. Walsh, Westwood; Miss May Macaulay, Michigan; Mr. Johnson Brighton; and Misses Kewin, of Castleton. The young couple drove to Havelock, accompanied by a number of their young friends, where they took the train, amid showers of rice and confetti, for Lansing, Michigan, and other eastern states, where they will spend their honeymoon, and on their return will reside in Hastings, where the groom is engaged in the grain business with his father. Mr and Mrs Collins' many friends in Peterboro wish them many happy years together.

GAS BORING STILL CONTINUES

To gas boring operations, which have been carried on for the past month, on the premises of the Lundy Shovel and Tool Co., and under the auspices of that company, are still being continued. The contractors are James Peat and Sons, of Lethbridge, Alta. Mr. Peat stated to an Examiner reporter last evening that they had reached a depth of three hundred feet. "We will drill until we reach steam," was the reply of Mr. Peat, when asked how long they would continue to bore. He also stated that the land in the vicinity of Peterborough was a likely place to find gas, judging from the results found by other drillers, but, he said, that nothing could be learned from surface indications of any kind, that would help drillers. They must take chances and will not know results until they have either struck gas or struck granite. Of course, he said, there are signs, after a certain distance has been reached, which will give the operator an idea, but he declined to say whether these signs had appeared in the present instance.

The operators worked night and day at the engine, but during the past two weeks boring operations have been carried on only in the daytime. Mr. Peat stated that he had discovered a fine well near Brantford two or three days ago, and that it was flowing about fifteen barrels of oil beside the gas, every day. If Mr. Peat is as successful in the present instance, it will mean a great deal to this city.

Coronation Robes in Velvet Worry Makers

The Plans for the Procession Still are Unsettled but Details are Being Discussed---Gold Tinsel will Prevail.

SOME OF THE DETAILS

LONDON, NOV. 19.—The Earl Marshal's notice to the Peers and Peeresses who will attend the Coronation has had an almost magical effect on the firms who will supply the robes to be worn.

The Coronation robe of a peeress is a wonderfully thought-out plan, where originality has to cope with regulation orders, and where all the most expensive materials must play their part to make up an impossible picture.

"Everything, naturally, will be of the very best," said the manager of a Bond Street warehouse, "and we are now hard at work matching the velvet for the robes, the patterns of which have been sent us by the Lord Chamberlain.

"This beautiful royal crimson velvet is being made for us at Lyons, and the color is a peculiarly difficult one.

"The trains of the Coronation robes next year will have what is termed a mousseline touch. They will be of velvet naturally, but not of the hard, board-like material formerly used, a softer effect will, therefore, be gained.

HEAVY GOLD EMBROIDERIES

"The embroideries used on the panels of the robes will be richer and more beautiful than has been seen at any previous Coronation, and I have already designed many panels where gorgeous embroidery will play a prominent part.

"Gold tinsel and heavy gold embroideries will be used largely.

"We have been preparing the manner and the ermine for months past.

"Extra work-rooms will be used by an enlarged staff later on, and we shall engage specialists in embroideries, and in every department connected with the Coronation robes.

"The cost of a Coronation robe, including everything, is from $500 to $750."

There is a rumor that a fancy ball will be held during Coronation year by the wish of the Queen, says The Gentlewoman.

A fancy ball in Coronation year should be a brilliant affair, and one wonders if the Queen, who is always keen on furthering British interests, will ordain that the costumes worn should be of Scottish, Irish, Welsh, English, and Indian native manufacture.

Queen Victoria early in her reign gave a ball on these lines, but did not make the wearing of British stuffs compulsory, and only expressed a hope that her guests would find it possible to comply with her wishes on the subject.

PLANS FOR PROCESSION

No decisions have yet been reached as to the route of the Coronation procession and of the royal progress through London a day or two later. There is no doubt, however, that the route to Westminster Abbey will be the same as at the coronation of King Edward.

The staff of the Office of Works is already engaged in planning the various details of structures to be erected and the schemes for the fitting of the exterior and interior of the Abbey. The Earl Marshal's office at No. 3 Cleveland Row will have chiefly to do with the Abbey arrangements. All questions of precedence are, however, dealt with by the Earl Marshal as head of the College of Arms, Queen Victoria Street. So far it is not known if many questions of precedence are likely to arise.

The military arrangements are in the hands of Colonel Codrington and the home district staff. There will be no separate department, as on the last occasion.

BELLEVILLE T.A.S. WINS INTERESTING DEBATE FROM THE LOCAL ABSTAINERS

Enjoyable Event in St. Alphonsus' Lyceum Last Night — Advantageous for Canada to Become an Independent Nation.

SUCH WAS THE DECISION

St. Alphonsus' Lyceum was last evening the scene of a most enjoyable event, a warmly contested debate, the subject of which was, "Resolved, that the time has come when Canada should become an independent nation," being the feature of the evening. Messrs. Chas. Doland and Wm. Whibbs, representing St. Michael's T.A.S., Belleville, took the negative side of the question, while Messrs. J. Dorris and J. W. Fower ably argued the affirmative.

Besides this very interesting debate, a very excellent and high class programme was given. The items were as follows:

Piano Duet—Misses Doherty and McCabe.
Song (selected)—Mr. T. Daly.
Selection—Mandolin club.
Song—"Just a-wearying for you" by Mr. Joe Mercier.
Piano Duet—Misses B. Giroux and K. O'Brien.

The mandolin club consisted of the following: Violins, Misses K. McCarthy and E. Dorris; Mandolins, Messrs. Cranfield and McNicholl. The accompanists of the evening were, Misses A. Dorris, M. Doherty, M. McCabe.

The concert was greatly appreciated and every number was warmly received and applauded. It was decided that encores would not be called owing to the late hour of beginning the programme. Every item on the programme was of a very high order and much praise is due those who took part, for the excellent manner in which they carried out their respective parts.

At the close of this very interesting entertainment, Mr. J. T. O'Connell introduced the debaters, who took their respective places and prepared for a vigorous battle as it were. Mr. Doris was called on to set forth his ideas on the subject and did so in a very able and fluent manner. He said that the resolution, which had just been quoted was one which he thought ought to be acted upon by Canadians at the present time and one which he and his partner would endeavour to show if acted upon, would bring to Canada advantages and possibilities, never before dreamed of. "It is most natural," said the speaker, "that Canada shall not indefinitely remain in her present political position. The story of Canada's fight for freedom, is full of interesting and dramatic incidents." Besides these he brought out many other valuable points too numerous to state.

Mr. Doland, speaking on the negative, then stated his opinion of the case. He thanked the people for the warm hospitality they had shown to him and his partner and stated that he hoped the time would come in the near future, when the Belleville people would get a chance to reciprocate. He also brought out many useful points. He asked the question, "Are we not prospering under the present conditions?" "Our exports are increasing," said the speaker, "they have increased 25 per in the past year, and $1,000,000 over the corresponding month for last year. The immigrant coming to Canada bring lots of money. Look at Canada as a railway country. Why she is becoming a complete net work of railways. The railways are increasing in the west, and likewise the possibilities of the west are increasing." "If we become independent," continued the speaker, "we must look out for our own protection. Then look at the cost. Look at the sea coast line we have to protect, the extensive boundary line with an army of brave men to oppose attack along it. Look at the cost of building a navy and keeping its expenses paid. We can use our money now as we please, as we see fit to, for the protection of our defences, but if we were independent, we would have to spend our money on defences, and it would seem right to spend money on defences, which we are now using for the development of manufactories and the bettering of our country in general. When we think that Great Britain's colonies exist in all parts of the world, we should feel proud to be a part of that great family. Then last, but not least, the postage is to be considered. It costs only two cents send a letter to the British colonies and five cents to send one to France or other foreign countries. One letter does not count, but all the nations letters make up a great deal, which is now a revenue under the present prevailing circumstances."

Mr. J. W. Fower, then got up to reply to the negative speaker. He stated that he agreed with all the speaker had said, but, there was something else to consider. The negative speaker seemed to talk of Canada and consider her as being in the same predicament as she was in the eighteenth century, while the people and conditions now are widely different from them. "As a colony, we claim to be governed by a nation," said the speaker, "and yet we claim to be a self-governing colony, but we are contradicting ourselves. England gave Alaska away in a rather slack manner, and other such things and we were powerless to act or do what we saw fit for ourselves. How about our immigration? We can't command moneyed men to come. We have no sculptors, nor famous poets, nor painters, but we have produced them. We turned them out as it were. But they left Canada because they would not own or be a part of dependent people. They joined our southern neighbours and were then Americans, but just the same they were Canadian born and bred and ashamed to own her in her dependent state. If we could recognize the British sovereign as our crowned head and not the colonial office, we could be an independent people and yet have laws equal to those of England."

Mr. Whibbs was the second speaker for the negative. He said: "We are forced to admit that England dealt rather easily with the United States in giving away Alaska and also with regard to the boundary line, but she did not consider the importance of these things, or the importance they would have had in future plans. Imperial Federation is not likely to come to a head in a day, but it is at the next imperial conference. It will then be discussed. Look at England's vast territory of 11,000,000 square miles, and 250,000,000 people. As a matter of form we are part of the great nation. But as a matter of fact, we are an independent nation. Look at the expense of handing and providing for a navy, which we would inevitably have for the defence. We would be forced into the defence question and I submit we are not in a position to do this."

Mr. Dorris replied in a very able manner and put up a good argument. He took his seat to await the decision of the judge, Mr. D. O'Connell.

Mr. O'Connell in a very pleasing and acceptable manner discussed both sides of the case and the points which had been brought up. He congratulated the young men on both sides on the able manner in which they conducted their respective arguments and on the way they played their parts in the debate. He also expressed thanks to them, on behalf of the members of the society for the useful knowledge they had imparted and for the interesting evening they had been the means of providing. He spoke of the difficult and mixed up subject they had to deal with and congratulated them upon the absolute success which they had made of the evening. He then gave his decision in favour of the negative, but added that no discredit would be thrown on the affirmative side of the question.

Rev. Fr. McColl and other speakers then expressed thanks to the young men and tessed congratulations. He also congratulated the Belleville young men personally, who replied in an appropriate manner. Then what proved to be a most interesting, enjoyable and profitable evening came to a close by singing the national anthem.

GAS, INDIGESTION AND HEARTBURN GO

Makes Your Out-of-order Stomach Feel Fine in Five Minutes

The question of how long you are going to continue a sufferer from indigestion, Dyspepsia or out-of-order Stomach is merely a matter of how soon you begin taking some Diapepsin.

If your Stomach is lacking in digestive power, why not help the stomach to do its work, not with drastic drugs, but a reenforcement of digestive agents, such as are naturally at work in the stomach.

People with weak stomachs should take a little Diapepsin occasionally, and there will be no more indigestion, no feeling like a lump of lead in the stomach, or heartburn, Sour risings, Gas on Stomach or Belching of undigested food, Headaches, Dizziness or Sick Stomach, and, besides, what you eat will not ferment and poison your breath with nauseous odors. All these symptoms resulting from a sour, out-of-order stomach and Dyspepsia are generally relieved in five minutes after taking a little Diapepsin.

Go to your druggist and get a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin now, and you will always go to the table with a hearty appetite, and what you eat will taste good, because your stomach and intestines will be clean and fresh, and you will know there are not going to be any more bad nights and miserable days for you. They freshen you and make you feel like life is worth living.

WILL BE SERENADED BY LOCAL BAND

Mr. Gliddon wishes every member of the 57th Regimental Band to be at the band hall to-night at 7.15 o'clock in uniform for the purpose of meeting John Philip Sousa and his band when they arrive on a special G. T. R. train about 7.35. The band will play one of Sousa's marches as the train pulls in. Afterwards the boxes at the Grand Opera House will be occupied by the members of the 57th Band during to-night's grand concert.

The 57th band will turn out thirty-five in number, and on the arrival of Sousa will play "El Capitan," one of Sousa's own marches. At the Grand Opera House the local band will occupy the boxes.

FLYERS NOT TO SAIL NOW OVER FACTORIES

BERLIN, NOV. 19.—The Prussian Ministry of the Interior has issued a set of rules and regulations governing aerial navigation.

Aerial flights undertaken by persons who have not obtained an official certificate of efficiency as aerial pilots can only be permitted above such land as is unpopulated and where there is practically no traffic. The local authorities are entrusted with the decision of such points in particular cases, and they are also empowered to restrict aerial flights to certain hours of the day.

Aerial pilots in possession of their certificate must, as a rule, fly outside of inhabited places. At the same time, the Ministry of the Interior declares that there ought not to be a general prohibition of flights above inhabited places, which may be permissible in certain cases. Even then, the airmen are to be warned of the danger which they cause to those beneath.

Flights above military fortifications, and within a radius of six miles of such fortifications, are only allowed if the military authorities have given written permission. Any flight undertaken within six miles of military fortifications without such permission will be regarded as espionage, and the airmen will be punished accordingly.

No passengers may be taken up on a flying machine by pilots who do not possess certificates of efficiency. Pilots may only navigate that machine which they were sailing when their certificate was granted to them.

GREATEST KICKER OF MANY YEARS

PHILADELPHIA, PA., NOV. 19.—Once in every five or six years a wonderful drop kicker is discovered, and almost invariably he is found among the colleges. This season, however, a real marvel, and one who should be developed into the greatest man in this department the game has ever known, has been unearthed in scholastic ranks, and right in this city. He is Harold Lentz, of the Central Manual eleven.

Last fall Billy Browell, the great drop-kicker who graduated from Swarthmore, was engaged to coach Central Manual's team. In the squad was Harold Lentz, who was about five feet three inches tall, and appeared to be as broad as he was high. He announced that he would like to play quarterback. Crowell at first thought he was too small and allowed him to sit on the side lines for a time.

One afternoon Crowell was coaching his best kickers in drop kicking, but none of the boys appeared to them. He noticed that Lentz had a kicking style that was all his own, and a peculiar one, too.

Crowell took Lentz in hand and tried to teach him a different style of kicking. This he found a difficult task, as the little fellow could not get power behind the ball kicking as Crowell would have him. Crowell finally decided to allow him to go his own way.

Crowell also made the discovery that his kicker was a little wonder in every department. Crowell did not have Lentz in hand two weeks before all traces of awkwardness were gone, and he proved a graceful and dashing quarterback.

Lentz performed many sensational kicking feats last season, the best of which was a drop kick in the final minute of play against Swarthmore Prep from the 48-yard line, which gave Red and Black a victory.

Critics are of the opinion that Lentz is the best schoolboy kicker ever developed in this country, while a majority claim that he has any college man in the land beaten.

Lentz has kicked a field goal or more in every game his team has engaged in this season.

Lentz has twice kicked field goals from the forty-five line this season in games and has sent many over at the forty-yard mark. The longest kick Lentz has ever made was negotiated in practice. He booted the ball, without the aid of the wind, over the bar from the sixty-yard line once in four attempts. This was a marvellous feat, and some unbelievers were not to be convinced until Lentz repeated the performance. This he did in the first attempt.

Many big colleges are casting eyes in the direction of this little wonder, and hope to land his matriculation, but it is likely that Penn will secure the prize.

ENGLAND SADLY LACKING IN HEAVYWEIGHT FIGHTERS

CHICAGO, NOV. 19.—If Great Britain would attain a top position in heavy-weight pugilism the nation will have to stop recruiting the ranks of its fighters from the Army and the Navy.

Then, too, there must be greater monetary inducements for the young athletes to take up ring work.

This, at least, is the opinion of Herbert Standing, veteran English actor and one of the framers of the famous boxing rules which bear the name of the Marquis of Queensberry.

Mr. Standing is in the city at the present time, and is a most entertaining talker on the fighting game. Sixty-four years of activity have in no sense dimmed his appreciation of good boxing or his interest in the glove game.

"America has been my home for a number of years now, and my sons and daughters are here and will remain here," the veteran said the other evening. "But I am deeply interested in all that takes place on the other side, and most naturally. Having boxed nearly all my life I feel some pride in the men from England, but must say that the big fellows they are producing over there are a sorry lot.

"The little ones are corkers, every one of them. Take Moran and Driscoll and Welsh and Stanley and several others and you have a stock of which to be mighty proud.

"But the big ones—tush, tush! A third rater from this side could clear up the lot of them without half trying.

"That's easily accounted for. Most of their big men are recruited from the military service, and while most of them are fine examples of physical force and perfection they have not the right idea of boxing or the true conception of the training methods to bring speed and skill. In a word, their military training is utterly against their ever amounting to anything in the boxing line. Too much precision, too much straight up and down discipline, don't gibe at all—militarism and fighting with the gloves. They have Petty Officer This and Private That and Sergeant Somebody Else and corporals and Lombardiers and the like till one cannot rest. Yet the whole caboodle isn't worth a good American lightweight."

CRIPPEN HANGED TO-DAY

Last Act in the Famous Murder Case Was Ended This Morning When the American Doctor Paid Penalty on the Scaffold.

MADE NO STATEMENT

Special Wire to the Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., NOV. 23.—With all the mediæval formalities of English executions, Hawley Crippen, the United States doctor, was hanged this morning at 9 o'clock, English time, for the murder of his actress wife, Belle Elmore. Crippen made no statement on the gallows and nobody was permitted to question him regarding his confession reported in the Evening Times, which paper to-day reiterates his confession as outlined yesterday. Crippen died a Roman Catholic, having changed from his nonchalant position in religious matters, and accepted the ministration of Father Carri. The priest spent hours with the condemned man, towards the end. He wouldn't discuss the reported confession, but stated that Crippen was extremely solicitous for the future of Miss Leneve, and their expected offspring. He slept little last night, frequently asking the death watch the time, as if measuring every last minute on earth. When daylight came, the jail governor notified Crippen to prepare for death. He refused breakfast and Father Carri administered the last rites. Then the solemn procession was formed of two official reporters, the Jail Governor and Sheriff in full robes of office, Crippen and priest, and two guards, and a surgeon. The actual hanging was much the same as a Canadian execution except that there was more ceremony. The official hangman pulled the lever and the condemned man dropped, the rope tightening, and in a few seconds the surgeon reported Crippen dead. The Jail Governor then walked out and posted a notice on the jail gate that Crippen died according to law. A large crowd was there awaiting the news, but were well handled by the police. The body will be buried in quicklime in the jail yard, just as he buried his wife's body, according to the confession in the Times. It is reported that Miss Leneve sailed for New York this morning as "Miss Allan".

LINDSAY'S BOOM BUBBLE HAS BEEN RUDELY BURST

Neighbouring Town "Falls For" a "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" Scheme---The Thomas Glove and Shoe Factory to Employ 300 Hands, is Now Proved to Have Been Only a Myth---Police Are After Promoter.

Special to The Examiner.

LINDSAY, NOV. 23.—The bubble has burst.

Lindsay's dream of a big boom, which had for its foundation the starting of a big shoe and glove factory here, by the "D. B. Thomas Glove and Shoe Company" of Cleveland, O., was rudely ended yesterday afternoon, when Mr. Thomas, the promoter of the enterprise, departed for parts unknown. It is said that he has $900 or $400 in currency belonging to the Home Bank of Lindsay, with him.

To-day the police are looking for the man who was regarded for a while as a benefactor and treated like a hero.

Some weeks ago, Mr. Thomas, a boyish-looking young man, of about twenty-eight years of age, arrived in Lindsay. He said that he was representing the D. B. Thomas Glove and Shoe Factory of Cleveland, that the firm had a warehouse in Winnipeg, and that he was looking for a site to establish a Canadian branch of the business. He had heard glowing accounts of Lindsay, which had so impressed him with its possibilities and advantages that he had decided to come in person and look over the ground. His advance impressions of Lindsay were confirmed by the conditions he found there, at least, he said so. He was delighted with the place and Lindsay was, apparently, delighted with him.

He interviewed the Board of Trade as to his locating a big branch here. He proposed, he said, to erect a factory that would give employment to three hundred hands. The coming of the factory would mean that skilled workmen would be brought in and new houses would be necessary, thus providing a real estate boom. The picture he painted was a rosy one, and Lindsay people, as they listened, had visions of a greater Lindsay that was to be.

Naturally the Board of Trade made haste to see that Mr. Thomas and his big factory should not locate elsewhere than in Lindsay. The matter was brought before the Lindsay Council and a site for the factory provided. Mr. Thomas opened an office in the Lindsay Post building, installed a stenographer, (incidentally it may be mentioned that he ordered eight typewriters from a Peterborough firm), and, apparently, was prepared to go ahead with his plans for making Lindsay a commercial centre. As late as Tuesday night he appeared before the Board of Trade, in regard to the establishment of a tannery that would be necessary in connection with his glove and shoe factory.

Here comes the sequel, however. Mr. Thomas, it is said, went to the Home Bank, here, and succeeded, by what means is not known, in drawing first $600 and then $300. From the Standard Bank, it is stated, he managed to draw $550, but afterwards, Mr. Loosemore, the manager, became suspicious, and made him pay the money back. To do so, it is alleged, he employed some of the money he obtained from the Home Bank.

There has been a feeling for the past few days that there has been an Ethiopian in the wood-pile somewhere, and inquiries were set on foot with the result that the interesting information was disclosed that there is no such firm in Cleveland as the Thomas Shoe Company, and that in Winnipeg there is no warehouse belonging to an institution of that name.

Mr. Thomas said farewell to Lindsay yesterday afternoon, leaving on the 4.35 C.P.R. train. The president and secretary of the Board of Trade interviewed him at the station and urged him to remain in town and make an explanation, but he pleaded business calls in Toronto, and departed. Mr. McGill, manager of the Home Bank, went with him on the train as far as Ops station and then returned. Thomas sent back word with the Conductor of the evening train that he would be at the Walker House in Toronto, if wanted, but an inquiry over the 'phone last night failed to disclose any traces of his being around that hostelry, or of his being in Toronto at all. The police were set at work and descriptions have been sent out to the police in different cities asking for his arrest. It is thought that he left the train at Myrtle and either took the C. P. R. east express, through Peterborough or was driven over to some other line. Meanwhile there is consternation here as the Board of Trade, Council and citizens generally, have been badly taken in.

The local police received word from Lindsay last night in regard to Thomas and searched both C. P. R. night trains for the fugitive without finding any trace of him.

SUFFRAGETTES WRECK THE PREMIER'S HOME

Special Wire to The Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., NOV. 23.—Early this morning during an intense fog, Suffragettes swooped down on Premier Asquith's London residence, and with a shower of bolts wrecked every window in the place, destroying much furniture, crockery, etc., and narrowly missing seriously injuring the inmates. Ten were arrested. Hon. Augustine Birrell, who was attacked by Suffragettes yesterday, is so lame to-day that he had to cancel all his engagements.

Over one hundred and fifty women were arraigned in the courts this morning. All were discharged by the order of Home Secretary Churchill, except ten, held for wilful damage to property and serious assault on Birrell yesterday.

FELL TWENTY-FIVE FEET FROM LONDON ST. DAM

Falling twenty-five feet from the bridge over the Quaker Oats Company dam at London street, George Ferguson, who resides on Concession street, East City, sustained painful, although it is not thought serious, injuries, last night, about half past eleven. Ferguson was returning to his home by way of the dam, and in the darkness of the night fell off it. He did not fall into the water, but struck the hard concrete below and it is only by a most miraculous escape that he is alive to-day. The accident occurred but a short distance from the power house, and his father, Mr. F. Ferguson, who works at the power house, heard a man's cries and went to see what was the matter. To his great surprise he found that the man who had fallen was his own son. He was carried to the power house, afterwards being removed in the Dan Spence ambulance to Nicholls Hospital, where Dr. Eastwood attended his injuries. Ferguson had his ankle fractured in addition to being badly bruised.

A Visit From Miss Kawai
A Japanese Educationist

Miss Kawai, of Tokio, one of the leading educationalists of Japan, and an active member of the Tokio Young Women's Christian Association, is to be in the city next week, Tuesday and Wednesday, the guest of our local Association.

Miss Kawai's father was a Shinto priest, the fortieth in his line, but when she was eleven years of age her father came in touch with Christianity and shortly afterwards he and his whole family were baptized.

Miss Kawai is a graduate of an American University, is a most interesting and able speaker, with a delightful personality.

Miss Kawai will spend next Tuesday evening at the Y. W. C. A., and will also address a drawing-room meeting at 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon at the Association. We would urge a large number to avail themselves of this opportunity of hearing this Japanese lady.

CHARGES OF GRAFT

Special Wire to the Examiner.

WOODSTOCK, NOV. 23. — Judge Snyder who to-day is arranging the preliminaries for the investigation of charges of graft against the Oxford County Council, will hear sensational evidence which must lead, it is believed, to criminal prosecutions. The detectives will give the first evidence to-morrow, it is expected.

SECTION MEN ATTACKED BY "BLACK HANDS"

Special Wire to the Examiner.

TORONTO, NOV. 23.—A carload of Italian section men, working on the C.P.R. near Islington, were attacked by a band of men armed with revolvers and guns at an early hour this morning and in the promiscuous shooting, one of them number was shot in the abdomen seriously. It is stated the gang were black handers. The police are on the trail.

CROMBIE IS PROMOTED

Special Wire to the Examiner.

MONTREAL, NOV. 23.—D. Crombie, formerly of London, Ont., now assistant passenger manager of the Grand Trunk, has been appointed assistant to the first vice-president, Mr. Fitzhugh.

THE

Are you aware that almost everyone is equipped with unequal eyes? That is to say, the right is stronger than the left, or vice versa. We rarely realize this, because the stronger eye takes upon itself all the work—and the weaker one scarcely ever attempts to do anything.

NATURE'S INEVITABLE LAW!

Every organ or faculty which is not made use of for a considerable length of time, becomes gradually but surely useless. And this is the effect on the eyes; work keeps the strong eye in good order, but lack of work causes the other to grow worse.

Possibly you may be in this condition, if so my record in the Optical Business during the past seven years in this city, is proof of my ability to benefit you.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 23, 1910.

A GREAT PREACHER.

All those who appreciate pulpit eloquence of the highest type will be interested in learning that Rev. Dr. Kent-tead, of Toronto, will take the services morning and evening, at the Murray street Baptist church on Sunday next, November 27th. Rev. Dr Kent-tead visited Peterborough three years ago and was heard with delight and profit by large congregations. He is a gentleman of eloquence and culture and, in every way a great preacher.

THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Another and important step has been taken in placing the public library in commission, making it available for enjoyment by the public of the advantages it is designed to afford. Whatever criticism may be offered of the structural details of the building and its internal arrangement, the action of the Library Board in the really important matter, appointing a Librarian and Assistant is to be commended. They have made an excellent selection. Mr. F. M. Dela Fosse, the Librarian has in large degree the qualifications fitting him for effective discharge of his duties—education, literary culture, clerical proficiency, and what is very important, courtesy and savoir faire, which add an effective finish to his qualifications. He was educated in Wellington College, England, under that celebrated master, Dr. Benson, later Archbishop Benson, and was for seven years connected, in the capacity of secretary to the Provost, with the Collegiate work of Trinity University Toronto. He is a Canadian of 33 years standing in time, as well as in sympathy and knowledge of Canadian conditions. Widely read, he has a large knowledge of books, and this knowledge fits him to be of practical advisory, as well as distributive, service to the public. As good a selection, might have been made from the many applications for the position of Librarian, but not a better. Equally happy was the Board in the choice of assistant. Miss Hattie Cahill is well educated, cultured and refined, with charming address and all the necessary qualifications to make her persona grata, to the public, even apart from her technical qualifications which admirably fit her for her new position. Miss Cahill is a Peterborough girl, a most successful teacher, and will, we have no doubt, meet with equal success in the discharge of the duties of assistant librarian.

DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.

GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION.

The meeting of the Board of Trade last night demonstrated three things: it showed that the heaven is working; that the portion of our citizens who take the trouble to think, are appreciating an important fact. They see that in regard to the working out of our system of city government, things are not as they should be or might be. The diagnosis of the diseases is the first step towards providing a remedy. The second important thing demonstrated was that the principle of government by commission in some form was, and is regarded a promising remedy. The third and, in regard to the future, the most important thing demonstrated, was the apathy of the citizens in regard to the management of their affairs. An attendance at last night's meeting of eight or ten members of the Board of Trade, out of a total membership of about eighty, does not argue a burning degree of public spirit or interest in city affairs. This is something that must be overcome before we can hope for improvement. This indifference on the part of prominent citizens and citizens generally, is the one thing that helps to make things go wrong by removing the strict surveillance which is needed to keep public servants up to the mark. It is idle and futile for ratepayers to complain of being overburdened by taxation, and that too representing indifferent service and results, when they never lift a finger to help provide a remedy, and whose only interest in the City Council and government of the city, is to vote for, and help elect, some candidate, simply because he has been asked to do so; and straightway forgets and neglects to think about whether he has helped to elect a man of straw or a good alderman. Until we get public spirit aroused, we cannot hope for much betterment. The people can have just the kind of government they want. They have just the kind of government they give themselves.

"LITTLE CANADIANS."

The following, under the above heading, from the Montreal Witness, is in comment upon the letter of a correspondent, Mr. J. H. Burnham, charging Sir Wilfrid Laurier with opportunism, in regard to the naval question, and with being an enemy to imperial integrity and Imperial connection. The article is as follows:

"Mr. Burnham's attack on Sir Wilfrid Laurier's opportunism, whatever its merits as such, does not justify as it is intended to do the wobbling of certain Conservative organs, which, after denouncing Sir Wilfrid for not being imperial in his policy, are, for the sake of getting their broken party together again, joining the Nationalists in their imperial cry. There is no doubt that Sir Wilfrid's task in carrying any naval policy at all has necessarily been a double one, seeing that the country he was trying was pulling violently in opposite directions. He has had, as Mr. Burnham puts it, to 'play to the French-Canadian gallery' with protestations of Canadian autonomy, while going as far as apparently any leader could in the way of providing for imperial defence. In the navy bill he asserted autonomy to the very verge of independency in providing that the navy would not be used for imperial defence except with the approval of parliament, while on the other hand he set forth the obvious proposition that when the Empire should be at war Canada would be at war. His Nationalist denouncers have not failed to show that if there was any call for our navy it would certainly respond to it with the support of the Canadian people. Mr. Borden, at first fell in with this compromise attitude of the Dominion toward the naval programme. Anyone would have thought that Canada's duty in this important Imperial matter would have been perfectly obvious, and that whatever difference there might be regarding the form in which our aid to the Mother Country should take, the principle that we should help her to bear her tremendous burden would be accepted by anybody calling himself a Canadian. But, as all the world knows now, this is the very principle that is denied in this province, (Quebec), and, it is said, by a growing party in the English-speaking provinces. We are perpetually boasting about the loyalty which has resulted from the granting of self-government to Canada, and even using it as an argument for the granting of home rule to other parts of the Empire, and, lo! our 'loyalty' is revealed as consisting of arrangements for keeping our Mother's goods from our markets and depending on her protection for our national existence, while we lift not a little finger to help her in her need. No one knows better than Sir Wilfrid what our connection with the Empire means as regards our rights and privileges. Many is the time he has spoken of this most gracefully and most gratefully. Without it, and without the British navy, which is in many ways the life-blood of the Empire, we would have lost our national being long ago, and this province, (Quebec), would have especially suffered in the things of race and religion, which it esteems most. This is what has made Sir Wilfrid Laurier the most chivalrous of Imperialists, while the very antipodes in character and aim to the 'Jingo.' And to win his fellow-countrymen to this patriotic, this truly Canadian and truly national way of looking at things, is the high duty which has rewarded his long term of faithful public service as he enters upon his seventieth year."

NEBULOUS "NATIONALISM" BECLOUDS NAVAL QUESTION

(Globe.)

As was to be expected under the circumstances, Mr. Armand Lavergne was cordially welcomed and courteously treated on Friday evening by the University students who had invited him to deliver an address on the Nationalist movement. In this respect his visit will do good, for he will no doubt repay his hosts by keeping in mind the kindly feeling displayed by his audience. Moreover, it should be said that the expounder of Nationalism had the good sense and good taste to refrain from saying anything likely to stir up racial or religious hostility. Altogether the meeting was a great success.

Perhaps because of his earnest desire to avoid trouble he did not succeed in making much clearer than it was before the nature and object of the "Nationalist" propaganda. He did frankly say that he desired to keep Canada part of the British Empire, presumably as long as that Empire lasts and keeps faith, as it has always done, with the race and the religion to which Mr. Lavergne and his compatriots belong. He has also made it clear that the Nationalists are utterly opposed to Canada making a donation of money to be spent by the British Government in building Dreadnoughts to be kept entirely under the control of the British Admiralty. So much has been accomplished by his visit, if he speaks with authority for his associates in the movement.

What he has not made perfectly clear, however, is the matter of most importance; just wherein and how far and why he and they differ from Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his supporters in the Dominion Parliament. Every one knows what the latter are trying to accomplish, for their ideal is embodied in Legislative enactments and is partially realized in the addition of two modern cruisers to the already existing Canadian fleet. Mr Lavergne says he is not opposed to a Canadian navy, provided that it is kept absolutely under the control of the Canadian people through their Parliament, and provided that other matters which he deems more important first receive attention; the provision of the dry docks, the fortification of harbours, and the construction of submarine and torpedo boats. He unfairly neglected to mention that Parliament has made ample provision for dry docks, and that the two ready-made cruisers have been procured in advance for training purposes, and there has never been any attempt to defer indefinitely the construction of harbour fortifications and of a "mosquito" fleet, and that in every essential particular, his own programme has been anticipated, even to the absolute and intentional avoidance of "conscription" for naval purposes.

Mr. Lavergne and his associates are trying to build up their new political party on too narrow and slim a foundation, a mere difference of opinion on two points: whether the purchase of two cruisers was premature, and whether, in the event of some great national emergency occurring while Parliament is not in session, the Governor-General in Council should or should not have authority to put war vessels into commission during the two weeks while Parliament is convening.

It would be worth while for all parties, in view of the events of the past few months, especially of the fact that a "Canadian fleet" has been in actual existence since 1852 and that much more than the core of the "Naval Service Act" of last session is contained in the Militia Acts of 1868 and 1883, and in the Revised Statutes of 1886, to make in the interest of their common country an earnest effort to lift this naval question to a higher plane of discussion. Mr. Lavergne seems to think the navy has been favoured at the expense of the militia. He might usefully consider whether or not the best course now is to try to secure the adoption of a treaty between Great Britain and the United States for the settlement of all disputes between them by arbitration, the recent settlement of the fisheries dispute being a highly encouraging precedent. This would make war between them virtually impossible, and then Canada might proceed to protect herself against real dangers, invasions by sea on both of our extensive coasts. Against these we have and can have no protection except a reasonably strong Canadian fleet supplemented by such aid as Great Britain might be able to spare in an emergency from her home defence fleet.

ately, but scathingly, exposes the flagrant opportunism of the Conservative party, which passively or actively, from Mr Borden down, sympathizes with the apparent success of the "Nationalist" movement—a distinctly avowed empire-wrecking policy. With smug hypocrisy Mr Bourassa is repudiated, but his works, and the fruit of his work, as represented by a nominal condemnation of Sir Wilfrid are taken to their hearts as an element in the working out of the policy—"anything to beat Laurier". Coquetting with openly avowed traitors, sympathizing with openly avowed treason, encouraging by not condemning, but by indirectly applauding the "heroes" of the Drummond-Arthabaska English-hating, British-baiting, empire-wrecking campaign is the pass to which the Conservative party in Parliament has come. Mr. Blondin, M.P., who, in his efforts to elect Mr. Gilbert, the Bourassa candidate, declared that "we have had too much of the English" is a member of the Conservative Opposition, one of the recognized, unreproved and unrepudiated followers of Mr Borden. He is still a "member in good standing" of the Conservative Opposition in Parliament, and has for desk-mate, sitting amongst "the only true imperialists in Canada" the Conservative members the newly elected member of Drummond and Arthabaska, who was elected, by the help of Conservative members of Parliament, upon a policy, expressed in the words of Mr. Blondin, Conservative M. P. for Chaplain, that "we have had too much of the English." Mr. Gilbert, the newly-elected champion of the avowed Empire-wreckers, sits among the Conservatives in Parliament, unpurged of the treasonable utterances and advocacy of which he is the beneficiary, and which his newly-found political bed-fellows condone, excuse and use as a weapon to further party advantage, making treason and seditious utterances the stepping stone to office—"anything to beat Laurier". Is it any wonder that Sir Wilfrid Laurier employed the happily apt phrase—"His Majesty's disloyal Opposition." Is it any wonder that the Witness employs the term "Little Canadians" to designate those perish politicians, whose opportunism is expressed in their willingness to politically profit by a policy of treason, of national disintegration as far as Canada herself is concerned, and of rupture of the bonds of British connection; men who take to their arms the man elected in a moment of hysterical illusion, who was carried to victory on the war cry—"We have had too much of the English."

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

"Nonsense, Maud!" he exclaimed. "You do not understand. This is my son, Guy. Of course we must talk together. It is a wonderful meeting, yes, a wonderful meeting."

"Well?" I repeated.

"I am glad to hear," he continued, "that you are holding such an important position. Clerk to the Military Defence Board, eh? Quite an important position, of course; but it might be made—yes, with care, it might be made," he added, watching me with nervous alertness, "a very lucrative one."

"I am quite satisfied with my salary," I remarked calmly.

"Pooh! my dear boy, that is nonsense," he continued. "You do not understand me. It is an open secret, Maud, are we overheard here, do you think? Is it safe to discuss an important matter with Guy here?"

I rose to my feet and took up my hat. Again she whispered in his ear and this time he seemed to assent.

"Quite right! Quite right!" he said, nodding his head. "Guy, my boy, you shall come and see us. No. 29, Bloomsbury street; poor rooms, but our remittances have gone astray, and I have been ill. To-morrow, eh? or the next day? We shall expect you, Guy. We do not go out except in the evenings. You will not fail, Guy?"

I looked down into his flushed face. His lips were shaking, and his eyes were fixed anxiously upon mine. I was miserable and ashamed and unhappy.

"I do not think that I shall care to hear what you have to say," I answered. "But I will come to see you."

I left them there. As I went out she was gently countermanding his order for more brandy.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

THE DUKE'S MESSAGE.

It was late, but I felt that I must see Ray. I went to his house, little expecting to find him there. I was shown, however, into the study, where he was hard at work with a pile of correspondence. He wore an ancient shooting jacket, and his feet were encased in slippers. As usual, his pipe was between his teeth, and the tobacco smoke hung about him in little clouds.

"Well," he said, gruffly. "What do you want of me? I am busy. Speak to the point."

"I have come to ask your advice," I said. "I am afraid that I must resign my post."

"Why?"

"My father is in London. I have seen and spoken with him."

"With that woman?"

"Yes."

"And you have spoken to him in a public place, perhaps?"

"Yes."

Ray was silent for a moment. Then he looked at me keenly.

"Do you want to give it up?" he asked.

"No," I answered. "But do you suppose Lord Chelsford and the others would be willing for me to continue—under the circumstances?"

"Probably not," he admitted. "The Duke would not, at any rate."

"Then what am I to do?" I asked.

"I don't know!" he answered shortly. "It requires consideration. I will see Lord Chelsford. You shall hear from me in the morning."

That was all the consolation I had from Colonel Mostyn Ray.

At ten o'clock the next morning the Duke came to me in the study, where I was already at work. He was looking, even for him, particularly trim and smart, and he wore a carefully-selected pink rosebud in his button-hole. His greeting was almost cordial. He gave me a few instructions, and then lit a cigarette.

"What is this about your resignation, Ducaine?" he asked.

"I do not wish to resign, sir," I answered. "I have explained certain circumstances to Colonel Ray, which it seemed to me, might make my resignation necessary. He promised to confer with Lord Chelsford, and let me know the result."

The urbanity slowly faded from the Duke's face.

"I am your employer," he said, coldly. "I do not understand why you thought it necessary to go to Colonel Ray."

"It was entirely owing to Colonel Ray, sir," I answered, "that I received the appointment, and he has practically made himself responsible for me."

"You are mistaken," the Duke answered. "The responsibility is shared by all of us. Your unfortunate family history was known to the whole Board."

"Then I am less indebted to Colonel Ray, sir, than I imagined," I answered. "I am very glad, however, that it is known. Perhaps Lord Chelsford may not consider my resignation necessary."

"The circumstances being—"

"I have seen and spoken with my father in London," I answered.

The Duke was silent.

"I assume," he said, after a pause, "that you must yourself realize the indiscretion of this."

"I went at once to Colonel Ray and offered my resignation," I answered.

The Duke nodded.

"Your father," he said, slowly, "is in London?"

"Yes, sir."

"Alone?"

I hesitated. Yet, perhaps I had no right to know the truth.

Eczema Is Not Fatal
Dr. Chase's Ointment

But Its Torture Increases as it Spreads Over the Body Until it Makes Life a Burden. It is Cured by

So many have eczema of one form or another and do not know it. The constant itching annoys them, but they scarcely realize how the disease is gradually spreading and becoming more aggravated.

Particularly, during cold weather, when exposed to sudden changes and dampness, this ailment becomes more severe, and during the night, when the body is warm, suffering is intense and sleep almost impossible.

There is cure in the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. This healing, soothing preparation brings almost instant relief from the distressing itching.

In the course of a few days the healing process sets in, and it is only a question of time and persistent application of the ointment until cure is effected.

Mr. Fred W. Clark, Petworth, Addington county, Ont., writes: "My mother had eczema on both legs for a long time, and tried everything for it, but got no relief until a friend advised her to use Dr. Chase's Ointment which she got.

"She found that Dr. Chase's Ointment gave her great relief, so she got some more and continued this treatment faithfully, until now she is entirely cured of eczema. I don't think anyone could have this disease worse than she did."

TALENT SOCIAL UNDER AUSPICES OF LADIES' AID

Enjoyable Affair in George Street Methodist Sunday School Last Night—Ladies Tell in Verse How They Used Their Talents

SUCCESSFUL EVENT

Last evening was a most enjoyable one at George Street Church, when the Ladies' Aid of the church held a talent social in the Sunday School room. The ladies of the Aid, some time ago, arranged a little plan that each member should earn a dollar, and give it to the Society, and compose a little verse telling how they earned the money. A choice programme was given, with Rev. Mr. Couch presiding. The items were all of a very high order and were as follows:

Chairman's address—Mr. Couch.

Then came the ladies' chorus, in which all the ladies of the Aid took part. They sang an appropriate chorus and then walked forward with their dollar and repeated their verses in turn. It is to be regretted that the verses cannot be set forth here in, as they were all well composed and very amusing.

The next item was instrumental by Mr Puttenham.

Recitation—"The Death of Montrose," by Mr. Johns.

Solo—"The Gift," by Mrs. Davidson.

Instrumental—Mrs. Puttenham.

Recitation — "The Diamond Wedding," by Mr. Johns.

Solo—"Roses," by Mrs. Davidson.

Address—"The City in Which We Live"—Mr. L. H. Dobbin.

This address was the feature of the evening and was greatly appreciated. Mr. Dobbin related Peterborough's history as only a man who has experienced it, can. The principal points of his address are briefly set forth as follows:

So far little has been known about the history of this city. Very little of its history has been written. Of course we know a little about its churches and schools and other prominent buildings; but we know very little about its people, except a few of the old inhabitants, who are still living. I will try to sketch a little of its very early history, and settlers, without going into details.

At the close of the Napoleon war, Great Britain had a little space of peace and a large number of officers and men, who were on half pay, came out to Canada and settled along the St. Lawrence and on the banks of Lake Ontario, also in the now county of Peterborough. They spent their time in hunting and fishing, and a little lumbering. Farming. At that time Peterborough was a small place indeed—only a few houses; and I remember there used to be some old buildings, or sheds, down along the river bank. They never were used for anything, for it was almost impossible to heat them in the winter.

So, as a matter of fact, they were rather desolate looking, and I, only a very little boy then, was afraid of "spooks," because every person said that such existed in them, so I always sought the company of a very strong man, when going in or near these places. Peterborough remained like this for a long time, and then came what is known as the Robinson emigration, which, in reality, became the first inhabitants of this city, and vicinity. Sixty years ago very little horse racing was done on George St., not because this sport was not indulged in, in those days, and not because the people did not care for it, but simply because, if a man had started to drive up the street he would likely collide with a few stumps, before he had gone many feet. It was easy to cut the trees down but the stumps were not so easily pulled out. At that time there were two houses erected, one on each side of the street in the vicinity of London street, and they remain there to this day. Mrs. Bartley lives in one of them. Just along London St. and in the vicinity, there was an Indian camp. These Indians made moccasins and such like, and sold them around among the settlers. The country around London street was dry, but the water seemed to run off the hill up there and formed a swamp down where St. Paul's church stands. In fact, the land was given to the congregation to build the church on it, because it was no use for anything else. The surveyors, too, were very mischievous in those olden times. They would drink heavily and camp along the river, where they were surveying, and the world was no trouble to them.

Mr. Dobbin told a number of interesting stories in connection with the surveyors, which caused a great deal of merriment in the audience, and his remarks were greeted with expressions of appreciation. He also went on to tell about the old-time lanterns. He said they were an essential in those days, but the humourous part of it was that any person with a hammer and a nail and an old tin can could make a lantern. They were simply made of a tin can with holes punched in it and a wax candle placed inside. They were an extremely useful article; they showed enough light just to allow a person to fall over an obstacle, but not enough to let them see what it was. Glass was very scarce. It had to be brought from Montreal in the summer by boat, or dragged all the way overland."

The speaker then went on to mention the numerous spots in Peterborough of historic interest. He said that there were numerous houses all around the city of local historical association. The first brick house ever erected in this city was built on the corner of Queen and Simcoe Sts. There were numerous distilleries in the city, which was then only a village, and some of these old buildings are still to be seen, and in use. For instance, there is the old building used by Fitzgerald & Co., and the Protestant Home, and numerous others; these were distilleries and breweries of sixty years ago. The greatest day was Fair day. The people made that day a general holiday. That was the day that the brewer always gave orders to put in an extra pail of water "for," he would say, "we must not give it to the boys too strong to-day." When the first city hall was erected, it was built between Charlotte and Simcoe streets, and facing Water street.

Mr. Dobbin told a number of amusing stories in connection with the new city hall and other things. He said that the Mayor gave an ox to the people to roast as a feast on the occasion of laying the corner stone. The comical part of it was that it required a day and part of a night to roast the ox, and when the darkness came a gang of men came along and tied the man who was attending of the roasting of the ox, and then took the ox away on a stone-boat.

Mr. Dobbin's very interesting address was greeted with applause and certainly deserved it.

Mr. Shortly moved a vote of thanks to those who took part in the programme, and also to the ladies. This was duly seconded and what proved to be a very profitable and enjoyable evening was brought to a close.

GAMBLING HAS SUFFERED FROM THE MOTOR CRAZE

Less Card Playing and Billiards in the Fashionable Clubs in Paris, London and New York.

ALL FOR THE MOTORS

Special to The Examiner.

PARIS, NOV. 19.—The craze for motoring is killing billiards, cards, and all other indoor games. In Paris, long the world centre of expert billiards, it is hard to scare up experts or get any kind of an audience for a tournament. More than 8,500 billiard tables have vanished from the French tax list since automobiles came into use. It is the same way with cards. Almost 20,000 fewer decks than usual were sold last year in this country.

From Europe and also from America there are similar reports as to the decrease of social gambling since automobiles got in style. The hotels and clubs are the hardest hit. A New York millionaire who has just spent a week in Paris is quoted as saying that however much gambling may have increased among the clerks and poorer classes in New York it has decreased very much among those who own or use motor cars. A Paris banker, commenting on the situation, avers the motor thus fulfils an important economic function in putting into trade and industry a vast sum of money which otherwise would have been dissipated among a lot of absolutely useless, evil, non-producing drones, such as croupiers, gamblers, and professional hangers-on and cardsharpers.

Horse racing has profited rather than suffered from motoring, inasmuch as the race tracks are now more easily accessible than ever before to the leisure classes, which appreciate the luxury of controlling their own movements instead of depending on trains. There is a decrease of gambling on steamships and railroad trains so the officials say. The French, English and German farmers have not yet followed the example of the American farmers in discarding their old-fashioned vehicles for gasoline runabouts and touring cars.

The luckiest gambler in France this year is M. Duclos, a house painter, who has just won the $100,000 grand prize in the Liquidation Lottery. The Government has decided to put a stop to lotteries, so Duclos is likely to be the last man in this country to enjoy such luck. First, the painter told all his neighbors of his good fortune. Then, when he saw the flock of importuners bound his way he repented of his rashness and learned wisdom. After that, when he was congratulated, he shook his head and said it was a mistake, and that he didn't draw the right number after all. He has now vanished from his humble lodging, and he and his family have taken a hundred-a-year flat in another part of Paris, where he is living on the interest of his fortune, which he has invested in three and a half per cent. securities.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

THE etiquette of the acknowledgment of wedding invitations and announcements is a subject about which I am so often quizzed that I am going to try to blanket the whole subject with a few simple rules.

An invitation to a home wedding or wedding reception does not require an acknowledgment if you intend to be present. It is, however, a very kind and courteous thing to send an acceptance. If you do this, the acceptance should follow the general style of the invitation. That is, if the invitation is informal, the acceptance should be the same; if the invitation is the regulation third person formal affair, the acceptance should be formal as:

Mr. and Mrs. So-and-So accept with pleasure the kind invitation of
Mr. and Mrs. So-and-So to the wedding of their daughter on Wednesday evening, Oct. 17, at seven o'clock.

If you do not intend to be present, send two visiting cards to the bride's parents, mailed so as to reach their home the morning of the wedding. The idea of the two cards is that one is for the bride, the other for her mother.

It is not necessary to acknowledge an invitation to a church wedding. But in this case also it is a mark of thoughtfulness and courtesy to go beyond the absolute requirements and send either a regret or acceptance.

An announcement of a wedding does not require any acknowledgment. If it is the first news you have had of the marriage, and either of the principals is an intimate friend, it is courteous to write him or her an informal note of congratulation.

"Do I need to send a wedding gift in such and such a case?" is one of the most frequent etiquette questions that my postman brings me. And I always find it is a difficult matter upon which to give advice. You never NEED to send a wedding gift. It is simply a matter of your own discretion and desire and should be looked upon in that light much more than it now is.

It is not customary to send a gift in response to an invitation to a church wedding unless one of the principals is someone whom you know very well.

It is customary to send a gift in response to an invitation to a home wedding, but by no means obligatory. If you are but slightly acquainted with the principals do not feel that such an invitation imposes any obligation whatever.

When for any reason, a couple have a quiet family wedding without outside guests the close neighbours and intimate friends usually send gifts despite the fact that they were not invited to the wedding. Such gifts may be sent before the wedding or on receipt of the wedding announcement.

Wedding gifts may be sent any time from the three weeks before the great event to the wedding day itself, but kindliness and consideration for the bride will suggest sending the gift a few days before the event, as that will make less rush and confusion for here in the last day or two.

A wedding gift, even if it is sent by a friend of the groom who never even heard of the bride, should still be addressed to the woman in the case.

BOARD OF TRADE AGAIN DISCUSSES CIVIC GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION

Question Dealt With in an Able Manner by Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C., Last Evening---Money Saved in Municipal Government by Commission---Referred to Committee.

Municipal Government was dealt with at the meeting of the Board of Trade last evening and some valuable information was given by Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C. The chair was taken by the president, Ald. G. A. Gillespie, but the attendance was not as large as it should have been in view of the importance of the meeting. The question will be further considered at a meeting of the Board of Trade on December 13th.

Mr. D. W. Dumble, chairman of the committee appointed to consider the question of the Board's affiliation with the new Provincial Board, reported as follows:

First,—That we have considered the constitution of the Provincial Board, and find that cities having a membership of 300 have only eight votes, and for every additional hundred members one additional vote—so that it would be impossible for the large cities to outvote the smaller Boards of Trade.

Second, Your Committee believe that by uniting with the Provincial Board, the local boards can more effectively give effect to their views on matters of Provincial and Dominion interest.

Third,—On matters of local interest there will be perfect freedom.

Your committee therefore advise that our Board unite with the Provincial Board.

This report was adopted as read.

Peterborough Board of Trade with its present membership, will be entitled to five representatives on the Provincial Board.

Dr. Morrison moved, seconded by Mr. D. W. Dumble, that the selection of delegates to the Provincial Board of Trade be left in the hands of the council of the local Board of Trade.—Carried.

Municipal Government by Commission.

Mr. W. H. Moore did not read a paper on this question, but delivered an exceedingly clear, concise and able address. He prefaced an intelligent presentation of the question, from his point of view, with a warning not to be misled by the phrase "Municipal Government by Commission." Government commissions with which all were familiar, were not responsible to the people, but only to those who appoint them. They were appointed officers, and not elective, but have generally given great satisfaction. He did not think the time had arrived, or ever would arrive, when municipalities could satisfactorily be governed by commission, in the same sense as the term was applied to government commissions. There was one commissioned body in Peterborough, the Water Commissioners and they were elected by the people.

In no part of the civilized globe would people submit to be governed or ruled except by representatives whom they elected, and who were responsible to the people. 'Tis true that Washington, with a population of 300,000 and an assessed value of $250,000,000 is governed by a commission appointed by Congress, but the success of the experiment in that capital was due to peculiar local conditions that apply to no other city in the States. Galveston, in Texas, after an era of graft, resorted to municipal government by a State appointed commission, but in six or seven months the people petitioned that that system be declared unconstitutional, and Galveston was now governed by a commission of five, elected by the people themselves.

Mr. Moore here went on to explain what he considered might be a highly satisfactory method of municipal government—that in force at Des Moines, Iowa, a city 9x6 miles in geographical extent, with 90,000 inhabitants, and an assessed value of $80,000,000. The State was petitioned to legislate that cities and towns be governed by Elected Commissions, resulting in the passage of an act in concurrence with the people's demand.

The cities were classified as follows: Cities of 25,000 inhabitants and upwards were designated as "first-class," whilst those of 7,000 and upwards were called "second class." First class cities were allowed a commission of five only—a mayor and four councilmen. Second class cities were governed by three commissioners—a mayor and two councilmen. Such a system as the foregoing would give Peterborough, a second class city, a government of three only. And Des Moines a city of 90,000 inhabitants, is governed by a commission of five only—one member to represent each 18,000 citizens. This act had been in force but two years last April, and the first year the elected Commission of Des Moines effected a saving of $189,000 out of the expenses previously considered necessary and unavoidable.

The speaker here wished it distinctly understood that he was not finding fault with Peterborough's Board of Aldermen. He believed they had as good a council in Peterborough as could be found in any city of its size in Canada. Still the system of government was not as good as it might be. More economy might be effected by a commission. He could not understand the council's attitude in acquiring information as to street pavements, approving of the system, and then abandoning the scheme by reason of opposition, and next morning rolling broken stone into the roads. Had they convinced themselves of the desirability for the economy of the work they should have gone ahead with the work.

Turning again to the Des Moines system of government, Mr. Moore pointed out that in that city the Commissioners were elected once every two years, but there were two elections. First came a primary election at which candidates for office were elected. All names for mayor but the two getting the highest number of votes for mayor, and the eight candidates securing the most votes for councilmen were eliminated; then another election was held which decided the mayoralty contest, and who would be councilmen, according to the number of votes received respectively.

In the State of Iowa the Legislature fixed the salaries for municipal commissioners as follows:

In cities of 7,000 inhabitants and less than 10,000, the mayor receives $600 a year; each councilman, $450—$1,500 all told.

In cities of 10,000 and less than 25,000, the mayor receives $1,500; each councilman, $900.

In cities of 15,000 and less than 25,000, the mayor received $1,500; each councilman, $1,200.

In cities of 25,000 and less than 40,000, the Mayor, $2,500; each councilman, $1,800.

In cities of 40,000 and less than 60,000, the Mayor, $3,000; each councilman, $2,500.

In cities of 60,000 or more inhabitants, the Mayor gets $3,500; and each councilman $3,000, making a total of $15,500, for a mayor and four councilmen.

The Speaker did not think that salaries based on the foregoing schedule exorbitant in the face of Des Moines saving $189,000 in one year.

But even in Des Moines and other cities similarly governed the elected commissioners were not supreme and their actions could be controlled by the people. There were three important features connected with this act that reserves to the people their rights of self-government.

First, the initiative—25 per cent. of the people can force the commission to enact any measure within 30 days, or submit such measure to a vote.

Second, the referendum.—The commission cannot give away any franchise without the approval of the people. Any measure of importance must be advertised as open for inspection for ten days, and, on petition, must be submitted to the ratepayers before becoming law.

Third, recall.—The people could recall their choice of mayor or any councilman at any time for just cause and demand another election. This was used as a sort of thumbscrew to assure good behaviour.

In conclusion of an interesting and instructive address Mr. Moore suggested that the local municipal government was too large and might well be composed of a mayor and four aldermen, with authority to appoint commissions for important departments, such as the Board of Works, and the Fire, Water and Light Department, provided such commissioners were given a free hand and were responsible to the people. The Mayor and aldermen should be paid equitable salaries, and until such a policy was adopted the city would not get the best service from its aldermanic board. Their terms of office should be longer than two years—three years at least, and even up to five years, with the right of "recall." Given a reasonable term men were able to look forward, plan, and lay out a definite policy. In one year an alderman simply got acquainted with his work. The secretary of this board might get in connection with other municipalities, and further an agitation for legislation for a change in the present system of municipal government.

Dr. Morrison concurred in Mr. Moore's views, and offered that Peterborough might well take a leaf out of Des Moines' book of experience. He offered that a mayor and three colleagues would effect better results than possible under existing conditions.

Mr. Banks urged immediate correspondence with other Boards of Trade on this question.

Industrial Commissioner Duggan thought this matter might be more effectively taken up with the Ontario Associated Boards of Trade. Such a body would have more weight than any local board, acting independently. The Provincial Board of Trade had a committee on resolutions whose recommendation of the question in hand would assure decisive action on that body's part.

Mr. Dumble suggested that the question of municipal government by commission was too important to be acted upon hastily. The question should have fuller consideration at another meeting.

Robert Ruddy, K.C., while delighted with Mr. Moore's able address, thought that under the present system Peterborough and other municipalities were not doing so badly. The country was growing and when a city outgrows the effectiveness of a board of aldermen like that of Peterborough, a Board of Control like that of Toronto was always available. Should Peterborough make the change suggested by Mr. Moore a large expenditure of money would be involved for salaries. The question should be discussed at a more representative meeting. He was ashamed of the apathy displayed by members of this board in not being present on so important an occasion. An effort should be made to make Peterborough's Board of Trade more representative. All trades, the physicians, lawyers and even the labouring class should be represented on its membership roll. Then the board should take an active interest in the candidates for mayor and aldermen, and endeavour to effect the election of the best possible men.

Mr. W. S. Dodd contended that the whole trouble with the present system of municipal government resulted from too frequent changes in the personell of the Board of Aldermen. No business could be run satisfactorily with so many changes every year.

Several resolutions were here offered, resulting in the following being adopted.

Dr. Morrison moved, seconded by W. S. Dodds, that the president and Messrs. W. H. Moore, D. W. Dumble and Industrial Commissioner Duggan be a committee to make enquiries and draft a policy along the line of discussion, and report to this Board.

Subsequently Dr. Morrison's name was added to the committee.

The Board then adjourned.

COUPLE MARRIED IN RAINSTORM UNDER UMBRELLA

Special to The Examiner:

FOREST GROVE, ORE., NOV. 20. Under circumstances which were unusual, Benjamin H. Marsh and Minnie A. Perkins of this city were married here. The ceremony was performed in the street, just in front of their home-to-be and under a large umbrella, which kept off a vigorous Oregon shower.

The unique wedding was not prearranged to take place under such conditions. It all hinged upon Justice of the Peace Wirtz of this place, who had been asked to perform the ceremony. This was to be in the new home, which Mr. Marsh had built. When the Justice reached the place he found that the little home lay just beyond his jurisdiction or outside of Cornelius precinct, the dividing line of which ran in front of the house.

The suggestion that it be held across the road at once met with favor, one of the young girl attendants remarking, "Let's do, that will be so romantic." Wirtz read the brief service in the presence of some ten witnesses, some of whom had no umbrellas with which to protect their wedding finery.

WENT TO BED WELL AND WOKE TO FIND HE WAS BLIND

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, NOV. 21. Without previous illness or symptoms of any kind to warn him, August Soups, forty-five years old, living at No. 1,563 Commonwealth Avenue, the Bronx, awakened yesterday from a perfectly normal sleep to find himself stone blind.

Although a bookkeeper for many years, he had never suffered eyestrain, and had never worn glasses or felt the need of them.

He came to his home at 9 o'clock Friday night, the usual hour, and retired about 11. His eyesight was then as clear as ever, he was conscious of no trouble. He soon sank into a deep quiet slumber. At what ever time his affliction came upon him, the man was all unconscious of it. There was no shock of pain to wake him up.

When he did awaken at about seven o'clock yesterday morning he opened his eyes and unable to see anything thought it was still night. But he was restless and could not sleep. He found his clothing and took out of one of the pockets took a match and lighted it for the purpose of looking at his watch. The match scorched and he held it in his hands till the flame touched his fingers, but though his eyes were wide open he could not see the flame. As a matter of fact the daylight was streaming into the room.

Suddenly he realized that he was blind. In his agony at the discovery he screamed and swooned.

Mrs. Catharine Nearsheim, his landlady, ran up to his room and found him unconscious. She administered restoratives and sent for Dr. C. E. O'Grady of No. 1,477 Commonwealth Avenue. The physician's examination resulted in nothing to give hope other than that his eyesight would be restored.

Good Reasons Why You Should Shop Now For Xmas

This is an old thread-bare story, but it's as sensible as it's worn out In the first place human nature will always assert itself and a person will think of oneself first. It is certainly to your decided advantage to shop now—You get better assortment, better service and just as good, if not better, values. Later there is sure to be a big rush and you will not have the same chance to select, and, as a rule, get something you're not satisfied with in the end.

In the second place, think of the salespeople. The rush always is most trying on them and they are unable to do justice to You, to their Employer or to themselves. Every advantage is to be gained by doing part at least of your Christmas Shopping every week from now on.

Shop when you are able, but make it a point to try morning shopping some day and see the pleasure you will have. Think this over.

SPEEDY WORK

Roy Studio Had Photographs of Sousa's Band Ready This Morning

The quickness of the Roy Studio has never been more convincingly demonstrated than during last night's concert by John Phillip Sousa and his band. At 11 o'clock last night in the interval between the two parts of the programme, Mr. F. L. Roy took a flashlight of the members of the band and assisting artists. This morning at 7 o'clock one of these photographs was presented to Mr. Sousa at the station, and he highly complimented the studio, not only on the quickness of its work, but upon the very excellent photograph secured, one of the best that the band ever had taken before were booked from nearly every member of the band. A copy of the photograph is on exhibition in one of the studio windows.

Two Minute Talks About

for Coal or Wood

THE Pandora Range is for those who desire to make a permanent investment. The high quality of the materials and the superior method of construction assure long life.

The Body of the Pandora is very heavy. The Rods and Bolts are on the outside where they cannot burn or rust out. The Expansion Rings of the cooking section provide ample allowance for extreme expansion and contraction and eliminate the possibility of the metal cracking.

The Cooking Top is Burnished which toughens the surface of the metal and increases its strength. McClary Oil Cement is used between the joints. Unlike cheap, ordinary cement, it will not dry out and need replacing. The Nickelling will not tarnish and is many times more durable than the single coat of nickel on ordinary ranges.

The Semi-Steel Fire Box Linings are twenty per cent. heavier than cast or gray iron linings. Sulphur fumes, so destructive to cast iron, cannot penetrate the hard, smooth as glass surface of Semi-Steel. The Grates have Three Faces, which allows the wear to be distributed on three sides, insuring triple durability.

If you want a range of guaranteed quality get the Pandora. It's built to give you lasting service.

HOLLY SHEPARD, "THE MAN WHO MAKES MINSTRELS."

When the curtain rises upon the Belmont Club Minstrel on Dec. 15th, the audience will witness one of the prettiest first part setting ever seen on the local stage. Holly Shepard, the "Man Who Makes Minstrels," carries all costumes and stage settings, which are not surpassed by any Minstrel organization in America. Grigg's "Shepard" slogan, and the Belmont Minstrel will be filled with it from then on until the fall of the curtain. There will be no tiresome wait, but something going on all the while. The songs are all of the whistling kind, yet void of tune fullness. The best work of the cast is expected in Minstrelsy. Strange to say, the jokes will be heard for the first time in this big show. Mr. Shepard introduces several lady specialties in the performance, which is an innovation in the line of entertainment. The olio or second part, will be in keeping with the first and "one to one." first part, full of up-to-date specialties, some of which will be seen in the novelty. Mr. Shepard believes in what he calls circus, and exactly every thing refined and clean and will not allow a word or action to occur that the refined of the most fastidious. He has produced all over the United States and Canada, and has played more return visits than all other companies put together. This is but about "Holly" as people call him, and he became production for the Belmont Club Boy.

BLACK PLAGUE FIVE TIMES AS PREVALENT AS CONSUMPTION

Powerful Address by Dr. Carmichael Before the Brotherhood of St. Paul Last Night---Parents Should Keep Their Children Off the Streets---Annual Meeting Held Last Night.

A feature at the annual meeting of the Brotherhood of St. Paul, held last evening in St. Paul's church, was an address by one of the members, Dr. Carmichael on "The Black Plague." It was illustrated by coloured charts. The seriousness and prevalence of the black plague, which represents all forms of venereal diseases, Dr. Carmichael claimed, is not understood, as it should be, by the public. It is estimated that about 500,000 new cases of the disease are contracted each year in the United States. Although some people attempt to make light of it it is so dreadful in character that those afflicted by it often say that they would rather commit suicide than contract the disease again. Unless treated in its early stages there is no hope for curing it. Few people who contract it apply for treatment in time.

The attitude of the public is to shut its eyes to the disease. Even doctors neglect to warn the public as they should about it. Its awful ravages and prevalence. It is so terribly contagious that it may be transmitted by drinking cups, the tips of the hands and in many other ways. In addition it is also hereditary, being transmitted from parents to children. It is estimated that in New York City alone there are some 200,000 cases, and each of these cases is a distributing agency. It has been proposed in New York that those afflicted with the disease shall be retained in the hospital for at least a full year, unless a cure is effected in the meantime, and they can secure a doctor's certificate to that effect. One of the worst features of the disease consists in the fact that innocent wives and babies often become victims.

Dr. Carmichael spoke strongly against the practice of parents allowing their children out on the streets at night and mentioned especially the practice of allowing children to stay out at band concerts until they are over, and attending the nickel shows without their parents being with them. Peterborough is not as large a city as New York, but the number of cases of this disease in Peterborough is possibly as large in proportion as in the case of New York. The coloured charts that were shown the members of the Brotherhood showed in a telling manner the fearful ravages made by this disease on the human body. A vote of thanks was tendered Dr. Carmichael for his informative address. A desire was expressed that coloured lantern slides should be prepared and similar addresses given before the meetings of the Men's Associations in the other churches of Peterborough.

Election of Officers.

It being the annual meeting of the Association reports were received from the retiring officers and the election of officers took place. The Secretary-Treasurer, Mr. H Gillespie, reported a balance on hand. The reports of the Membership Committee presented by Mr. D. H. Downie, the Social and Programme Committee, by Mr. Jos. Connil, and for the Ushers, by Mr. Ross Cameron, all showed that good work had been done.

The retiring president, Mr. A. P. McLean who has done splendid work for the Brotherhood, was tendered a hearty vote of thanks, as were the other retiring members of the executive.

The officers elected for the coming year were as follows:

Hon.-Pres. Rev. Robert Pogue.
Hon. Vice-Pres.—John Crane and D. H. Moore.
President H R. Cowan.
Vice-Pres. D H Downie.
Sec-Treas. E. H. Howson.
Convenors of Committees—Bible Study, Mr Hughes; ushering, Mr. Rosenburg; membership, A A. Perrin; social and programme, H. F. Hall.

In December the Brotherhood expects to be addressed by Mr. Jos. Fells of England, a great advocate of the single tax. Mr. Fells was a poor boy, who has become a millionaire and is now devoting his wealth to the improvement of social conditions. At a later meeting Dr. Shearer the head of the Social and Moral Reform League of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, will address the members.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND

John Phillip Sousa and his wonderful band, some fifty strong, entertained a large audience at the Grand Opera House last night with a long and varied programme that was wholly delightful. The March King likes nothing if not variety and so his offering last night ran the gamut, from Liszt's symphony "Les Preludes" down to "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?" and "Temptation Rag." Every number was encored and in some instances the appreciative applause of the audience would not be denied and a second recall selection had to be given. As Mr. Sousa chose the encores as an opportunity of playing some of his stirring marches the audience found the repeat numbers among the most enjoyable of the evening. "The Washington Post," one of his earlier marches, was the only one of the old group played, but the newer favourites, "Fairest of the Fair," "The Glory of the Yankee Navy" and "The Stars and Stripes for Ever" were rendered in a manner that aroused spontaneous enthusiasm.

Every man in the band is a soloist, a thorough master of his respective instrument, a fact that was convincingly illustrated in the opening number, an orchestral setting of Liszt's beautiful number "Les Preludes" in which the wonderful skill of the band was demonstrated to the entire satisfaction of the audience.

The programme included a new composition by Sousa, a series of three character studies, entitled, "Dwellers of the West in Word," descriptive of the Red Man, the White Man and the Black Man, the character of each being translated into music and the effect was wholly pleasing.

Rachmaninoff's "Bells of Moscow," a beautiful number, was magnificently rendered and the humoresque from the "Creole Suite" was presented with a full appreciation of its oddity.

Mr. Sousa paid an unique compliment to Mr. Rupert Gliddon, director of the 57th Regiment Band by playing as an encore number one of Mr. Gliddon's compositions, "The 57th Regiment" march, and by giving Mr. Gliddon the unusual privilege of directing the band during its rendition. The march, a swinging, tuneful selection, was played at sight by the band in splendid fashion and needless to say a hearty encore was demanded, the audience refusing to be satisfied until Mr. Gliddon had returned to the stand and directed a repetition of the number. This charming act of courtesy on the part of Mr. Sousa was appreciated by no one more than by Mr. Gliddon.

Mr. Herbert L. Clarke, an old Toronto boy, and one of the finest cornet players in the world, gave a cornet solo of his own composition, "Showers of Gold" that was remarkable for its melodious and well defined trills, and the applause was prolonged and enthusiastic. As an encore Mr Clarke gave a charming rendition of that tuneful excerpt from "Madame Sherry", "Every Little Movement Has a Meaning of Its Own."

The audience was much amused by the orchestral rendition of "Kelly," with its question, "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly" hurled forth from the cornet or the trombone to be taken up by the mellower notes of the flute and the double bass to finish off the voices.

Miss Virginia Root displayed a beautifully clear and pure soprano in her light and airy song, "The Lark Now Leaves His Watry Nest," which was enthusiastically received. As an encore she sang, with charming effect, "Annie Laurie". In both numbers she was suitably accompanied by the band.

A masterly exposition of Saint Saen's violin solo, "Rondo Capriccioso" was given by Miss Nicoline Zedeler, and an encore was demanded.

Owing to the special train carrying the band, being late, the concert did not start until nearly 9:30, but the audience waited patiently and were glad indeed that they did wait. The 57th Regiment Band met the visiting musicians at the station playing Sousa' march "El Capitan" as the train arrived. The 57th band occupied seats in the boxes during the concert.

The complete programme follows:

Symphonic Poem, "Les Preludes" Liszt

INSPECTOR-GENERAL REPORTS ON THE STATE OF CANADIAN FORCES

There is Too Much Heavy Artillery and Infantry, and Not Enough Field Artillery or Engineers.

PROPORTION NOT GOOD

Ottawa, Nov. 23.—The Minister of Militia yesterday made public the report of Sir John French, inspector-general of the Imperial forces, upon the Canadian militia. In his summary he says:

"The full measure of service and obligation which a volunteer, whether officer or private, takes upon himself, must be exacted. In a force raised and maintained on a volunteer system, nothing less than this will do, and anything less will mean inefficiency, failure, and, at last, disaster. According to my judgment, those important requirements are not fulfilled.

"I may summarize the principal shortcomings as lying in an inefficiently developed organization, inadequate knowledge in the higher command, in the test qualification for officers and non-commissioned officers of the active militia, laid down in the regulations, not being strictly enforced, and in the rank and file not being compelled to fulfill their engagements. Only when the regulations which govern the constitution and maintenance of the Canadian militia are strictly enforced, will it be possible to say whether the present system meets the defensive requirements of the country or not.

"Judging from what I have seen of the excellent material, and the fine spirit which is apparent in all the ranks, and taking into consideration the marked progress which has been made in the past few years, and the evident signs of its continuance, I should be inclined to think that, so long as the present condition of affairs on the North American continent remains as it is, the existing system, on a sound basis of peace organization, should suffice to meet the needs of the Dominion.

"We live, however, in times of great change and progress, and it behooves the intelligence department to keep a sharp eye upon the course of events, so that the Government may be kept au courant with any military changes in other countries, which necessitates consideration of a more drastic military system on the part of Canada.

"I may mention that, in the course of my tour of inspection, I have seen several bodies of cadets. The movement seems to be making good progress throughout the Dominion, and I have been struck by the fine physique and training of the boys, and their smart and soldierlike bearing on parade.

Sir John French begins by emphasizing that a sound system of organization is the cornerstone of all military efficiency, and he adds that "no amount of superior physique, armament or individual excellence, in either commanders, staff, or bodies of troops will compensate for a want of it."

He criticizes the Canadian organization on two lines. The proportion between the various arms of the service is not correctly adjusted. There is too much infantry and heavy artillery, and only half as much field artillery as is advisable, while the engineers and supply services are too weak, the distribution of troops is faulty.

He submits with this a scheme of organization which shows a shortage of

One regiment of cavalry.
One battery of horse artillery.
Twenty batteries of artillery.
Eight field troops of engineers.
Five field companies of engineers.
Four telegraph detachments.
And numerous units of army service corps and medical corps.

Gen. French next advocates the drawing up of a sound scheme of mobilization, which would include the establishment of a railway war council, presided over by the chief of the general staff, and including amongst its members the managers of representatives of the railway companies of Canada.

In this connection he says: "The work of completing the arrangements for speedy mobilization, of providing or ensuring the provision of transport, equipment, stores and supplies; of preparing the necessary regulations and instructions and of drawing up tables, showing the war equipment of all units, is a labor of very considerable magnitude. In the Imperial army, for the United Kingdom alone, this work has occupied the undivided attention of five or six officers for nearly twenty years, while the duty of keeping the arrangements, now thoroughly decentralized, up to date, entails continuous work upon all officers of the army, both staff and regimental.

"A great portion of the work thus accomplished is available for the guidance of Canadian officers, and the problem to be solved is, on the whole, simpler for the Dominion. But the conclusion is unavoidable that the number of officers available for this duty at militia headquarters, and in the several military districts, is now, and apparently always has been, far too small to cope successfully with the task.

"So far as I can judge, the preparation of a suitable mobilization scheme would require the undivided attention of at least two general staff officers and one administrative staff officer at headquarters, and of one administrative officer in each military district. When the scheme is completed, it is probable that the services of two of the officers at headquarters could be dispensed with, but for the proper maintenance of mobilization arrangements, the remaining additional officers must be permanently maintained. The staff at present maintained at headquarters and in the commands appears to me absurdly inadequate in numbers to deal successfully with the numbers of problems which require its attention."

Remedies are Needed

Were we perfect, which we are not, medicines would not often be needed. But since our systems have become weakened, impaired and broken down through indiscretions which have gone on from the early ages, through countless generations, remedies are needed to aid Nature in correcting our inherited and otherwise acquired weaknesses. To reach the seat of stomach weakness and consequent digestive troubles, there is nothing so good as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a glyceric compound, extracted from native medicinal roots—sold for over forty years with great satisfaction to all users. For Weak Stomach, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Pain in the Stomach after eating, Heartburn, Bad Breath, Belching of food, Chronic Diarrhea and other Intestinal Derangements, the "Discovery" is a time-proven and most efficient remedy.

The genuine has on its outside wrapper the signature of R. V. Pierce, M.D.

You can't afford to accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this non-alcoholic, medicine of known composition, and even though the urgent dealer may thereby gain a little bigger profit.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules, easy to take as candy.

EXCITING DEBATE

Remark by Mr. Gauvreau Left Over From Yesterday Is Withdrawn by That Gentleman, But Mr. Monk Is Not Satisfied and Goes Outside to Settle It by Fisticuffs —Repudiates the Speeches.

Ottawa, Nov. 23.—The resumed debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne took on a belligerent complexion yesterday, W. F. Maclean, member for South York, made a speech, in which he repudiated the recent campaign by the Nationalists in Drummond and Arthabaska as unpatriotic. He urged the Government to adopt the principle of Government ownership in regard to the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway, and urged the need for a Department of Public Communications.

F. D. Monk (Jacques Cartier), who followed, defended the Nationalist campaign, and Hon. L. P. Brodeur taunted the Nationalists with extracts from their speeches. The debate was lively, interesting, and at times spectacular.

At the opening Mr. Speaker announced that he had observed in Hansard a remark attributed to Mr. Gauvreau (Temiscouata), accusing F. D. Monk of lying.

Mr. Gauvreau said he would withdraw the expression if it was unparliamentary.

Mr. Monk rose with evident anger and stated that he had not heard the expression. However, he did not like the form of his hon. friend's withdrawal. If his hon. friend would step outside the House and repeat the remark face to face, he would now give an opportunity.

Mr. Monk then walked slowly and deliberately out of the chamber. It was a direct challenge to Mr. Gauvreau to proceed to the lobby and eat humble pie or be chastized. He sat still. The members smiled.

Mr. F. D. Monk touched lightly on the charge that the men of his school had wandered from the teachings of the Conservative party. They were rather the traditional successors of the Liberal-Conservative party, which stood for complete autonomy if they stood for anything. He moved the following amendment to the address:

"That this House regards that the speech from the throne gives no indication whatever of the intention of the Government to consult the people on its naval policy, or on the great question of the contribution of Canada to Imperial armaments."

After the speaker had put the motion, E. W. Tobin read a telegram from Notary Begin of Windsor Mills, who was alleged to have said that the Canadian navy might be used to pound England, denying it.

Hon. L. P. Brodeur followed, but, after speaking for half an hour, moved the adjournment of the debate. He expressed regret that the naval policy enunciated in 1909 by the two parties had not been adhered to. That was the patriotic policy, but the Conservatives had chosen to depart from it because it would be to their advantage.

He read extracts from speeches appearing in La Devoir, which were attributed to Mr. Blondin. An appeal was made to prejudice, on the ground that the men who dismembered the forefathers of the French-Canadians now sought to have the latter fight for them.

Mr. Blondin rose in his place and emphatically denied making the speech.

Amid Liberal cheers the Minister of Marine continued to read:

"It's false," cried Mr. Blondin, "absolutely false." Again he said: "I deny every word of it. I never knew a word of it until yesterday."

The uproar continued, cheer followed by counter cheer, until the Speaker could not be heard. When silence was restored, Mr. Brodeur challenged Mr. Foster with sending to The Montreal Herald a telegram containing the sentence "Anything to beat Laurier."

"Read the telegram," cried the member for North Toronto.

"I haven't a copy, but I can get one in a minute," Mr. Brodeur replied, as he continued his criticism.

"Read the telegram," insisted Mr. Foster, and a messenger was despatched.

Sir Wilfrid couldn't find the telegram on the file, and as the House was getting unruly, Mr. Brodeur referred to the lateness of the hour and moved the adjournment of the debate.

In the Senate yesterday Senator Roche of Halifax moved the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Senator Belcourt, who seconded, welcomed Senator Laverrie to the Upper House. Speaking of the navy question, he said the object of those who wanted a plebiscite was to avoid the question. He refused, however, to believe that even the opponents of the navy wished that Canada should not undertake her proper national defence.

Presentation to Bank Manager.

Woodstock, Nov. 23.—E. W. Wand, who has been promoted to the inspectorship of the Molson Bank at Montreal, after managing the branch here for some years, was last night waited upon by many prominent citizens and presented with a gold watch and chain, and an illuminated address. Mrs. Wand was presented with a cabinet of sterling silver.

We go to all parts of the world for the wonderful ingredients of Psychine (pronounced Si-keen). We combine these ingredients in the finest chemical laboratories in Canada, and so great is our 30-year-old faith in this preparation that we'll buy a 50-cent bottle of it from your druggist and give it to you to try.

For nearly the third of a century we have known what Psychine will do. We have known it to cure hundreds of thousands in that time, of some of the most desperate cases of disease known to medical science.

We have received thousands of unsolicited testimonials, which we will gladly let you look over should you desire.

Think of it, a third of a century's experience with one preparation, a third of a century's intimate knowledge of what extraordinary cures it has made—almost a lifetime!

Do you wonder then with that perfect knowledge of Psychine, that we are anxious to bring it to the notice of everyone in Canada suffering from disease?

Do you wonder that we want those to know who are using wrong methods of cure, who are not getting well, and who we know will be benefited by Psychine.

Do you wonder that we can buy hundreds of thousands of 50-cent bottles of Psychine from the druggists of Canada to give to those who wish to try it?

Psychine builds vitality.

It strengthens and increases the white corpuscles of the blood—the phagocytes, the policemen or scavengers of the blood.

These white corpuscles of the blood, when strong enough, destroy every disease germ that gets into the body, keeps the body healthy.

If these white corpuscles are not in sufficient numbers or are not sufficiently strong, then these disease germs destroy them and disease holds the body. That's the cause of nearly every disease that afflicts the human race. For years, centuries, in fact, it has been recognized that herbs are the most effective treatment for disease.

It is only within recent times that we have been able to tell just why they were so effective.

Because certain of them increased and strengthened the white corpuscles or phagocytes.

These herbs are employed in compounding Psychine.

We go all over this world to obtain these herbs. Arabia, South America, China and Japan all contribute.

And the result is a preparation that will restore health and build vitality as no other preparation will.

That has proven itself in nearly the third of a century's use as no other preparation has proven itself.

That is a most effective treatment for:

La Grippe	Bronchial Coughs
Bronchitis	Weak Lungs
Hemorrhages	Weak Voice
Sore Throat	Spring Weakness
Anaemia	Early Decline
Female Weakness	Catarrhal Affections
Indigestion	Catarrh of Stomach
Poor Appetite	Night Sweats
Chills and Fevers	Obstinate Coughs
Sleeplessness and Nervous Troubles	Laryngitis and Dyspepsia
After-effects of Pleurisy, Pneumonia and La Grippe.

Now we don't ask you to take our word for the tremendously beneficial effect of Psychine. Fill out the coupon below, mail it to us and we'll give your druggist an order (for which we pay him the regular retail price) for a 50-cent bottle of Psychine to be given you free of cost.

We will undoubtedly buy and distribute in this manner hundreds of thousands of these 50-cent bottles of Psychine.

And we do that to show our entire confidence in this wonderful preparation.

A confidence that has been based on our 30 years' experience with this splendid preparation, with a full knowledge of the hundreds of thousands of cures it has made.

Could Not Rest at Night.

Back Was So Weak.

Weak, lame and aching backs are the primary cause of kidney trouble. When the back aches or becomes weak it is a warning from the kidneys that everything is not right with them.

Heed the warning: cure the weak, lame, aching back and dispose of any chances of further trouble.

If you don't do this, serious complications are very apt to arise and the first thing you know you will be troubled with Dropsy, Diabetes or Bright's Disease, the three most deadly forms of Kidney Trouble.

On the first sign of anything wrong Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken. They go to the seat of the trouble and strengthen the kidneys, thereby strengthening the back.

Mrs. John Pugh, Parkdale, Man., writes:—"I have used Doan's Kidney Pills and find nothing to beat them. I could not rest at night my back was so weak. I tried everything, but could not get anything to do me any good until I was told by a friend to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I tried them and I am not the same weak woman I was before. I am very thankful to have found so speedy a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

RECEIVES A BLACK HAND LETTER

(Lindsay Post.)

Mr. B. J. Gough has been the recipient of a black hand letter, and the writer makes the usual demand for money under a threat to kill and destroy property if such is not produced. The letter is written on a piece of pink paper, and there are two daggers sketched crosswise on the face of the epistle, which reads as follows:

Mr. Gough: I have been sent by the president of our society to demand of you One Hundred Dollars ($100.00.) If you refuse all your property shall be burned. If you dare to consult with the police or anybody, you will be killed by a man who has figured in many of the leading murders.

You are to leave the money under a long, box-like covering over a switch at Santiago, which is a siding of the G.T.R. east of the iron bridge. You cannot miss this for it is about 3 rods long. At the beginning of this structure you will find a tin box in which you will put the money. Make sure nobody is looking, for you suffer if I don't get the $1.00. I give you till Monday. Go out at six in the morning. Twenty $5 bills, sir.

BLACK HAND SOCIEY.
"Ad Verbis ad Verberu."

P. S.—Make sure where the tin is. Look under the south side.

Mr. Gough has secured the services of a private detective, who has succeeded in tracing the author of the epistle. Developments may be expected in a few days.

The pulpit at Murray street Baptist church on Sunday will be occupied by Dr. E. M. Keirstead, of Toronto, who it will be remembered, addressed two hundred men at a banquet at Murray street church two years ago. Dr. Keirstead is an interesting and eloquent speaker and large congregations should avail themselves of the opportunity to hear him.

REVIVAL SERVICES AT MARK ST. CHURCH

The service last night at the Mark street church was one of special interest and blessing. Evangelist Whiteside based his discourse upon God's word to Noah, found in Gen. 7: 1, "And the Lord said unto Noah, come thou and all thy house into the ark." He dealt with the text as it stood related to the whole story of the flood, and the rescue of righteous Noah and his family, and found in it a terrible illustration of the damning of sin, and also the merciful attitude of God toward such as seek to know Him.

A choir of 45 occupied the platform, some 25 of whom were from St. James' church, and the joyousness and volume of their song produced a most profound impression. Special music again this evening.

AN ASSAULT CASE

Magistrate Dumble heard the particulars of an assault charge at the police court this morning, as the result of a verbal argument between two milk vendours, which eventually reached a fistic combat. The stories of the complainant and defendant differed as to which had been the aggressor and the Magistrate, unable to settle that point from the evidence before him, dismissed the case.

MARRIAGE IS A GAMBLE SAYS OCTOGENARIAN

Special to the Examiner.

DENVER, NOV. 19.—Levi M. Smith, eight-six years old, father of a half score of children, who has buried two wives and is being sued for separate maintenance by his third, a woman aged sixty-five, says: "If I had to live my life all over again I would do just as I did—marry. Marriage is a gamble, but I have no regrets, though I cannot imagine why my wife should have filed this suit against me. The unwarranted interference of her children in our affairs destroyed our happiness. There could be no other cause."

Smith, the man who started the first bank at Golden, and who negotiated with David H. Moffat in the early days to enter into the banking business in Denver, but could not agree upon the terms, shows but little evidence of the march of years. Time has dealt tenderly with him.

Smith has amassed property estimated at $150,000 since his residence in Colorado. He says that the children of his wife by her former marriage are desirous of securing a portion of it, hence the suit for separate maintenance, he declares.

Smith first married a Miss Cook in Pennsylvania in 1842. She lived to be about sixty years of age and bore him eight children. Then Smith married his wife's sister, who had been their housekeeper for a number of years. There were three children resulting from this union, the second Mrs. Smith also passing away. The present Mrs. Smith was a widow of a brother of the two former Mrs. Smiths. She had eight children from her first marriage.

In 1900 Mrs. Cook, the widow, was residing in Rochester, N.Y. Smith wrote and asked her to join her fortunes with his. Mrs. Smith agreed, and Smith sent her $50 to defray expenses to Denver. Mrs. Cook wrote back she was very sorry she could not come as she intended, as one of her daughters was about to be married and she would have to wait until after the ceremony.

Smith and one of his sons then went to Wilkes-Barre, Pa., from where he again wrote to Mrs. Cook, telling her to meet him at the depot in that city if she still wished to become his wife. Mrs. Cook answered in person, and the nuptials were celebrated August 22, 1900.

Mrs. Smith alleges cruelty, but does not ask a divorce. She demands an equable division of the property, $1,000 attorney's fee, $100 court costs, and $100 a month alimony during the pendency of the action. Mrs. Smith alleges her husband has been penurious in his conduct toward her, and also avers he had a notice placed in the newspapers warning the public he would not be responsible for bills she might contract. They separated August 2. Smith lives at 2,521 Clarkson Street.

MRS. SCHENK AGREED TO PAY NURSE $1,000 DETECTIVE TELLS STORY

Special to The Examiner.

WHEELING, W., VA., NOV. 19.—From the Grand Jurors who indicted Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk on the charge of administering poison to her husband, John O. Schenk, the millionaire pork packer, for the purpose of causing his death, to-day was learned the character of the evidence that was submitted to them yesterday. There were but three witnesses, Dr. Frank Le Moyne Hupp, the attending physician; Miss Evans, a nurse; and Miss Kline, the detective nurse.

Miss Kline testified she first told Mrs. Schenk her husband might die at any time, and the latter instructed her that when he did to make a rush for his trousers the first thing and get the bunch of keys which unlocked the safety deposit vault at the bank containing his stocks and bonds, because if her husband's brothers got it she would get nothing. Mrs. Schenk also told her that nothing would please her more than if her husband did die.

The detective nurse suggested that Mrs. Schenk give her husband "knock-out drops." She asked $5,000. Mrs. Schenk said she did not have that much, but agreed to pay her $1,000 and to see she would never want if she administered the pill. Mrs. Schenk went in search of the pill, telling the nurse she had failed at all places she tried, but she was still seeking it when arrested. Mrs. Schenk told Miss Kline that if her husband died she would be the happiest woman in the world.

Miss Evans, the other nurse, told of how Schenk vomited every time he drank the lithia water. Her suspicions were aroused, and she drank some of the water herself. It had the same effect on her. She told also of comparisons of the wine and cascara. Mrs. Schenk had for her husband with bottles she had bought herself at the drug store and of the contrasts in the color. There was a strange sediment in the bottom of the bottle of carcara. This bottle is in the hands of the State and the sediment is yet to be analyzed.

Dr. Hupp told of sending two pints of the water away to different institutions and of each coming back with the same analysis, that each contained one grain of arsenic.

DYSPEPSIA Can Be Cured.

This disease is the all prevailing malady of civilized life, and one which oftenest baffles all ordinary treatment. It gives rise to a great variety of distressing symptoms, such as distress after eating, rising and souring of food, wind in the stomach, heartburn, etc.

Nearly everything that enters a weak dyspeptic stomach acts as an irritant; hence the great difficulty of effecting a cure.

The long train of distressing symptoms, which render life a burden to the victim of dyspepsia, may be promptly cured by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters.

B.B.B. regulates the stomach, liver and bowels, stimulates secretion of the saliva and gastric juice to facilitate digestion, purifies the blood, and tones up the entire system.

Mrs. Hermann Dickens, Benton, N.B., writes: "I have used Burdock Blood Bitters and find that few medicines can give such relief in dyspepsia and stomach troubles. I was troubled for a number of years with dyspepsia, and could get no relief until I tried Burdock Blood Bitters. I took three bottles and became cured, and I can now eat anything without it hurting me. I will highly recommend it to all who are troubled with stomach trouble."

He was surprised at how the sores healed—"I took your New Method Treatment for a serious blood disease with which I had been afflicted for twelve years. I had consulted a score of physicians taken all kinds of blood medicine, visited Hot Springs and other mineral water resorts but only got temporary relief. They could help me for a time, but after discontinuing the medicines the symptoms would break out again—running sores, blotches, rheumatic pains, looseness of the hair, swellings of the glands, palms of the hands scaling, itchiness of the skin, dyspeptic stomach etc. I had given up in despair when a friend advised me to consult you, as you had cured him of a similar disease 6 years ago. I had no hope, but took his advice. In three weeks' time the sores commenced to heal up and I became encouraged. I continued the New Method Treatment for four months and at the end of that time every symptom had disappeared. I was cured 7 years ago and no signs of any disease since. 30 Years of Success

The E. M. Hyde Co. Offer a Remedy for Catarrh. The Medicine Costs Nothing if it Fails

When a medicine effects a successful treatment in a very large majority of cases, and when we offer that medicine on our own personal guarantee that it will cost the user nothing if it does not completely relieve catarrh, it is only reasonable that people should believe us, or at least put our claim to a practical test when we take all the risk. These are facts which we want the people to substantiate. We want them to try Rexall Mucu-Tone, a medicine prepared from a prescription of a physician with whom catarrh was a speciality, and who has a record of thirty years of enviable success to his record.

We receive more good reports about Rexall Mucu-Tone than we do of all other catarrh remedies sold in our store, and if more people only knew what a thoroughly dependable remedy Rexall Mucu-Tone is, it would be the only catarrh remedy we would have any demand for.

Rexall Mucu-Tone is quickly absorbed and by its therapeutic effect tends to disinfect and cleanse the entire mucous membraneous tract, to destroy and remove the parasites which injure the membraneous tissues, to sooth the irritation and heal the soreness, stop themucous discharge, build up strong healthy tissue and relieve the blood and system of diseased matter. Its influence is toward stimulating the muco-cells aiding digestion and improving nutrition until the whole body vibrates with healthy activity. In a comparatively short time it brings about a noticeable gain in weight, strength, good color and feeling of buoyancy.

We urge you to try Rexall Mucu-Tone, beginning a treatment today. At any time you are not satisfied, simply come and tell us, and we will quickly return your money without question or quibble. We have Rexall Mucu-Tone in two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Peterborough only at our store,—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte street.

HARDWARE CONVENTION

At the convention of the Ontario Retail Hardware and Stove Dealers' Association, which is to be held in this city from Tuesday until Friday, Feb. 21 to 24, 1911, it is expected that there will be an attendance of about 360 retailers and 250 travellers representing manufacturing and jobbing concerns.

The Armories will be divided into booths, having twelve feet frontage on aisle and ten feet deep. There are 72 of these booths and at present time only one remains unsold. Several manufacturers have taken double spaces and altogether about sixty firms will make exhibits. Many of these exhibits will be educational, not only to visiting hardwaremen, but also to residents of our city, and arrangements will be made to allow the public to view the exhibition. Most of the lines on display are sold by the retail hardware and stove men in Peterborough, and wholesales will not be made at the exhibition orders will be taken for special lines for delivery through the local retailers. Demonstrations will be made of the methods of using the various articles exhibited. A feature of the exhibition will be a "Made in Peterborough" hardware show, one end of the hall having been engaged by the following firms: Rapid Tool Company, Lundy Shovel and Tool Co., Peterborough Lock Co., J. J. Turner and Sons, B. F. Ackerman and the Peterborough Canoe Co. Adam Hall may also make a display of the products of his stove foundry.

The Exhibition will be open from nine to twelve each morning, and from 4.30 to 6.00 on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. The convention meeting will be held each afternoon from 1.30 to 4.30 Tuesday afternoon in the Collegiate Institute, and Wednesday and Thursday afternoon in the Band room in the armories.

On Tuesday night the 57th Regiment Band will give a concert in the Armories. Another band concert will be given on Wednesday.

On Wednesday night, the public will be admitted to the Armories on payment of a nominal fee of 10c. On Wednesday night the retailers will meet in the Collegiate Institute, and hold a Question Box discussion on methods of conducting a hardware business. On Thursday night retailers, travellers, and exhibitors will hold a social evening in the Collegiate hall, an orchestra being present together with a company of entertainers a programme being arranged by Mr Gliddon, Musical Director of the 57th Regiment Band. Messrs. Morgan, Kingan and Higgins are members of the committee in charge of the social evening.

During the Convention five window dressing competitions will be arranged, the exhibits being made in the windows of the hardware and stove stores in Peterborough, and the displays being arranged by hardware merchants and clerks from outside points in competition with local window trimmers. Five prizes of $10.00 each are offered by the Association for the best display of hardware, stoves, paints, tools, sporting goods and cutlery.

The Peterborough Hardware manufacturers are to name hours in the morning when their plants will be open for inspection by the visiting retailers. The hardware manufacturers, with members of the City Council, are also expected to make up a Reception Committee to meet visiting hardwaremen at the depot, and see that they secure hotel accommodation. To assist in this work a map of the city has been prepared, showing the loc.. of the various hotels, hardware factor.., and retail ..ness establishments.

That the Convention and Exhibition are to be great affairs can be best judged by the fact that only one of the 72 annexes in the Exhibition hall remains unsold, and there are several firms in correspondence regarding this space. Considering that it is three months from this date that the Convention is to be held this condition is rather remarkable.

GIGANTIC STATION AT MONTREAL

Special to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, NOV. 23.—It was stated at the C.P.R. to-day that the new annex now being built at the Windsor street headquarters would have a sixteen-story tower, rising 280 feet from the foundations to the top of the flagstaff. Rapid progress is being made on the work, and over a thousand tons of structural steel have already been riveted up. Five hundred men are engaged and steel is being placed at the rate of 300 tons a week. Work will continue all winter and it is expected the steel will be finished by April, when the stonework will be started. It is expected that the whole work will be finished by the end of 1912, when the station will be one of the very big railway terminals of the world.

BRAZILIAN SAILORS REVOLT AND THEN BOMBARD CITY

Dispute Over Wages Resulted in Mutiny---Captain of Dreadnought Killed---Fight Between Fortifications and Ships---British Fleet Ordered There.

Special Wire to the Examiner.

RIO JANIERO, BRAZIL, NOV. 24.—The Captain of Brazilian Dreadnought, "Minas Geroes," was killed, together with several officers, and for a time a warm bombardment of this show city of the southern seas was kept up, when the crews of the Brazilian fleet in the harbour mutined, following a dispute about wages. There was a pitched battle between the fortifications of the city and the fleet in the harbour, considerable damage being done to both and the casualities were heavy. The British fleet has been ordered here to protect English and Canadian interests. The leaders of the mutineers are now under arrest.

LONDON, ENG., NOV. 24.—A private cable this afternoon asserts that the mutineers have turned the tide, and are again in possession of the entire fleet in the harbour. Vigorous fighting, with many casualties, is going on between land fortifications mostly in Sao Paulos tramway, consassumed charge of the situation, but efforts to placate the mutineers were unavailing. They claim freedom from the tyrannical rule of petty officers, as well as higher pay.

Nearly twenty-five millions of Canadian money are invested in Brazil, mostly in Sao Paul's tramway, controlled largely by William Mackenzie.

CRUISING IN FRANCE WITH PETERBOROUGH CANOES

In the "Touring Club de France," (received by the Peterborough Canoe Company), there is in it an interesting recital of a "Canoe cruise in the "Gapet." This craft, according to the writer, is a Peterborough cedar-rib (cotes en cedre) canoe; and the writer is strong in his praise of the lightness, tightness and staunchness of the craft, which is described as a "veritable passe partout," "gliding sweetly" (glissant doucement), in only a few inches of water—fifteen centimetres—about five inches, though the total weight carried "passengers et equipment"—was 198 kilos or about 435 pounds, in a canoe 4.50 metres, about fifteen feet, in length. The writer is evidently an enthusiastic admirer of the Peterborough canoe, as he not only tils of what it can do, but gives in his story minute details of its mode of construction.

MR. DUGGAN MADE SOME INQUIRIES

It may be interesting to Peterborough people to know that Industrial Commissioner Duggan was in communication with the now famous Mr. David Burton Thomas, the enterprising young gentleman who was to present Lindsay with a factory employing 300 hands, a tannery with employment for 50 more and other things. Mr. Duggan, however, took some precautions that the people of Lindsay apparently neglected. He wrote at once to Cleveland for information, and his letter came back with the intimation that there was no such firm as the Thomas Shoe Company.

TWO SICKLY CHILDREN

Made Well by Vinol—Letters From Grateful Mothers

New Haven, Conn.—"My little girl ever since her birth was frail and sickly and nothing seemed to do her any good, until we tried your cod liver and iron tonic, Vinol. As soon as she commenced to take it, I noticed an improvement in her health and appearance. She has now taken three bottles of Vinol and from the good it has done her I can say it will do all you claim for it in building up and strengthening frail and delicate children." (Name furnished on request).

Another mother of Chicago, Ill., writes: "My little girl was thin, rundown, pale and without any appetite,—she has rosy cheeks and has gained rapidly in flesh and strength.

"I cannot say too much in praise of Vinol for delicate, ailing children."

We ask every mother of a frail, sickly or ailing child in this vicinity to try Vinol on our agreement to return their money if it does not do all we claim.—McDermid & Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets, also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

THE

Are you aware that almost everyone is equipped with unequal eyes? That is to say, the right is stronger than the left, or vice versa. We rarely realize this, because the stronger eye takes upon itself all the work—and the weaker one scarcely ever attempts to do anything.

NATURE'S INEVITABLE LAW!

Every organ or faculty which is not made use of for a considerable length of time, becomes gradually but surely useless. And this is the effect on the eyes; work keeps the strong eye in good order, but lack of work causes the other to grow worse.

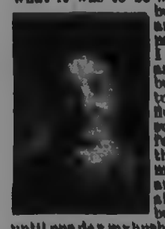
AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her.

Toronto, Canada.—"I shall endeavor to describe to you how I felt before I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I scarcely knew what it was to be well. I had awful bearing-down pains and usually before my monthly periods I suffered terribly and had to go to bed. I was not able to walk across the floor the pain was so bad. I doctored for a long time, but the doctor's treatment did not do me any good. I gave up all hopes of ever being well again until one day my husband saw the Compound advertised in the paper. He decided to get me a bottle, and I am thankful he did. I had not taken one bottle before I began to feel better, and I kept on taking it until now I am a different woman. It also helped me during maternity and childbirth. I can thoroughly recommend your Vegetable Compound to any woman who is afflicted with female troubles."—Mrs. J. M. TWEEDALE, 128 Nassau St., Toronto, Canada.



The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing down feeling, flatulency, indigestion dizziness, or nervous prostration

THE GREAT CONSPIRACY.

The revelations made in the House of Commons Tuesday night by Hon. Mr. Brodeur regarding the plan of campaign followed in Quebec during the past summer are clinching proofs of the existence of a great conspiracy to "beat Laurier by any means," no matter how scandalous.

As the Minister of Marine unravelled the story of the Bourassa-Monk combination, and suggested that the latter had entered into a compact with his Ontario allies to "beat Laurier by any means," the House began to realize how desperate was the character of the campaign which followed. It was significant that there were Conservatives from the West who did not hesitate to cheer the revelations scandalous as they were, and though at home they pose as Imperialists they did not fail to cheer Mr. Monk when he admitted that he and his allies had on every platform in the campaign told the people that conscription would be the result of the naval bill.

Mr. Foster, too, took a delight in the revelations. He did not apparently see anything particularly wrong in the plan of campaign, unpatriotic and dangerous to national peace though it has been. With him, it is a case of "anything to beat Laurier," and he is not ashamed of having gloried in the success of the Nationalist candidate in Drummond and Arthabaska.

It is true that Mr. Monk and Mr. Blondin denied that they had personally used some of the statements imputed to them, but their denials were too much in the shape of deathbed repentances to be convincing, and in the case of the latter he had to confess that even if he did not himself use the anti-British sentiments imputed to him by his own party organs and Le Devoir, he stood by and let them be said without protest.

The revelations are not yet all made Mr. Brodeur has not finished his speech, Dr. Beland has to tell his personal experiences of the campaign, and so have other Liberal members who participated in it; but when the record is complete, it will be the most disgraceful which has ever marked the political history of any British country, and its effect will surely be to react upon the men who were responsible for the inflammatory appeals to racial and religious prejudices.—Ottawa Free Press.

A LESSON TO OURSELVES.

Lindsay is a shining example of the capability and foresight at the head of necessity of having men with business municipal affairs, not only to promote the benefit of the people but to prevent the town being carried away bodily, by swindlers. A smooth spoken stranger came to that town and said he wanted to establish a big industry in Lindsay, a big branch of a big industry in Cleveland. He was taken at his face value, without investigation, and his proposal was acted upon. It is stated that the town provided a site for a factory building and that a contract was awarded, excavation actually begun and material placed upon the ground. It is also stated that a boom appeared; that in a few days, more real estate changed hands than in years past. Then the bubble burst, the whole scheme was a "plant."

Lindsay is disappointed over the failure of its hopes, and much indignation is felt over being so easily swindled. But nothing else could have been expected from the deplorable lack of business aptitude shown. No inquiry was made, or the whole thing would have been nipped in the bud. Peterborough's industrial commissioner, when he heard that Lindsay had such a rosy offer, wrote to the "D. R. Thomas Glove and Shoe Company," to point out the superiority of Peterborough as a location. Yesterday, after a considerable delay his undelivered letter was returned—there is no such company in Cleveland.

The astonishing but instructive feature of the whole affair is the utter lack of business principles employed. If the Lindsay authorities had had enough business capacity to run a corner grocery, they would have made some inquiry before committing themselves. The instructive part of the affair consists in its impressing the necessity of some system of municipal management that will provide business capacity, some system of electing men who have some rudiments of business ability. Would any set of business men in any responsible position have done such a foolish thing as was done in Lindsay? Would they have failed to make inquiry? Would a body of business men like, say, our Water Commissioners, have lent themselves blindly to such an insane course of action as is said to have been taken in Lindsay.

The incident shows that some improvement can be made in the choice of representatives to whom to entrust our interests. It is an argument in favour of municipal government by commission. It is inconceivable that such things could happen and a thousand other things not in the interests of a corporation, if we had a board of commissioners, composed of live business men, who would be chosen solely on the ground of their business ability and not on the account of some little personal or ward pull they were able to exercise.

The trouble lies deeper than the mode of electing civic representatives. It comes back upon the ratepayers themselves. They show an utter lack of interest in the way things are done. They vote at random, they elect men at random, and it is no surprise that things are done at random by the men they select, especially when almost annual and almost complete change of representatives takes place, preventing the adoption of any continuous and effective policy.

The first thing needed is to arouse the public to the conditions, to a sense of their responsibility. If we are to have government by the people, the people must do their share. They must waken themselves to the duty of taking a deeper interest in municipal matters, a deeper interest in the way things are done or not done, a deeper interest in selecting the best men to whom to intrust the protection of their interests. A careless, go-as-you-please constituency, is sure to beget a careless, go-as-you-please representation. We must devise some way to enlist the people. When the present King returned from a visit to the Dominions beyond the seas, his words were, "Wake up, England!" "Wake up, Peterborough" should be the companion slogan to "Peterborough has Possibilities Unparalleled." Our "possibilities" will not be worth a straw unless we can provide business management of our affairs to give them effect—an effect they are not at present receiving; to provide for a continuance of policy. We must devise some plan to wake public interest. We must get the people to pinch themselves to see if they are awake. For aroused public opinion is a force that must be behind the accomplishment of better things.

The people of Peterborough must get together and pull together. We have disintegrating elements at work to imperil our national life and we must keep together in Peterborough to secure promotion of our own interests. The people must act, if they secure, an able and effective management of their affairs—if they get things done that everybody agrees should be done.

If municipal government by commission is the better way, why not try it? We have tried the ward system and the results were not satisfactory. We tried the election-at-large system and added to it two year aldermanic terms, but before we had given it a trial we fell back upon the discredited ward system. Individual aldermen are not all to blame for unsatisfactory conditions. They cannot formulate a definite policy of public improvement that will be continuous for they are not continuous themselves. They have no guarantee that they will be in Council the next year—they may be displaced by some incompetent aspirant who can exercise enough ward pull or church pull or lodge pull to get elected, thus displacing a good man with an incompetent. We need something better: permanency, say, commissioners who will be chosen for three year terms, for their capability; something like a catalogue of specific civic policy and provide means for carrying it out; and we should provide that such a policy, if it is endorsed by the people as being in their interests, should be adopted by his successors, pledged to that end. Now, we are simply drifting, a changing policy every year. Let us try to get an improvement. Let the people reflect that the greatest advance we are making seems to be the advance in the rate of taxation.

Paradoxical Policies, Or "Anything To Beat Laurier"

(The Globe.)

The Chinaman who commits suicide on his enemy's doorstep to occasion annoyance and inconvenience, exemplifies the course of Dominion Opposition, evidently willing to commit political suicide if the Government may thereby be embarrassed. It is political suicide for a party to encourage a number of utterly irreconcilable attitudes and agitations. Such a course not only multiplies the difficulties of governing a country of diverse interests and sentiments, but absolutely unfits the party adopting it for the duty of governing. The alliance of the military Imperialists of Toronto, who would make Canada an armed camp possessing an irresponsible appendage of the British navy, with the Nationalists of Quebec, who object to even the reasonable strengthening of the coast defence force carried out by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, is clearly an effort of political suicide to embarrass the Government. The party playing to the one vote in one place and the other vote in another can certainly make the task of administration more difficult. That may be a matter of merely passing importance, but it also helps to widen and perpetuate a cleavage that all Canadians should endeavour to heal. At the same time the party utterly unfits itself for the task of governing by making its component elements irreconcilable.

The same course has been carried into a more dangerous field in the combination of free traders in the West and ultra-protectionists in the East. Such a combination is political suicide for the party effecting it. It would be utterly impossible to form a Government out of such materially antagonistic elements. Yet for the sake of embarrassing the Government there is an attempt to use the antagonistic forces. That there is design in this scheme is shown by Mr. Borden's ingenious endorsation of the western demand for free agricultural implements as a claim entitled to consideration. Of course every claim of a taxpayer on his government is entitled to consideration. That means nothing, but it shows a determination to include two elements in Opposition that would be utterly irreconcilable in a Government. The Winnipeg Telegram, a Conservative newspaper, makes a demand for free lumber and free farm implements, and advances the extraordinary and ridiculous claim that such a change would have been promoted by the retention of the Conservative party in power. The promise is held out to the farmers of the prairie country that the Conservative party if returned to power would lower or abolish the duties on farm implements and dressed lumber. In the East Mr. Borden's chief supporters are the champions of higher duties on all manufactured goods. Thus his party makes itself impossible and commits political suicide to create difficulties for the party in office.

The Conservative party in Canada is the party of high protection both by tradition and by a lack of economic understanding. Leading Conservatives believed the protection theories when in office and do so yet. They made every advance asked by interested parties because they saw only one side of the question involved and fancied they were thus conferring benefits on the people as a whole. The inevitable result was the stagnation of 1891-96, for which they had no remedy to offer but an aggravation of the obvious cause. They helplessly left an entanglement of difficult economic problems for the Liberals to solve. The country is already enjoying the fruits of Liberal success, but much still remains to be accomplished. Needed changes can be effected safely only by men of comprehensive views and clear economic understanding. The leader who encourages diametrically opposite attitudes among his followers to catch numerical support is certainly unsafe, and his following cannot be depended upon. Those who urge further tariff reductions and those who see the necessity of caution in dealing with established conditions should not make the mistake of supporting the party taking opposing and extreme positions in different localities. Both will find it wise to strengthen the trained hands that are guided by a comprehensive understanding of all sides of the tariff question.

Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Her After Five Years Suffering—Felt a Benefit After First Box.

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 23.—(Special)—Mrs. Alberta Goffin, a nurse, living at 40 Wright Ave., this city, has been interviewed in regard to her reported cure of nervous or Kidney Trouble by Dodd's Kidney Pills. She states that the report is true in every particular.

"My sickness," Mrs. Goffin says, "was caused from a nervous breakdown and what the doctors called incurable Bright's Disease brought on by cold and long weeks of nursing. I suffered for five years.

"I was treated by three doctors and was a patient in two hospitals but gradually got weaker. Reading the experiences of other sufferers like myself led me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. At that time I was so weak and nervous I could not hold a cup of tea without spilling some of its contents.

"I felt a benefit after taking the first box of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and eight or nine boxes cured me so completely I can now walk a mile without fatigue."

If you haven't used Dodd's Kidney Pills yourself almost any of your neighbours will tell you they always cure Kidney Disease in any form.

APSLEY NEWS

Examiner Special.

APSLEY, NOV. 14—All of the men who have spent the last fortnight in camp hunting for the game residents of the forest, have returned to their homes well satisfied that they had enough hunting, at least if the game was a trifle scarce. Even the blacksmith tried a day in the woods and came home well satisfied, that he will never hunt in a pair of slippery rubbers.

The boys of the village held another fowl supper on Saturday night under the auspices of the S. B. Club. There are a few of the older residents who think there was partiality shown when the invitations were given out.

Ben Coons, proprietor of the "Do Drop in Hotel," expressed himself freely on Sunday when he took a stroll on his verandah to find it strewn with feathers, chickens' heads and other articles which would be hard to describe.

The village constable was also indignant because he had not been invited, when Henry W. came walking down Feather street with blood in his eye and a $10 spot in his hand for the man, woman or child who would tell him the name of the person who was in his hen house the night before.

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

"He is with the lady who occupied Braster Grange, sir, until last week," I answered. "She passed under the name of Mrs. Smith-Lessing, but I believe that she is in reality my stepmother."

The Duke stood a few paces from me, looking out of the window. He held his cigarette between his fingers, and he stood sideways to me. Nothing about his attitude or face was unusual. Yet, I felt myself watching him curiously. There was something about his manner which seemed to me to suggest some powerful emotion only kept in check by the exercise of a strong will.

"This is the person, I believe," he said in a slow measured tone, "with whom my son, Lord Blenavon, was said to have been intimate?"

"Lord Blenavon was certainly a constant visitor at Braster Grange," I answered.

"You know her address in London?" the Duke asked.

"Yes."

He turned and faced me. He was certainly paler than he had been a few minutes ago.

"I should be glad," he said, "if you would arrange for me to have an interview with her."

"An interview with Mrs. Smith-Lessing?" I repeated incredulously.

The Duke inclined his head.

"There are a few questions," he said, "which I wish to ask her."

"I can give you her address," I said.

"I wish you to see her and arrange for the interview personally," the Duke answered.

"You will see that my visiting her does not prejudice me further with the Board, sir?" I ventured to say.

"You can take that for granted," the Duke said.

So that afternoon I called at No. 29, Bloomsbury street, and in a shabby back room of a gloomy, smoke-begrimed lodging-house I found my father and Mrs. Smith-Lessing. He was lying upon a horsehair sofa, apparently dozing. She was gazing negligently out of the window, and drumming upon the window pane with her fingers. My arrival seemed to act like an electric shock upon both of them. It struck me that to her it was not altogether welcome, but my father was nervously anxious to impress upon me his satisfaction at my visit.

"Now," he said, drawing his chair up to the table, "we can discuss this little matter in a business-like way. I am delighted to see you, Guy, quite delighted."

"What matter?" I asked quietly.

My father coughed and looked towards my step-mother, as though for guidance. But her face was a blank.

"Guy," he said, "I am sure that you are a young man of common sense. You will prefer that I speak to you plainly. There are some fools at our end—I mean at Paris—who think they will be better off for a glance at the doings of your Military Board. Up to now we have kept them supplied with a little general information. Lord Blenavon, who is a remarkably sensible young man, lent us his assistance. I tell you this quite frankly. I believe that it is best."

He was watching me furtively. I did my best to keep my features immovable.

"With Lord Blenavon's assistance," my father continued, "we did at first very well. Since his—er—departure we have not been so fortunate. I will be quite candid. We have not succeeded at all. Our friends pay generously, but they pay by results. As a consequence your stepmother and I are nearly penniless. This fact induces me to make you a special—a very special—offer."

"Go on," I said.

My father coughed. There was a bottle upon the table, and he helped himself from it.

"My nerves," he remarked, "are in a shocking state this morning. Can I offer you anything?"

I shook my head. My father poured out nearly a glass full of raw spirit, diluted it with a little, a very little water, and drank it off.

"Your labours, my dear boy," he continued, "I refer, of course, to the labours of the Military Council, are, I believe, concentrated upon a general scheme of defence against any possible invasion on the part of France. Quite a scare you people seem to be in. Not that one can wonder at it. These military manoeuvres of our friends across the water are just a little obvious even to John Bull, eh? You don't answer. Quite right, quite right! Never commit yourself uselessly. It is very good diplomacy. Let me see, where was I? Ah! The genetal scheme of defence is, of course, known to you?"

"Naturally," I admitted.

"With a list of the places to be fortified, eh? The positions to be held and the general distribution of troops? No doubt, too, you have gone into the railway and commissarial arrangements?"

"All these details," I assented, "have gone through my hands."

He dabbed his forehead with a corner of his handkerchief. There was a streak of purple colour in his cheeks. He kept his bloodshot eyes fixed upon me.

"I will tell you something, Guy," he said, "which will astonish you. You realize for yourself, of course, that such details as you have spoken of can never be kept altogether a secret? There are always leakages, sometimes very considerable leakages. Yes, Guy," he added, "there are people, friends of mine in Paris, who are willing to pay a very large sum of money—such a large sum of money that it is worth dividing, Guy—for just a bare outline of the whole scheme. Foolish! Of course it is foolish. But with them money is no object. They think they are getting value for it. Absurd! But, Guy, what should you say to five thousand pounds?"

"It is a large sum," I answered.

He plucked me by the sleeve. His eyes were hungering already for the gold.

"We can get it," he whispered hoarsely. "No trouble to you—no risk. I can make all the arrangements. You have only to hand me the documents."

"I must think it over," I said.

He leaned back in his chair.

"Why?" he asked. "What need is there to hesitate? The chance may slip by. There are many others on the look out."

"There is no one outside the Military Board, save myself, who could give these particulars," I said slowly.

"But my friends," he said sharply. "Theirs is a foolish offer. They may change their minds. Guy, my boy, I know the world well. Let me give you a word of advice. When a good thing turns up, don't play with it. The men who decide quickly are the men who do things."

I thrust my hand into my breast-pocket and drew out a roll of papers.

"Supposing I have already decided," I said.

His eyes gleamed with excitement. He almost snatched at the papers, but I held them out of his reach. Then with a sharp little cry the woman stood suddenly between us. There was a look almost of horror on her pale strained face, as she held out her hand as though to push me away.

"Guy, are you mad?" she cried.

The veins stood out upon my father's forehead. He regarded her with mingled anger and surprise.

"What do you mean, Maud?" he exclaimed. "How dare you interfere? Guy, give me the papers."

"He shall not!" she exclaimed fiercely. "Guy, have you lost your senses? Do you want to ruin your whole life?"

"Do you mean," I asked incredulously, "that you do not wish me to join you?"

"Join us! For Heaven's sake, no!" she answered fiercely. "Look at your father, an outcast all his life. Do you want to turn the other way whenever you meet an Englishman, to skulk all your days in hiding, to be the scorn even of the men who employ you? Guy, I would sooner see you dead than part with those papers."

"You damned fool!" my father muttered. "Take no notice of her, Guy. Five thousand pounds! I will see it paid to you, every penny of it. And not a soul will ever know!"

My father stood over her, and there was a threat in his face. She did not shrink from him for a moment. She laid her white hands upon my shoulders, and she looked earnestly into my eyes.

The Patient Brain

A Tireless Worker So Long as Supplied With Rich, Red Blood.

The brain is one of the most patient and industrious organs of the body. It can be induced, by good treatment, to perform prodigies of work.

But it is sensitive and will not brook abuse. It responds to the lash at first, but if the lash is laid on too hard it balks.

The brain insists on having plenty of good, red blood wherewith to renew its waste and from which to manufacture the nerve force supplied to the whole body.

Nervous trouble is generally brain trouble, and no suffering is to be compared to mental suffering, with the accompanying dread, suspicion and melancholy.

One-fifth of the blood in the human body is consumed by the brain, so make the blood rich and red by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and you will overcome diseases of the nerves.

There is no other way. Stimulants arouse false hope. Narcotics deaden the nerves, and temporary relief is followed by a condition which is worse than the first.

Get the blood right and the nervous system will adjust itself. Headaches will disappear; irritability will go; digestion will improve, and weakness and despondency will give place to new hope and courage, new vigor and energy.

Mrs. Geo. Fuller, Lakeland, Man., writes: "Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cured me of nervous headache, from which I was a great sufferer, and I am no longer troubled with twitchings of the nerves in the arms and legs."

Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food will enable you to avoid such extreme nervous trouble as prostration and paralysis. 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Recipe for 16 Ounces of Cough Syrup

No Better Remedy at any Price. Fully Guaranteed.

Make a plain syrup by mixing two cups of granulated sugar and one cup of warm water and stir for two minutes. Put 2½ ounces of pure Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle, and fill it up with the Sugar Syrup. This gives you a family supply of the best cough syrup at a saving of $2. It never spoils. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

The effectiveness of this simple remedy is surprising. It seems to take hold instantly, and will usually stop the most obstinate cough in 24 hours. It loses up the jaded appetite and is just laxative enough to be helpful in a cough, and has a pleasing taste. Also excellent for bronchial trouble, throat tickle, sore lungs and asthma, and an unequalled remedy for whooping cough.

This recipe for making cough remedy with Pinex and Sugar Syrup (or strained honey) is a prime favorite in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada. The plan has been imitated, though never successfully. If you try it, use only genuine Pinex, which is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this recipe.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

A WELL-KNOWN magazine in its September issue published a list of all the girls' boarding schools which had advertised in its pages during the last year.

Appalled at the length of the list I took the time and trouble to count it.

THERE WERE 176.

Think of that.

And those figures represent, of course, just the schools that advertised in one magazine.

They do not include the schools that advertised in the hundreds of other magazines in the United States.

They do not include the schools which do not advertise at all.

Perhaps you wonder why I said "appalled" above. Perhaps you wonder why I mention this list anyway.

I'll tell you. Just this. Those figures give us a little idea of the tremendous extent to which the American mother is getting the habit of turning her young daughters over to strangers to bring up.

A friend of mine wrote me last summer to ask if I could give her any advice as to a good boarding school to which she might send her fourteen-year-old daughter to prepare her for college.

I wrote back to inquire just what duties made it impossible for her to keep that daughter — a headstrong, sensitive, brilliant little creature, as much in need of the intuition and guidance that love alone can give as any girl ever was—right where she belonged, under her own wing.

I haven't heard from her since. I am afraid she was offended at my plain speaking.

But I would do it again.

I am a firm believer in sending the seventeen or eighteen year old girl away to college. I believe that the advantages a girl of that age derives from looking out for herself, darning her own stockings, making her own decisions, ordering her own life, outweigh the disadvantages—and I admit there are plenty of these—of college life.

But to send a girl twelve or thirteen or fourteen years old away from home—to give to outsiders this most plastic and scientific period of her life, to trust to strangers that most delicate process, the moulding of girlhood into womanhood, to be separated from a child at the time when so many instincts are awakening, so many wonders are demanding satisfaction—well I can scarcely understand the mother who could do it.

And set by the showing of 176 schools advertising in a single magazine it looks as if there must be plenty of such women.

And just think, one of these schools actually offered to take girls from kindergarten age to college.

One hears many protests against the way on which the wealthy mother gives over the care of her little baby to a nursemaid or trained nurse.

Personally I don't think she does as much harm or runs as much risk as the mother who is willing to find in the open maw of the boarding school a solution of her difficulties in moulding her young daughter's mind and character.

Do you?

Blaze Started By Thieves Totally Destroys A Church

Structure Valued At $125,000 is Completely Destroyed in New York—Could not be Saved.

HOW IT ORIGINATED

Examiner Special.

NEW YORK, NOV. 21.—The robbing of four poor boxes in St. Peter's German Evangelical Church at Union Avenue and Scholes Street, Brooklyn, meant not merely a loss yesterday to the poor of less than $100, but ended in the total destruction by fire of the fine building that had cost $125,000 in 1889, although it is next door to an engine house.

After they had torn open the boxes the thieves lay down on cushions placed over the registers, and it is thought that sparks from their pipes as they smoked before the pulpit set the dry material of the pew cushions ablaze.

Adjoining the church in Scholes Street is the house of fire engine company No. 116. Early yesterday the engineer heard the crackling of flames, ran out into the street and saw the entire rear portion of the church structure burning. His cries brought out the firemen in his own house and an alarm was rung.

FOUND CHURCH GATES LOCKED

The firemen from next door, as they dragged out their lines of hose, found that the tall iron gates of the church were locked. By the time they had broken them a hook and ladder company had arrived. A further halt came while the steel screens protecting the stained glass windows were being pulled aside.

Then while streams were playing through the shattered images of Biblical characters the firemen pounded open the church's large front doors.

They found that all that part of the church about the pulpit was doomed, with the flames spreading rapidly. They had time to note, however, that the poor boxes had been broken open and their contents taken, and also that pew cushions had been placed over the registers as though the thieves had spent some hours in the warmth of the church.

A second alarm was turned in, and when the additional firemen arrived the whole interior was afire. Many members of the congregation who lived in the neighborhood stood in front of the church about their pastor, the Rev. George G. Walker, deeply affected.

The pastor told the police and firemen that on Friday night there was a choir rehearsal. While the soprano and tenor were trying their Sunday songs the thieves got into the church and hid under the pews, it is believed.

Half an hour after the discovery of the fire the sorrowful congregation saw the rear of the roof fall in. Some of it fell on the engine house.

Before the church fire, engine company No. 116 had been at a $40,000 fire in the three-story factory of the Empire State Rag Company at Nos. 748-760 Wythe Avenue. This fire endangered for a time a big knitting mill and the plant of the Appleton Publishing Company. Three alarms were sent in.

And just before the factory fire there was one in a three-story building adjoining Payton's Theatre, No. 37 Lee Avenue. Policemen helped out Louis Alexander, four children, and his old mother, who were the only persons in the building. The damage here was $800.

SONG SERVICE

To be Conducted by the Y. M. C. A. in the Crystal

The Y. M. C. A. will hold another song service in the Crystal Theatre on Sunday evening next. The Quartette will sing the beautiful old quartette selection "The Wayside Cross."

This meeting is a very pleasant one in which to finish the day. The singing is bright, and who does not like to hear and join in good singing. The Orchestra will be present, as usual, and some new songs will be sung

Drop in on your way up or down George street, feel free to come in and go out as you wish. You will not offend.

SCOTCH DAY

At the Princess Theatre—"Two Highlan' Lads," a Very Funny Film

To-day is Scotch Day at the Princess Theatre. Manager Loftus has been successful in securing that funniest of all funny picture comedies: "Two Highlan' Lads," which has been the cause of more amusement perhaps than any other film. You have to see this picture to appreciate its mirth-provoking capabilities and you should not by any means overlook the opportunity of seeing the famous film. The Scotch nature of the programme is further carried out in a new tuneful Scotch song that is illustrated with beautiful slides.

SPLENDID SIGN

Erected at the Oriental Hotel by J. J. Turner & Sons

Messrs. J. J. Turner and Sons this morning placed in position a magnificent electric sign in front of the Oriental, undoubtedly the largest sign of its kind in the city. The name of the hotel is spelled in huge letters which at night will be picked out in many electric lights. It has been arranged so that if desired the name can be flashed on and off. The sign is a credit to the resources of Messrs. J. T. Turner and Sons' sign department, and to the enterprise of the management of the Oriental Hotel.

SPECIAL MEETING

St. John's Sunday School Teachers Have an Important Gathering

At a special meeting of St. John's Sunday school teachers, held in the Guild room last night the whole situation of the system of Bible and church teaching in Sunday schools was discussed in view of the fact that next Sunday, Advent Sunday, is the first Sunday in the Anglican church year. The absence of the Bible as a basis of public education in our schools was deplored, one of the speakers declaring that the schools (apart from separate schools) were purely secular schools and it was a hard work to try to do in the half or three-quarters of an hour available in Sunday schools to impart a thorough knowledge of the Bible. The introduction of the Bible at least as a text book, in our public schools, should be the aim of parents who have the true interests of their children and country at heart.

REVIVAL AT GOSPEL HALL

When people are in earnest, rain or snow has no effect as was shown last night by the number that came to the meeting. Revival was seen in every face, the singing and the address was the best yet. ENDS INDIGESTION IN A FEW MOMENTS

Gas, Heartburn, Headache and All Misery in Stomach Vanishes

Nothing will remain undigested or sour on your stomach if you will take a little Diapepsin occasionally. This powerful digestive and antacid, though as harmless and pleasant as candy, will digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood all the food you can eat.

Eat what your stomach craves, without the slightest fear of Indigestion or that you will be bothered with sour risings, Belching, Gas on Stomach, Heartburn, Headaches from stomach, Nausea, Bad Breath, Water Brash or a feeling like you had swallowed a lump of lead, or other disagreeable miseries. Should you be suffering now from any stomach disorder you can get relief within five minutes.

If you will get from your pharmacist a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin you could always go to the table with a hearty appetite, and your meals would taste good, because you would know there would be no Indigestion or Sleepless nights or Headache or Stomach misery all the next day; and, besides, you would not need laxatives or liver pills to keep your stomach and bowels clean and fresh.

LINDSAY PRESS COMMENTS. UPON MR. DAVID B. THOMAS DISCREDITED SANTA CLAUS

"Providence Could Not Have Sent Him After All"—The Post and Warder Have Many Things to Say of the Man Who Was to Place Lindsay on the Manufacturing Map.

The Lindsay papers contain columns in regard to "David Burton Thomas" and the Thomas Shoe and Glove Factory, the particulars of which were given in last evening's Examiner. Commenting upon "Thomas" the Warder says:

He is apparently one of the cleverest operators and proceeded in a bold manner. To quote scripture, in John VII., and 24, the following will be found, "Judge not according to appearances" and this man David Burton Thomas was deceiving as far as appearances are concerned. He was taken in and warmly welcomed because of the fact that he appeared to be genuine. From all outward appearances he was a man of means, and he impressed one as being a live American business man. He started in in real earnest and in three days had the agreement with the town signed in black and white and commenced to hire labourers right and left. A deal was put through with Mr. Geo. H. Lindsay for the property and the latter gentleman was hired as foreman. Mr. Thomas was driven out to the brick yards and bought 100,000 brick; he also bought the brick in the old township hall at the cemetery. Labourers were advertised for, and responded in abundance. They were given employment. Excavation work was started on a new brick barn and a brick addition was built to the present planing mill, which was to be used as a glove factory. The uptown office over the Post printing office was furnished up with desks, telephone, carpet, chairs, and other office fixtures. A telephone was also put in at the glove factory, cement and lime were purchased, and printers' ink was used extensively. A paymaster was advertised for, and two or three were hired for the position by Mr. Thomas, with good wages and promises of trips to Winnipeg. They were instructed not to say anything about being hired for a couple of weeks. A bookkeeper and stenographer was also engaged. A horse and rig were purchased. Mr. Thomas secured the option on several residential sites in the vicinity of his proposed factory, which, he stated, would be purchased by his employes. He secured a post office box for his mail and sent out letters to fictitious addresses. In fact he "got in" on about everything that came his way. There is an old saying that the labourer is worthy of his hire but in this case he will probably never receive his wages, for it is feared that Mr. David Burton Thomas will "not come back," to use the vernacular. Lindsay evidently entertained strangers unawares, but not angels, and although Mr. Thomas is out of sight for the time being, he is not out of mind, and will no doubt be brought back by the police to answer to the charge laid against him.

The Post's Comment.

The Lindsay Post says:

"What was his game?" is a query heard on all sides. The Post is not in a position to answer, but one thing is certain, and that is the town does not get a shoe factory. That institution existed only in the imagination of that heartless young man Mr. Thomas. "He was a stranger and he took us in," and the wild-eyed statements he made concerning the "industry" was simply a bubble that was quickly pricked when the truth oozed out.

That he was a slick one no one will deny. He was a glib-tongued "promoter," and the story he concocted, and the enterprise and thrift he exhibited during the preliminary operations, makes the story of his movements read like a selection from the Arabian nights.

This is not the first time he has deluded people, and there are a great many in town who believe that his intention was to make a haul out of the local banks, and then, like the Arab, "silently steal away." His plans, however, miscarried, and fortunately he got away with only a couple of hundred dollars.

He was a revised edition of Ananias, the prince of fabricators, and his "phoney" talk was very deceiving. He wiggled out of the tight corners with the grace and agility of a contortionist, and his big talk was usually backed up by evidence that seemed most convincing.

Was he a dope fiend? No, he was a dispenser of "dope" of the hot air variety and the cunningly concealed the real motive of his plan of campaign in a clever manner.

No one doubted his words regarding the proposed industry. His proposition, while being an unusual liberal one, was not of such a nature as to arouse suspicion. The negotiations carried on, as well as the plan mapped out regarding the construction work were ingeniously arranged and those of our citizens who are inclined to criticize our council and Board of Trade in connection with this matter, and remark, "I told you so," are no wiser in their generation than those who negotiated with the much wanted "Thomas." He would have hoodwinked Solomon of old, in all his glory, not to say anything of the light weight Solomons of Lindsay.

It was one of the ripest schemes ever dished up to a community of wise men. Imagine, if you can, although the thoughts of it are painful, a heartless youth in the flush of manhood, visiting the town with the object of starting an industry. Not only did he enter into a satisfactory agreement with the town, but he started a staff of men to work on the proposed "industry" and superintended at various intervals the work as it progressed. He was on hand bright and early at Riverside cemetery on Nov. 14th, with a staff of men, selecting the brick from the ruins of the old Ops township hall. All this looked good and our joy knew no bounds as visions of tall chimneys and the hum of machinery loomed up before us. But why dwell upon the incident? Our dream of hope is shattered. The next question is will Thomas "come back?" Echo answers "Scat!" He is gone, but he will not be forgotten. The "tick-tick" of his typewriters is silent overhead, and the stock of lead pencils we had purchased in anticipation of a harvest in the furnishing of news to our readers regarding his movements is dead stock on our hands.

It is up to Mr. A. D. Mallon to revise his statement that Providence sent Mr. Thomas to Lindsay. We don't believe it, and we don't care who knows it.

Columns could be written on this "sen-sation," but enough for to-day

All Come From Dandruff, Which is Caused by a Germ.

Split hair, hard hair, lustreless hair, brittle hair, falling hair, all owe their origin to dandruff, which is caused by a measly little microbe that burrows into the scalp, throwing up the cuticle into dandruff scales and sapping the vitality of the hair at the root, causing the several diseased conditions of the hair till it finally falls out. Mr. Gillespie Again Receives The District Nomination

The annual meeting of the Peterborough District of the Eastern Dairymen's Association was held yesterday afternoon in the City Council Chamber. It is to be regretted that there were practically no farmers present, the only ones showing any interest by their attendance being cheesemakers. The chair was taken by Ald. G. A. Gillespie. Mr. Gillespie was re-nominated director to the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association.

Mr. R. W. Ward, Dairy Instructor, made his report for the Peterborough district. He stated that the cheese men had had a very satisfactory season, the conditions for a successful year having been very good. Mr. Ward greatly regretted that there were not more factories paying for milk by test. The milk supply has been the largest and the best quality in the history of diarying in this section. The instructor, in his report, was pleased to notice a large increase in the number of silos, and in the acreage of corn and alfalfa grain. For the improvement of dairying he recommended not more cows, but better cows, better cared for, better housed, and kept under cleaner and more sanitary conditions. He advocated the production of more cheap-producing foods, and better arrangements for cooling and caring for milk. He would like to see all cheese factories instal cool-curing rooms.

Mr. W. Glendenning, President of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association, spoke on "Cheap Foods for the Dairy Cow". He recommended corn ensilage and alfalfa as the cheapest foods for cows that could be grown in Peterborough county.

Mr. J. F. Singleton of the Kingston Dairy School, dealt with the composition of milk, and recommended the more extensive formation of cow testing associations.

Mr. D. J. Cameron of Peterborough, gave a general talk on improving factory conditions.

In spite of the smallness of the meeting a lively discussion followed the addresses of the speakers.

A PLACE IN THE FAMILY

If you and your family were obliged to depend on one medicine, what would you choose? It is not difficult to guess what medicine Mrs. James Gray, Bartotta, N.B., would choose, for she writes,—"For five years my husband and I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills for kidney troubles, biliousness and constipation and find them indispensable as a family medicine."

Good Reasons Why You Should Shop Now For Xmas

This is an old thread-bare story, but it's as sensible as it's worn out. In the first place human nature will always assert itself and a person will think of one-self first. It is certainly to your decided advantage to shop now—You get better assortment, better service and just as good, if not better, values. Later there is sure to be a big rush and you will not have the same chance to select, and, as a rule, get something you're not satisfied with in the end.

In the second place, think of the salespeople. The rush always is most trying on them and they are unable to do justice to You, to their Employer or to themselves. Every advantage is to be gained by doing part at least of your Christmas Shopping every week from now on.

Shop when you are able, but make it a point to try morning shopping some day and see the pleasure you will have. Think this over.

Prof. Chant To Address The Astronomical Society

The Royal Astronomical Society meets to-morrow evening, Friday, Nov. 25. While the usual meeting night is Tuesday, a change has been made for the occasion in order to secure the special speaker for the evening, Prof. C. A. Chant of the University of Toronto.

Professor Chant has lectured in Peterborough on several occasions, and has made many friends here. He is a good speaker and knows how to make his subject most interesting.

The address will be in the form of a resume of the convention of the "Solar Union," held in California. This union is composed of astronomers from all over the world, from both observatories and universities, and its meetings mean the discussion of the latest in astronomical matters.

The address will be profusely illustrated by lantern views, and should therefore prove of added interest. And as Prof. Chant has travelled considerably among the universities of the world his observatons are worthy of note.

Mr. J. R. Collins of Toronto, the General-Secretary of the Astronomical Society in writing to one of the Peterborough members states that Prof. Chant delivered this address recently before the Toronto Centre, and that the illustrations were many in number, and very unique. "Something less than a thousand slides" he writes "and they are exceptionally good.

The meeting will be in the Collegiate Auditorium. No charge, as usual, and the public are cordially invited.

The Water Commissioners Acquire Additional Land On West Side Of River

At a meeting of the Water Commissioners held yesterday afternoon, at which all were present, Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C., reported that he had completed the purchase of the strip of land on the west side of the river, south of the Waterworks property from Mr. John Stothart, for $200.00. This will give the ownership to the Waterworks Company of the land on each side of the river for some distance below the dam.

Veteran Engineer Soon To Be Superannuated

Mr. George Mimms, of Toronto, who has, for the past twenty-five years been engineer on one of the Port Hope-Toronto trains, through this city, will retire from the service in about a month on his superannuation allowance. Mr. Mimms is sixty five years old and has been in the service of the Grand Trunk for the past forty-six years. He is well-known among the local railway men and they will sincerely regret to learn that he is to leave the road. Mr. Mimms has been noted for his carefulness as an engineer, and during his long service has had very few accidents and comparatively none of a very serious nature. It was reported that he had already left the road, but this report is not true, as he was on his run this morning on the 8.25 train, and stated to a local railway man that he was to continue for about a month.

The Work Of St. John's Ambulance Association The Objects Aimed At

Last year there was organized in Peterborough, two ambulance classes for the study of First Aid, under the auspices of the St. John's Ambulance Association of London, Eng. These two classes were composed of members of St. John's English Church young people of this city. This year there has been a similar class organized from the members of Peterborough's Young Women's Christian Association. This class is meeting every Thursday night at the above Association. This class is meeting every Thursday night at the above Association rooms. The members of these various classes and others interested in the work may be glad to read an item that appeared in one of the Toronto evening papers this week, regarding the work of the St. John's Ambulance Association of England, in Canada.

"The St. John's Ambulance Association, which has been doing such commendable work in all parts of the Empire, is now planning to branch out and establish the institution throughout Canada. For this purpose a meeting will be held in Toronto in December at the instance of the association headquarters in Ottawa. Delegates will be present from all over Canada to make preparations for the establishment of centres throughout the Dominion.

The work of the St. John Ambulance Association is to teach home hygiene, sanitation, and first aid to the injured. This work is particularly valuable in foundries, factories, on railroads, and anywhere that accidents of a serious nature are likely to happen, when it is necessary for aid to be rendered before a surgeon can be summoned.

The work has already been well taken up in Toronto. Sveral of the larger employers of labour have had their men instructed, the Technical School, and the Evangelia settlement have classes of instruction, and no man can become a member of the police force here until he has been instructed on the administering of first aid and has passed a rigorous examination. The G. T. R. and C. P. R. railroads have taken the matter up and it has met with great favour with them. The instructions are given to the pupils by expert medical men engaged by the association.

Just at present there are only branches in eight towns in Ontario, and the work has not been taken up generally throughout the Dominion. It is, therefore, planned to establish Provincial councils, and have each of these establish centres throughout the Provinces, from which the work can be controlled. It is a stupendous task; but the wonderful work which the organization has been doing in other parts of the Empire is an example of what the organization can do.

An organiser will also be employed to travel about and assist in establishing the different branches.

THE EVENING TIMES' STORY OF CRIPPEN'S CONFESSION

The Thunderer Claims to Possess Unimpeachable Authority That the Statement It Published Was Crippen's Own---Details of the Famous Crime.

LONDON, NOV. 23.—The Evening Times says that Crippen confessed his guilt to a friend, who was unable to hold the awful secret any longer and had given the full facts to the paper. According to this story, Crippen first referred to his wife's bad temper, her peculiar powers of aggravation. She was always nagging him, and she was jealous to a degree hardly to be understood. She always doubted his word, and in every way gave full play to her suspicious nature, making his life a veritable hell on earth. To the outer world she appeared as the fine lady. Indoors she got up late, would walk about the house in underclothes, with a pyjama jacket thrown over her shoulders. She always wore curlers to preserve the curls she was so proud of. Returning from a day's work found her awaiting him untidy, jealous and exacting. He also found she drank, a failing he held in great horror.

On her return from America she boasted of the rich men who offered to provide for her and threw in her husband's teeth the name of a certain American who professed to love her.

For some weeks before January 31st he had but one thought and that was how to get rid of his wife. She suffered from indigestion, for which she was taking tablets containing bismuth, coated with sugar, throughout January she was more trying and troublesome even than usual. Crippen's patience became exhausted. He knew the properties of hyoscin from experience in the lunatic asylums, and determined to do away with his wife by giving her a controlling dose of this deadly poison. He prepared the tablets and, after the dinner of January 31st he gave her a tablet impregnated with hyoscin instead of the ordinary one containing bismuth. On the evening of February 1st, returning home he found his wife half dressed, curlers in her hair, the pyjama jacket still round her shoulders, and no dinner ready. Everything was untidy and in disorder. That night he gave her another tablet he had impregnated with the deadly poison. This was the end. She fell in a stupor, and within the hour was dead in her bed.

Wrote to the Ladies.

That night he wrote the letter to the secretary of the Music Hall Ladies' Guild. The following day, before leaving the house, he locked the bedroom where the body lay. The evening of that day he decided to make away with the corpse. Some days before he had purchased in a shop in Holborn a peculiar knife of the kind used by doctors in post-mortems. He dragged the heavy corpse, clad only in the combination pyjama jacket, to the cellar. In the kitchen, within a few yards of the cellar, was an old-fashioned stove he used in an attempt at removing all trace of the crime quickly. He cut off the head, hands and feet and all parts of the body which appertained especially to a woman with easy slashes of the knife, removed the bones, and set fire to these poor relics of humanity. The kitchen stove was soon reducing them to ashes. The ashes he threw among the house refuse in the dusthole. Afterwards they were carried away by the ordinary dustmen, and then scattered to oblivion.

Overcame by Horror.

This gruesome task occupied him some days and ere he completed it the flesh yet remaining began to decay. Then a dreadful fit of horror and remorse overcame him. He could not continue the horrible task of cutting up the portion of what remained of the body and he cast about for some easy way of removing the evidence of sin fro mhis eyes. His senses dreaded the burying of what was left in the cellar. The task of digging up the loose bricks of the cellar was not a difficult one. With the aid of a spade and an old iron poker he soon pulled up enough bricks for the purpose of digging a hole in the earth and pushed in the flesh which was left and replaced the bricks, afterwards covering up everything over with coal which was in the cellar. Then he settled himself to forget that Belle Elmore ever existed.

The Evening Times claims to possess unimpeachable authority that the statement is Crippen's own and that somewhere in the vicinity of Hilldrop Crescent, rusted and broken in the garden of an empty house, lies the post-mortem knife with which the mutilations were committed. Crippen threw the knife there himself.

TWO BOYS ACCUSED OF ATTEMPTS TO KILL

Examiner Special.

NEW YORK, NOV. 21.—Two young boys were arrested yesterday by the Bronx police and held upon serious charges, one with being concerned in the shooting of a boy and the other with stabbing another youngster.

Harry E. Benel, twelve, No. 540 East One Hundred and Sixty-fifth Street, is accused of attempting to shoot Charles Lorsch, thirteen, No. 1,049 Boston Avenue. Louis Goldner, fifteen, No. 760 East One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Street, has confessed, the police say, that he stabbed Milton Marx, No. 1,006 Union Avenue.

The authorities are hunting Albert Tate, aged twelve, who has been living at No. 1,026 Boston Road. He disappeared on Friday afternoon after the shooting of young Lorsch. Lorsch says that the missing boy fired the shot which sent him to the hospital and which may yet cost him his life.

Early yesterday Benel's father called at the Lorsch home and told Mrs. Lorsch that he believed that Harry had done the shooting, as a .22 calibre rifle belonging to the boy's older brother was missing. He turned his boy over to the police. Later the little prisoner was arraigned in the Juvenile Court and held in $600 bail. Hearing was postponed until Friday, when the extent of young Lorsch's injuries will be known.

Mrs. Lorsch said to a reporter last evening that young Benel had fired a shot at her son on Wednesday afternoon when he ordered him and the Tate boy out of her backyard. The bullet buried itself in the door. Tate, she says, took the gun and fired. The bullet took effect in the boy's abdomen and he dropped, while his assailants disappeared.

Mrs. Lorsch declared also that some of the boys had attempted to shoot her from the roof of the adjoining barn.

Mrs. Benel said that she could not believe her son intentionally fired at the boy.

Louis Goldner was arrested shortly after 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon and was taken to the Lebanon Hospital. The Marx boy identified Goldner as the boy who held him while another stabbed him. Later, the police say, Goldner admitted that he had done the stabbing.

Marx was attacked in front of his father's clothing store, Union Avenue and One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Street, Friday evening. Some boys in the street were kicking a football when he and his fox terrier started for home. The dog was hit by the ball, he protested, and the fight began. He was stabbed twice.

Goldner, according to the police, said he stabbed Marx because Marx struck him. Afterward he had thrown the knife down a sewer.

As a result of the two affrays, the police have taken steps to wipe out the gangs of boys who infest the Bronx district.

MR. BRODEUR CONTINUES HIS CRITICISMS OF THE BYE-ELECTION

METHODS EMPLOYED

Ottawa, Nov. 24.—When the debate on the address was resumed yesterday afternoon, Hon. L. P. Brodeur, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, continued his criticism of the campaign in Drummond and Arthabaska. In fact the entire session was devoted to a discussion of the methods employed by both parties in the recent bye-election, and charge followed upon counter-charge by Conservatives and Liberals, until the amendment of F. D. Monk (Jacques Cartier), upon which the discussion mainly rose, was lost to view.

Mr. Brodeur read more reports of speeches by Nationalists in the campaign, and said he sought to show the influence of these speeches upon the election. They had carried on an incendiary campaign against British connection and Sir Wilfrid Laurier. He quoted from a statement of Tancred Marcil, who said he had lived in a parish where the English had desecrated a church and fed their horses from its sacred vessels. He quoted from a further speech in which Marcil described Earl Grey as a creature of the late Cecil Rhodes. The Minister of Marine defended the Governor-General. It was a shame that this sort of campaign was being carried on and, he asserted, it did not represent the feeling of the Province of Quebec.

Contrariwise, a different campaign was being conducted in Ontario where Sir Wilfrid Laurier was declared to be anti-British.

Continuing, amid Liberal and Conservative cheers, Mr. Brodeur read the advice tendered to the electors of Drummond and Arthabaska. R. L. Borden advised them to vote according to their conscience, which satisfied the Minister, as it showed that Mr. Borden did not appreciate the anti-British appeals that had been made. Not so, he maintained, in the case of Hon. George E. Foster, Hon. Robert Rogers and others, who had advised Conservatives to vote against Laurier and the navy. This implied direct support to the Nationalist candidate, to accomplish the embarrassment of the Government.

Dealing with the amendment of Mr. Monk, the Minister declared that the creation of a navy did not change our relations with the Mother Country, any more than when Canada provided the land forces for Halifax and Esquimalt, when Great Britain withdrew her troops from North America. Mr. Monk's proposal was not in accordance with historical record, as was instanced when Canada took over the fisheries protective service, and even the important question of confederation was not submitted to the people. The naval policy was an affirmation of Canadian autonomy.

P. E. Blondin (Champlain), one of the Quebec Conservatives, who had been pilloried by Government speakers for alleged appeals to racial prejudice during the campaign, said: I wish to declare from my seat in this House and before the country that, during the whole of the Drummond and Arthabaska campaign, the Conservative members who took part in it were true and faithful to our King and our country, in conformity with the principles of the Liberal-Conservative party.

"He took neither credit nor discredit for his presence in the constituency, because, before the campaign opened, the people were against the navy bill. He had heard Government workers remark that things were going bad 'because of the damned navy bill.' He denied that he said Quebec owed nothing to the other provinces, although something in that sense might have been uttered. Liberal speakers had sought to make the people believe that other provinces would retaliate, if they dared express their free will, that the people of other provinces were narrow and fanatical.

Dr. H. S. Beland (Liberal, Beauce), said he had not intended to take part in the debate, but was obliged to do so in view of the remarks of the previous speaker. If Mr. Blondin did not make the statement attributed to him, Dr. Eugene Paquet (L'Islet) must have made them, for they were the only two speakers on that occasion at Victoriaville. He was sure that the House and country realised that disloyal language had been used by the supporters of Mr. Gilbert.

Then Dr. Beland proceeded to give to the House a story of the Drummond-Arthabaska campaign, as he saw it. Mr. Gilbert, he said, presented himself to the electors as a Liberal, who would support Sir Wilfrid Laurier on all questions but that of the navy.

Armand Lavergne had said at several meetings that the only way to please Sir Wilfrid Laurier was to vote for Gilbert, because, when the Nationist candidate was elected, he would be able to go to Earl Grey and Mr. Borden and say: "See, the people have declared themselves against the naval policy. We must repeal the bill." Then the Nationalists had appealed to the instincts of the electors and had tried to frighten fathers and mothers by the bogey of conscription.

Nantel (Conservative, Terrebonne) spoke in French. He said they had told the electors that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was not a god, nor yet a demi-god but just a plain man, with a love for titles and automobiles, given him by English lords, and that they were perfectly entitled to rebuke him when he made a mistake. The people of Drummond-Arthabaska had heeded this advice, he said, and the victory was the result.

J. P. Turcotte (Quebec County), also speaking in French, explained that the incident of the election had no real significance.

Dr. Paquette moved the adjournment of the debate.

The debate on the address in the Senate was resumed by Senator Lougheed, leader of the Opposition. He congratulated Senator Lavergne upon having reached the Senate at the psychological moment, having anticipated the gathering storm, and, with more foresight than the Government, he had found a shelter. Had the Government foreseen what was to happen, it is doubtful if Senator Lavergne would have reached the Upper House as easily.

Attempt To Catch The Leader Of The Mexican Rising Fails

Laredo, Texas, Nov. 24.—Mexican soldiers late yesterday raided the San Enrique ranch of Francisco I. Madero, leader of the uprising in Mexico, on the chance of surrounding Madero and capturing several thousand horses; believed to be on the estate. They seized 250 horses, but Madero was not found.

Reports have had it that Madero was headed for the San Enrique property in the State of Coahulla. Furthermore, it was believed by the Mexican authorities that Madero had placed 2,000 horses there, with which he intended to mount a force of cavalry.

In addition it was reported that an armed band of revolutionists was encamped Tuesday night at Minerva, Texas, headed toward the ranch. All these rumors led to the movement yesterday, which the Mexican authorities say has effectually checked the plan of Madero to mobilize a force of mounted men to operate in the interior.

Fighting at Chihuahua.

El Paso, Nov. 24.—Latest reports are that Chihuahua is in great danger, it being estimated that between 8,000 and 10,000 revolutionists are gathered between the city and the plant of the American Smelting & Refining Co. All responsible citizens are armed and expecting to be attacked at any moment. Crowds of defenders occupy the tops of all the banks, churches and large buildings throughout the city.

The first authentic accounts of the fighting at Gomez Palacio in Chihuahua were received here yesterday when El Eco, a Spanish daily, published at Torre on Tuesday, was brought to El Paso by a passenger from Mexico. A translation of the report follows:

Gomez, Palacio, Mexico, Nov. 22.—Last night several rumors were circulated to which no one gave credence, but all were greatly surprised at 2 o'clock in the morning by cries and yells of groups of armed and mounted men, who came forth from the ruins of the ancient church of Santa Rosa, situated at the extreme end of the city, where they had been hiding.

Even Consular Messages Censored.

Mexico, Nov. 24.—The press is still denied telegraph facilities, and the censorship appears to have extended to consular messages. The United States embassy is without reports for three days. The war department announces that all places where there have been disorders are now tranquil, and that the Government is in control everywhere, except in Guerrero City, where the rebels are active. Troops are now proceeding to this point.

Governor's Mission.

Quebec, Nov. 24.—It is said that one of the objects of Henri Bourassa's trip to Europe is to go and plead before the Pope himself the alleged rights of the French-speaking population of Canada, which are considered violated by the appointment of Mgr. Gauthier to the archiepiscopal seat at Ottawa, and to induce the holy see to put a stop to Bishop Falkon's hostility to the learning of the French language in the public schools of Ontario.

Captain Dropped Dead.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Nov. 24.—Capt. D. Gleason of the barge George B. Owen dropped dead here Tuesday night while his vessel was taking on a load of lumber at the sawmills of the Lake Superior Corporation. Gleason was apparently in good health up to the time he dropped on the deck at 10 p.m.

MAY SAVE RUSSIAN

Prisoner's Counsel Shows That Russian Requisition Is For a Political Crime Because All Affairs Between Police and Civilians Are Technically Such — Judge Robson Deems Point Important.

Winnipeg, Nov. 24.—The argument on the Federenko writ of habeas corpus case, which resumed yesterday before Judge Robson, resulted in a surprise being sprung, when counsel for the defence pointed out that in the evidence of requisition of the Russian Government it was stated that the crime was a political one. It was also explained that under the Russian law obtaining at the time, all trouble between civilians and police came under the head of political crime. Special treatement is devised by the Government, and there are special provisions made for arrests and trials in such cases.

Judge Robson considered the point of importance. He asked that the words on the seal attached to the documents be translated, and, pending this adjourned court until to-day.

Packed Dogs In Box.

Galt, Nov. 24.—Fine totaling $54.40 were imposed on John N. Sipes at the Police Court yesterday afternoon before Magistrate Blake. Sipes was charged with transporting dogs into northern game district, in contravention of the special act of prohibition, and also cruelty to animals. The prosecutors were John Jennings, for th Department of Agriculture, and P. C. Laverton Harris, for the Humane Society. C. R. Hanning, K.C., Preston, appeared for the defence and pleaded guilty on both charges. Mr. Jennings said he did not want the full penalty inflicted, but only a lesson read to sportsmen and others.

Sipes boxed up two hounds in a close packing case and consigned them to Parry Sound, to be used for deer hunting. At Shawanga the box was discovered by a provincial constable, who confiscated and released the dogs. The animals had been four days without food or water and nearly perished.

To Be Built In England.

Ottawa, Nov. 24.—British publications devoted to naval and military subjects continue to assert that a cruiser is being built in Great Britain for the Canadian navy. The latest to do so is The United Service Magazine, which, in its November issue, contains the following paragraph: "The armored cruisers New Zealand and Australia, building for service in the Pacific, will displace 18,800 tons, and will be sisters to the Indefatigable. Orders have recently been placed for protected cruisers for the Australian, Canadian and New Zealand services."

This repeated assertion that a protected cruiser that is a ship of the Bristol class, is actually about to be constructed in Great Britain for the Canadian navy, hardly consorts with the declarations that all the ships will be built in Canada.

Labor Congress Lines Up.

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 24.—The dozen or so Canadian delegates attending the convention of the American Federation of Labor have on several occasions during the past ten days made themselves heard on important matters. At yesterday afternoon's session Delegate Landers, from Hamilton, Ont., on behalf of the Canadian delegation, asked unanimous consent to introduce a resolution, denouncing the extradition of Federenko, the Russian fugitive, which was granted, and the resolution was unanimously carried.

This year there were 102 vessels, with a total catch of 209,206 quintals, averaging 2,051 quintals per vessel.

Not Guilty of Chloroforming.

Tigers Choose Line-up For Saturday's Game Satisfied With Officials

HAMILTON, NOV. 23.—(Special).—The Tiger team for the championship game with Varsity was chosen after this afternoon's secret practice. The team will line up as follows:

Fullback—"Kid" Smith.

Halves—Moore, Burton, Simpson.

Quarter—Awrey.

Scrimmage—Craig, Pfeiffer, Scott.

Inside wings—Marshall, McFarlane.

Middle wings—Isbister, Pottearry.

Outside wings—Glassford, Gatenby.

There was a big fight for the full-back position between McNeilly and "Kid" Smith, but the latter was chosen because of his ability to drop goals. Bramer, the big wing man, cannot get into shape, and will not play. Gatenby will take Thompson's place at outside wing. There may be one change, but not more than that.

Tigers are well satisfied with the selection of Phil. McKenzie, of Montreal, as referee, and think he will not stand for what they regard as interference tactics of Varsity. J. B. McArthur as umpire is also satisfactory.

Ticket speculators are reaping a harvest, some seats having been sold at as high as $25. It has been found impracticable to add to the seating accommodation.

Chief Smith denies the story that he will have a squad of mounted men to meet the Varsity rooters. James Dixon, father of "Reddy" Dixon, the Varsity fullback, will give the team a dinner at the Commercial Club after the game on Saturday.

Bowling Tournament To Commence At The Y.M.C.A.

Next Monday will see the start of the Big Bowling Tournament at the Y. M. C. A. In the meantime the alleys will be put in first-class condition and everything will be put in shape for the fastest kind of bowling. The interest is keen. There are now five teams entered and there is talk of some of the senior members from the Collegiate entering a team.

Big Three — Stanley Ketheghan, Stanley Norris, Nelson Whetlaufer.

High Rollers—I. J. Thompson, Walter Flowers, Alex. Fitzgerald.

Lancashire Trio — P. Braun, B. Leader, T. Evans.

Three Mivvies—A. H. Sparrow, J. Elliott, C. Barrett.

Midgets—R. C. A. Lawson, G. Lawson, F. Tait.

Famous Hockey Excursion To Peterborough Is Recalled

Speaking of next Saturday's rugby game the Toronto Star says: Anyway, Toronto will send forth the greatest sporting exodus in her history.

In 1905, when the Marlboros went to Peterborough to play off the senior O.H.A. tie with Smith's Falls, 1,500 Toronto people went up on the special and the following year the town sent 1,500 to Berlin with Argos for the senior O.H.A. final. Those excursions hold the record up to date, but when the big city moves down to the little town all these records will be buried.

Francis Nelson's Views On Junior Age Limit

The Toronto Globe says of the junior age limit: In the cold light of the morning after, the limit of twenty year for junior players in the Ontario Hockey Association does not look just the same to some of the delegates who were so enthusiastic for it last Saturday. The pleasing prospect then presented is now replaced by the chill fact that they have smoothed the way for the entire champion team, with one exception, to remain in the junior series this season. Mr. James T. Sutherland, manager of the Frontenacs, who fathered the twenty-year limit, told the convention that, in spite of his long connection with the game, this was his first appearance as a delegate to the annual gathering. You may notice that the junior champions made no mistake in the appointment. Mr. Sutherland, as is not unusual with him, got what he came for.

Last winter we had, perhaps, the finest lot of junior teams that ever battled for the O.H.A. honours in that series. If the best of them included only one player over nineteen years of age, the argument that the quality of hockey would deteriorate under the nineteen year restriction is answered. Hockey is a boys' game, and the first class player is practically as good at twenty as at twenty-five years. The present limit does not give proper encouragement or opportunity for real juniors in the O.H.A. The young and inexperienced have to compete in that division against teams good enough to win the intermediate or senior series — St. Michael's College for instance. To meet this admitted situation the supporters of Mr. Sutherland's resolution suggested the establishment of a juvenile series, but with our brief and uncertain period of ice, it is hardly practicable to increase the number of O.H.A. fixtures by the addition of an extra series. The right way is to make the junior series really junior, and if the signs of the last few days can be read aright that is what will happen next year.

Big Rush For Tickets For The Hamilton Game

TORONTO, NOV. 24.—The place for tickets for the Tiger-Varsity game at Hamilton Saturday is in a safe deposit vault. There are few — a very few — for sale at prices that would put inflated land values to shame.

Tuesday night towards midnight the first of the "owls" lined up at 189 Yonge street for the sale of tickets which was to have begun to-day at 9 o'clock. That meant a tedious wait of 32 hours in the cold and rain.

Twenty-three hundred tickets were sent down from Hamilton and all of those except six hundred were gobbled by Varsity season-ticket holders. When it was seen last evening that the demand was overwhelmingly in excess of the supply it was decided to open the sale to obviate the necessity of several hundred people waiting out all last night only to be disappointed this morning.

At 7.45 the sale began, and the six hundred valuable little pasteboard lasted about half an hour. Places in the waiting line were guarded by policemen to prevent fights over disputed positions and to keep the waiters from blocking traffic, were valuable. One man who looked as though he needed an overcoat, a shave, a bath and a good meal more than football tickets, sold his place in line several times. As fast as he could make a sale he would drop back a few positions and buy out a lad. Before the sale was opened he could afford to pay good prices for positions well toward the front of the line and then be a long way ahead financially.

One sharp fellow devised a scheme whereby he sold numbered tickets for ten cents each which entitled the holder to his place in the line without staying there provided he came around at the stroke of each hour and answered a roll call.

There were people in line all day yesterday and ready to "camp out" all night. They had baskets of lunch, camp stools, blankets, sweaters, umbrellas and rain coats and were prepared to make the best of a bad job. As a great majority of them would have waited in vain, it was well for them that the sale was opened last night instead of this morning. Some of the Varsity students who are not members of the football organization and therefore unable to secure tickets in that way, arranged to relieve one another at two hour intervals throughout last night.

An amusing report reached the headquarters of a local telegraph company last night. An order came yesterday for a corps of operators to go to Hamilton to handle the copy for the Ambitious City papers who had intended, it seems, to issue sporting extras. Last night's story from Hamilton countermanded the order for telegraphers, because, it was stated, the newspaper compositors, pressmen, stereotypers and others refused to get out the extras. They want to see the battle at the cricket grounds.

NO PROFESSIONAL HOCKEY THIS YEAR IN PETERBOROUGH

Although the Examiner has flatly contradicted the statement several times that Peterborough would have a professional hockey team, there are still rumours floating around that this city will be represented in the Eastern Pro. League. There is absolutely nothing in this story. Take this as final that Peterborough and professional hockey will be complete strangers to each other, as far as this winter is concerned any way, and it is to be hoped for many winters to come.

Manager Meharry of the Brock St. Rink, when interviewed by the Examiner, in regard to the project, stated that there was absolutely nothing in the report, as far as the Brock St. Rink was concerned.

PETE CAMPBELL WILL BE SPARE

Local Boy May Get a Chance in Saturday's Game Against Tigers

Mike Kennedy has played both at half back and at outside wing for the champion Varsity team and is now practising at quarter; Bill Foulds has a sore leg. Pete Campbell of the H. team will be one of the Varsity spares.—Toronto Star.

"The Very Best" Hardwood, Cut and Split to Order. The Ontario Coal Co., Limited.

RUGBY

The students average 21.8 years of age. The Tigers have an average of 24.7 years, which after all, is not so high as some people thought. Tigers possess the oldest players on the two teams in Simpson and Craig, and incidentally the youngest, McFarland who is but an infant, 17 years of age. The combined age of the three oldest Tigers is but seven years less than the combined age of the four oldest Varsity men. Tigers have 565 pounds in the scrimmage, and 780 pounds divided between the inside and middle wings as against Varsity's 508-pound scrimmage and their 715 pounds on each side of the scrim. Coach DeMoulin is taking this into serious consideration, and will play that extra 122 pounds strong.

FOOTBALL'S TOLL

NEW YORK, NOV. 21.—Nineteen deaths on the gridiron or from injuries received in the game is football's toll thus far this year.

Appalling as is this number of fatalities, it is only approximately one-half as large as that of a year ago, when the number was 29, indicating that the new rules, while they have not entirely eliminated the dangerous features of football, have been successful in cutting down the number of fatal accidents.

Of the nineteen deaths reported to date, fourteen have occurred since the football season opened this fall. The other five were of players injured under the old rules, the most notable name in the latter list being that of Earl D. Wilson, the Annapolis midshipman, who hovered between life and death from last October to April 14, when he died in the Naval Hospital at Annapolis.

One of the recent fatalities was that of Capt. Rudolph Monk of the University of West Virginia, who died on the field a week ago yesterday afternoon while playing against Bethany College. Monk's death caused the cancellation of the balance of the schedules at both West Virginia and Bethany. Among the other colleges cancelling its games because of the death of a player was Wabash College of Indiana, following the death of Ralph Wilson, a halfback of the eleven, who expired in a St. Louis hospital following injuries sustained in the Wabash-University of St. Louis game the day before.

Shortly after the new rules made their appearance last spring, a number of prominent football coaches and critics declared that the increased open play would not materially reduce the number of injuries and that prediction has been fully borne out by the injuries reported from gridirons in all sections of the country this fall. The total number of cases of fractured bones is 250, while instances of dislocations, torn ligaments and gashes sustained swell the total to considerably over 400.

Deaths due to football	19
Accidents at first regarded as critical	17
Concussion of brain	12
Taken from field unconscious	14
Broken collar bones	65
Broken legs	36
Broken noses	35
Broken ribs	26
Broken arms	19
Broken ankles	17

Broken shoulders	11
Broken wrists	10
Broken toes	7
Broken hands	5
Broken jaws	2

Torn ligaments	32
Teeth knocked out	9

Says:—"Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is the Best Cough Syrup She Ever Used."

She writes:—"Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is the best cough syrup I ever used. My baby had a very bad cold. I was using Dr.'s medicine but that didn't seem to help the awful cough she had until I got a bottle of this great syrup. I have it in the house at the present time for the children and I think I couldn't get along if I didn't have it. I wish to thank you for all the good it has been to my family."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup contains all the lung healing virtues of the Norway pine tree, which combined with Wild Cherry bark and other pectoral remedies makes it one of the greatest known preparations for Coughs, Colds and all Throat and Lung Troubles.

It is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents at all dealers.

STENOGRAPHER HEIR TO $100,000 FORTUNE

Examiner Special.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., NOV. 19.—Miss Helen Houlihan, stenographer, twenty years old, employed in a box manufacturing plant, has become heir to $100,000 under circumstances sufficiently dramatic to form the climax of a successful modern melodrama.

Miss Houlihan, daughter of a railroad conductor, was born in Wisconsin. When she was five years old her father died, leaving a widow and six children. The support of so large a family taxed to the utmost the resources of the widow, and Miss Houlihan went to live with an aunt near Northampton, Mass.

She was an apt pupil in the graded schools and the high school, leaving the latter institution to take a course in a business college. Three years ago she got a situation in Springfield as a stenographer, and has since made this city her home. Meantime Miss Houlihan's mother had been waging a legal battle which would have discouraged the average man.

Soon after her husband's death Mrs. Houlihan learned that her husband, in partnership with another man, had become heavily interested Wis. Mr. Houlihan, having the full- Wis. Mr. Houlihan, havin gthe fullest confidence in his partner, had named him as executor of his will. One of the first acts of the executor was to dispose of the Green Bay property. Mrs. Houlihan protested in vain and then brought suit.

For fifteen years the matter was threshed out from the lowest to the highest court in Wisconsin. Reverses did not discourage Mrs. Houlihan, and a fortnight ago the Wisconsin Supreme Court handed down a final decision sustaining the Houlihan claim in every particular. Stripped of legal phraseology, the decision carried with it an award of more than $1,000,000, of which Mrs. Houlihan's children will receive something more than $166,666 apiece.

The announcement of her good fortune came unexpectedly to Miss Houlihan in a letter from her mother, received in the morning's mail one rainy day. Miss Houlihan did not go into raptures, neither did she resign her position. Instead, she reread the letter, carefully placed it in her handbag, and turned to her employer for the morning's dictation. At noon she broke the news in a matter-of-fact way to two or three girl friends with whom she lunched.

That fortune-hunters should let Miss Houlihan's changed circumstances pass without an effort to profit by them was not to be expected. Half a dozen offers of marriage have already been received, most of them coming from total strangers. All of the applicants state that they are domestically inclined, and each admits that he possesses rather better than the average business insight, and that it would be no trouble at all to advise Miss Houlihan in money matters or even to take the entire burden off her hands.

Communications of this nature Miss Houlihan unfeelingly tosses to friends or office associates who chance to be near when they are received.

FIGHTING BONNETS WOMEN'S HEADGEAR

NEW YORK, NOV. 21.—Has the Great Hunter anything to do with it? Is the slaughter of the G. O. P. really at the bottom of the whole matter, or has the struggle for the ballot mounted to the feminine brain and are the ladies talking literally through their hats?

The fighting bonnets of the women of 1910 will go down into history as the symbols of more kinds of fistic prowess than any international meet of warriors could present.

The creations from Paris and Vienna for the fall and winter season are bristling with animosities. Even the antis in these days are forced to march about like monuments of helmeted defiance.

Women have lost their hair—it has disappeared beneath a tall fur shako or the low browed hat of a swaggering bravo which covers the very ears themselves. Foreheads are no longer in vogue. Plumes are flaunted apparently only for the purpose of threatening human life, and the most modest and retiring of the eternal feminine carry with them the atmosphere of concealed weapons.

The fashions have been distributed or adapted with no concern for the years of the wearer. A stately dowager [illegible] a cuirassier's helmet [illegible] with a towering plume climbing up from its midst to jump up and down emotionally with her every move is an awesome sight. But wait till you run across the woman who prefers a circle of feathers like the paraphernalia of an Indian brave or come without warning on a sweet young thing with a Saracen's turban in cloth of gold swathed about her head and ending in a jewelled dagger in front.

The Robin Hood hats, tall and narrow and soft and well pulled down, with saucy cock's feathers, only need a bow and arrow to make the illusion complete. And if your taste runs to a romance of Southern skies you may always rely on meeting a Toreador hat of fur, with the bull-fighter's rosette of brilliant colour on the side.

The casque of the old time warriors, even to the visor, which is outlined in the close, upturned brim above the face, is much a la mode. When it carries a little cut steel trimming no imagination is needed to create a belief in the bloodthirsty possibilities of the wearer. The Tyrolean hats, in the prasing green of the hunter, knocked in at any point that suits the woman in the case, are holding their own fair models.

Even the brocaded hat, with flat crown and slashed brim of the fat Sir John Falstaff, who was trounced by the Merry Wives, and the close jockey of that valiant coward Tony Lumpkin have their imitators. The entire trend of the season is to the manlike as distinguished from the mannish. Womankind is marching on to glory, and marching in the hats suited to the occasion.

CLAIMING AMNESTY

Brazilian ... ... 7890$ 6 N1678 Senate Has Met and Approved the Granting of a General Amnesty For the Sailors Who Rose Against Their Officers—They Want More Pay and Abolition of Corporal Punishment In the Navy.

Rio Janeiro, Nov. 25.—The mutineers in the navy have sent a message to the Government offering to surrender.

The Senate has unanimously approved a proposition for amnesty to the rebels.

The Chamber of Deputies closed its meeting and adjourned until to-day with the question of amnesty for the mutineers still under discussion. It is thought that amnesty will be granted by a small majority.

The Sao Paulo and Bahia have gone outside the bar, but the Minas Geraes has taken up a position in the bay, opposite the Government palace.

These are the two battleships whose crews mutinered Wednesday. They turned their guns upon the loyal ships and also threw a few shells into the city. During the outbreak several officers were killed. The fighting ceased at night, but the revolters remained in possession of the two vessels.

It is officially stated that the trouble is not of a political character, and should be described as a mutiny among the sailors to enforce certain concessions from their officers, rather than a revolt against the administration of President Fonseca.

For some time the men of the navy had been agitating the matter of more pay. They also objected to the practice in the navy of inflicting corporal punishment upon insubordinate or otherwise offending sailors.

The matter came to a head Wednesday when the crews of two of the bigger warships turned upon their superiors. It is reported that the captain of the battleship Minas Geraes was killed.

Following the fighting the mutineers made a formal demand for increased pay and the abolition of corporal punishment, and then withdrew to the outer harbor.

The battleship Sao Paulo and Minas Geraes, both modern Dreadnoughts, were built in England for Brazil. They were in London at the time of the Portuguese uprising, the newly-elected Brazilian President, Marshal Hermes Fonseca, being on board one of them. It was these foreign warships which first offered a refuge to Manuel and his mother.

DANGER IS NOW OVER

Claimant to Presidency Issues a Manifesto Explaining the Revolution—He Is Reported by Government Officers to Have Been Wounded In Yesterday's Fighting—Only One Storm Centre.

Laredo, Texas, Nov. 25.—Mexican Consul Miguel E. Diebold, with headquarters in this city, received official advices yesterday which say that quiet has been restored at all points save one throughout the country. The exception cited is what is known as the Guerrero district, in the State of Chihuahua. In that section 200 revolutionists are still making attacks on small villages.

The consul asserts that they are not "revolutionists," but bandits, who are using the uprising as a pretext to rob and pillage.

Gen. Lourso Villar, stationed in Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, received official advices yesterday from all points embraced in his jurisdiction, extending from Matamoras to Colombia, 30 miles above Laredo, on the Mexican side of the river, and says everything is quiet along the border, and in the immediate interior.

The Mexican Government still maintains a cordon of troops along the border. On the American side of the river troops are on guard from Brownsville to Del Rio, and, according to information, this stretch of territory has been quiet all day.

Madero Wounded.

Eagle Pass, Texas, Nov. 25.—The Mexican commander in Ciudad Porfirio Diaz, last evening informed Customs Collector R. W. Dowe that Francisco I. Madero, claimant of the Presidency of Mexico, was badly wounded in a fight yesterday at Guerrero between his forces and 200 rurales and cavalry, commanded by Col. Fuentes and Lieut. Nicanor Valdez.

The Mexican commander said his advices came directly from a trustworthy citien of Guerrero, who arrived during the day. According to the report, Madero was leading his forces when federal troops engaged them. The engagement was fierce though brief.

Madero was seen to fall from his horse, and was carried to the rear as his force fell back. The federal troops are reported to have followed up their advantage, scattering the rebels, who took to their heels. The nature of Madero's wounds are unknown.

Madero's Appeal.

New York, Nov. 25.—A manifesto credited to and signed by Francisco I. Madero, who said that it was right to rise against the Government of President Diaz was made public here last night by friends and partisans of Madero, who said that it was received in this city yesterday. The manifesto is in Spanish, and it dated at San Luis Potosi, Mexico, Oct. 5, 1910. A footnote to its says it is for private circulation up to Nov. 15, and thereafter it is to be circulated broadcast.

"In their uninterrupted struggle for the triumph of the ideals of liberty and justice, people are compelled, at certain historical moments, to make the greatest sacrifices," is the way it begins.

"Our beloved fatherland has reached such a stage," it continues. "A despotism, such as we Mexicans have not been accustomed to bear since we secured our independence, oppresses us to such a degree that it has become intolerable."

It recites that a feeling of unrest has pervaded the republic because of this system of Government, and because of the efforts of Diaz to saddle upon the nation a successor of his own choice. This, it is declared, decided many Mexicans to undertake the struggle for a recovery of popular sovereignty and this anti-re-election national party was organized for the purpose. It named Madero and Dr. Francisco Pasque Gomez for the offices of President and Vice-President, and, the manifesto goes on, President Diaz, realizing the conditions, had Madero imprisoned before the elections. The elections took place, it is stated, the people being excluded from the meetings by violence, prisons were filled with independent citizens and shameful frauds occurred.

Car Turned Turtle.

Elmira, N.Y., Nov. 25.—Robert J. Round, principal of school No. 5 and one of Elmira's prominent educators, was almost instantly killed and two others were slightly injured, when a street car bearing a load of spectators to a football game jumped the track on a curve just outside of the football field yesterday afternoon. The car turned turtle and struck a telephone pole, throwing Prof. Round to one end of the car, where his head was crushed by a broken timber. There were 29 people in the car at the time, but all of the others escaped with slight bruises and cuts.

Canadians Honored.

Two Years for Highway Robbery.

Toronto, Nov. 25.—William Pickens and Thomas Keenan were charged with assaulting and robbing George Blendo in "the ward" a few days ago. They had wrestled with him in the street and Pickens had taken $20 from him. Joseph Mandel followed Pickens and made him give up $15. Pickens has a record, and was sent to the Central for two years, while Keenan, who has a previously clean slate, goes on suspended sentence.

AMENDS THE REPLY

Leader of the Opposition Makes Another Attack on the Government, In Which He Says Conservatives Will Stick to Their Old Policy In the Matter of the Navy—Mr. Monk Introduces Co-operative Bill.

Ottawa, Nov. 25.—Shortly before recess yesterday afternoon R. L. Borden made a spirited attack upon the Government, following the lines so far laid down in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. What Mr. Borden's speech on Monday lacked in vigor and definition was more than made up yesterday. To the accompaniment of applause he affirmed:

"We will retract no part of our policy because Nationalist or Liberal agrees with it," and declared that, before a permanent naval establishment was created, the people should have an opportunity to pass upon it.

Dr. Thomas Chisholm, later in the debate, made a significant reference to United States influence on the Railway Commission.

Taking advantage of the opportunity afforded by the introduction of the amendment of F. D. Monk (Conservative, Jacques Cartier), regretting that the Government gives no indication whatever to consult the people upon its naval policy," Mr. Borden spoke for the second time during the debate. Digressing for a moment from the issue presented in the Monk amendment, Mr. Borden proceeded to answer a few of the criticisms raised by Hugh Guthrie (South Wellington) on Wednesday, who had declared that Canadian imports from Great Britain last year amounted to $217,000,000, whereas the Government returns showed that this trade aggregated but $95,000,000.

Dealing with the controversy raised by Mr. Guthrie over the alleged ownership of public lands in the western provinces, the leader of the opposition said that the crown owns all lands included in the public domain, and the real issue was one of administration, not ownership. Mr. Guthrie had spoken of the value of these lands, and declared that they were only a matter of expense to the Federal Government. "That does not seem to be very much in harmony with the proposal of the Government of Canada to build the Hudson Bay Railway out of the proceeds of these lands," he argued.

Proceeding, Mr. Borden indicated that Mr. Beland had mistakenly quoted the resolution of the last session of Parliament, introduced by Conservatives, in its original form, in which Mr. Beland said that last year the policy of the Conservative party was in favor of a stated emergency contribution, and now it was in disregard to the resolution of 1908, to which that party had assented. The resolution amended in that very particular finally said that that policy of regularly or periodical contributions to the Imperial Treasury for naval and military purposes would not, as far as Canada is concerned, be the most satisfactory solution of the question of defence.

Answering some remarks by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Borden disclaimed any statement by him that Canada should send warships to Great Britain, but should not provide for the maintenance and equipment of the naval stations at Halifax and Esquimalt. Last session he had called the attention of Mr. Brodeur and Sir Frederick Borden to the unsatisfactory condition of the stations.

Comparing the statements made by the Government in the recent campaign with those which appeared in the Nationalist press, in which the Government argued that the establishing of a Canadian navy was a step towards independence, Mr. Borden did not characterize as being of a very high order.

Explaining sympathy with the subject Mr. Monk had in sight, Mr. Borden submitted the following amendment to that of Mr. Monk, the terms of which he thought would express the views desired with more satisfactory import:

"We beg to assure Your Excellency of the unalterable attachment and devotion of the people of Canada to the British crown, and of their desire and intention to fulfill all just responsibilities devolving upon this country as one of the nations of the Empire. We desire, however, to express our regret that Your Excellency's gracious speech gives no indication whatever of any intention on the part of Your Excellency's advisers to consult the people upon the naval policy of Canada."

Dr. Eugene Paquet (Conservative, L'Islet), who continued the debate, took exception to the statement made by the Government, that the cost of the navy would not exceed $15,000,000. He claimed it would in a very few years exceed double that amount.

Z. A. Rivet (Hochelaga), Dr. Thos. Chisholm, H. H. Miller and F. L. Fowke also spoke on the address.

F. D. Monk introduced his bill respecting co-operative credit societies. He explained that last session he and Lloyd Harris of Brantford had two bills before the House regarding co-operation. The banking and commerce committee threw out the bill regarding co-operation generally, but reported favorably the credit societies bill. Therefore he had brought it up again.

Widow, Despondent, Suicides.

Toronto, Nov. 25.—Mrs. Annie Fitzgerald, a widow, living with her daughter on the Kingston road, was found in a shed in rear of her home in a dying condition yesterday. Her daughter summoned Dr. Walters, but she was dead before he arrived. She had been ill for two months and was despondent. She had taken carbolic acid.

TO HAVE PAROLE SYSTEM.

Hon. Mr. Hanna to Have Central Prison Board.

Toronto, Nov. 25.—A parole board is to be constituted in connection with the new Central Prison at Guelph, and while the personnel of the board has been decided upon by the Provincial Secretary, he prefers not to make the names public until they have been consulted and have consented to act.

"The work will involve some time and attention, and does not carry with it remuneration beyond repayment of out-of-pocket expenses. The board, however, is most important to our whole prison scheme," said Hon. Mr. Hanna.

"I was glad to find, as I expected I would, that the Hon. Mr. Aylesworth, Minister of Justice, heartily approves of the board. Its duties will be to investigates the cases, on the ground, themselves, and to make such recommendations as they may see fit to the Department of Justice at Ottawa. Its duties do not involve in any sense a transfer of the function of the Department of Justice to the parole board, but simply leaves the Department to act on recommendations that the board may make. Should these recommendations be made only after the care and consideration that I expect will be given them, they will generally, no doubt, be adopted at Ottawa."

To Test the Feeling.

Montreal, Nov. 25.—It is now stated that the pro-navy demonstration in St. Johns on Saturday indicates that another test is to be made in this province as to public opinion on the popularity of the Ministerial measure, which brought such signal disaster to the administration in Drummond and Arthabaska.

The story goes in political circles that Recorder Dupuis will be retired on account of ill-health, and that Joe Demers, M.P., for St. Johns, Iberville, will be appointed in his place, and that one more county will be asked in the very near future to pronounce itself upon the wisdom of the Ministerial policy, the gathering in St. Johns on Saturday being but the prelude of the campaign.

The Government supporters claim that Mr. Bourassa will be absent, and that, without his oratory, the verdict of Drummond and Arthabaska cannot be repeated.

It is also said that other judicial appointments may be made in the near future, although the temper of the electorate just now will prevent members of Parliament in any great number from donning the ermine before the general election, but it is said that C. A. Wilson, M.P. for Laval, may be appointed to the position held by the late Judge Piche, and that the Government candidate in Laval will be Mr. David, who delivered such a very fine speech the night of the Laurier demonstration in the Monument Nationale.

THE

Are you aware that almost everyone is equipped with unequal eyes? That is to say, the right is stronger than the left, or vice versa. We rarely realize this, because the stronger eye takes upon itself all the work and the weaker one scarcely ever attempts to do anything.

NATURE'S INEVITABLE LAW!

Every organ or faculty which is not made use of for a considerable length of time, becomes gradually but surely useless. And this is the effect on the eyes: work keeps the strong eye in good order, but lack of work causes the other to grow worse.

Possibly you may be in this condition. If so my record in the Optical Business during the past seven years in this city, is proof of my ability to benefit you.

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

"Guy," she said, "even now I do not believe that you meant to be so very, very foolish. But I want you to go away at once. You should never have come. It is not good for you to come near either of us."

I rose obediently. I think that if I had not been there my father would have struck her. He was almost speechless with fury. He poured himself out another glass of brandy with shaking fingers.

"Thank you," I said to her, simply. "I do not think that these papers are worth five thousand. Let me tell you what I came here for. I am a messenger from the Duke of Rowchester."

My father dropped his glass. Mrs. Smith-Lessing looked bewildered.

"The Duke," I said to her, "desires to see you. Can you come to Cavendish Square this afternoon?"

"The Duke?" she murmured.

"He wishes to see you," I repeated. "Shall I tell him that you will call at four o'clock this afternoon, or will you go back with me?"

"Do you mean this?" she asked in a low tone. "I do not understand it. I have never seen the Duke in my life."

"I understand no more than you do," I assured her. "That is the message."

"I do not promise to come," she said. "I must think it over."

My father pushed her roughly away.

"Come, there's been enough of this fooling," he declared roughly. "Stay sit down again, my boy. We must have another talk about this matter."

I turned upon him in a momentary fit of passion.

"I have no more to say, sir," I declared. "It seems that you are not content with ruining your own life and overshadowing mine. You want to drag me, too, down into the slough."

"You don't understand, my dear boy!"

The door opened and Ray entered. My bundle of papers slipped from my fingers on to the floor in the excitement of the moment.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

MYSELF AND MY STEPMOTHER

I saw then what a man's face may look like when he is stricken with a sudden paralysing fear. I saw my father sit in his chair and shake from head to foot. Ray's black eyes seemed to be flashing upon us all the most unutterable scorn.

"What is this pleasant meeting which I seem to have interrupted, eh?" he asked, with fierce sarcasm. "Quite a family reunion;"

My stepmother, very pale, but very calm, answered him.

"To which you," she said, "come an uninvited guest."

He laughed harshly.

"You shall have others, other uninvited guests, before many hours are past," he declared. "You remember my warning, Duraine."

My father seemed to me to be on the eve of a collapse. His lips moved, and he mumbled something, but the words were wholly unintelligible. Ray turned to my stepmother.

"When that man," he continued "had the effrontery to return to this country, he sent his cursed jackal with letters to his son. I intercepted those letters, and I burned them: but I came straight to London, and I found him out. I told him then that I spared him only for the sake of his son. I told him that if ever again he attempted in any way to communicate with him, personally, or by letter, nothing should stay my hand. He had a very clear warning. He has chosen to defy me. I only regret, madam, that the law has no hold upon you also."

She turned from him scornfully and laid her hand upon my father's shoulder. Her very touch seemed to impart life to him. His words were not very coherent, but they were comprehensible.

"I kept my word, Ray. Yes, I kept my word," he said. "I never sent for him. Ask him; ask her. We met by accident. I told him my address. That is all. He came here this afternoon with a message from the Duke."

Ray laughed bitterly. There was about his manner a cold and singular aloofness. We were all judged and condemned.

"An invitation to dinner, I presume," he remarked.

"The Duke sent for me," my stepmother said, quietly.

She did not for a moment quail before the scornful disbelief which Ray took no pains to hide.

"You can see for yourself if you like," she continued, "that in a few minutes I shall leave this house with you, if you are gallant enough to offer me your escort, and I shall go straight to Cavendish Square. You have no imagination, Colonel Ray, or you would not be so utterly surprised. Think for a moment. Does no reason occur to you why the Duke might wish to see me?"

It obviously did. He frowned heavily.

"If this absurd story is true," he said, "and the Duke has really sent to ask news of Blenavon from you—well, he is a bigger fool than I took him for. But there remains something else to be explained. What are those papers?"

My father laid his trembling hands upon them.

"They have nothing to do with you," he explained; "nothing at all! It is a little family matter—between Guy and me. Nothing more. They belong to me. Damn you, Ray, why are you always interfering in my concerns?"

Ray turned to me. There was a look in his eyes which I readily understood. At that moment I think that I hated him.

"What are those papers?" he asked.

"Take them and see," I answered. "If I told you you would not believe me."

He moved a step towards them, and then paused. I saw that my father was leaning forward, and in his shaking hand was a tiny gleaming revolver. A certain desperate courage seemed to have come to him.

"Ray," he cried hoarsely, "touch them at your peril!"

There was a moment's breathless silence. Then with an incredibly swift movement my stepmother stepped in between and snatched up the little roll. She glanced behind at the grate, but the fire was almost extinct. With a little gesture of despair she held them out to me.

"Take them, Guy," she cried.

Ray stood by my side, and I felt his hand descend like a vice upon my shoulder.

"Give me those papers," he demanded.

I hesitated for a moment. Then I obeyed him. I heard a little sob from behind. The pistol had fallen from my father's shaking fingers, his head had fallen forwards upon his hands. A hardly remorse seemed for a moment to have pierced the husk of his colossal selfishness.

"It is all my fault, my fault!" he muttered.

My stepmother turned upon him, pale to the lips, with blazing eyes.

"You are out of your senses," she exclaimed. "Guy, this man is a bully. All his life it has been his pleasure to persecute the weak and defenceless. The papers are yours. I do not know what they are, nor does he," she added, pointing to where my father still crouched before the table. "Don't let him frighten you into giving them up. He is trying to drag you into the mesh with us. Don't let him! You have nothing to do with us, thank Heaven!"

She stopped suddenly, and snatched the pistol from my father's nerveless grasp. Then her hand flashed out. Ray was covered, and her white fingers never quivered. Even Ray took a quick step backwards.

"Give him back those papers," she commanded.

I intervened, stepping into the line of fire.

"I gave them to him willingly," I told her. "I do not wish to have them back. He is one of my employers, and he has a right to claim them."

I spoke firmly, and she saw that I was at any rate in earnest. Yet the look which she threw upon me was a strange one. I felt that she was disappointed, that a certain measure of contempt too was mingled with her disappointment. She threw the pistol on to the sofa and shrugged her shoulders.

"After all," she said, "I suppose you are right. The whole affair is not worth these choices. I am ready to go with you to the Duke, Guy, unless Colonel Ray has any contrary orders for us."

Ray turned to me.

"You must come with me at once to my rooms," he said coldly. "This person can find the Duke by herself, if indeed the Duke has sent for her."

I understood then why people hated Ray. There was a vein of positive brutality somewhere in the man's nature.

"I am sorry," I answered, "but I cannot come to your rooms at present. The Duke is my present employer, and I am here to take Mrs. Smith-Lessing to him. As long as she is willing to accept my escort I shall certainly carry out my instructions."

"Don't be a fool, Ray," Ray exclaimed sharply. "I want to give you a last chance before I go to Lord Chelsford."

"I do not think," I answered, "that I care about accepting any favours from you just now, Colonel Ray. Nor am I at all sure that I need them," I added.

He turned on his heel, but at the door he hesitated again.

"Guy," he said in a low tone, "will you speak to me for a moment outside?"

I stood on the landing with him. He closed the door leading into the sitting-room.

"Guy," he said, "you know that if I leave you behind, you link your lot with—them. You will be an outcast and a fugitive all your days. You will have to avoid every place where the English language is spoken. You will never be able to recover your honour, you will be the scorn of all Englishmen and English-women. I speak to you for your mother's sake, boy. You have started life with a cursed heritage. I want to make allowance for it."

I looked him straight in the face.

"I am afraid, Colonel Ray," I said, "that you are not inclined to give me credit for very much common sense. Take those papers to Lord Chelsford. I will come round to your rooms as soon as possible."

He looked at me with eager, searching gaze.

"You mean this?"

"Certainly!" I answered.

He seemed about to say something, but changed his mind. He left me without another word. I stepped back into the sitting-room. My father with an empty tumbler in his hand, was crouched forward over the table, breathing heavily. My stepmother, with marble face and hard set eyes, was leaning forward in her chair, looking into the dying fire. She scarcely glanced at me as I entered.

"Has he gone?" she asked.

"Yes," I answered. "Will you get ready, please? I want to take you to the Duke."

She rose to her feet at once, and moved towards the door. I was left alone with my father, but he never stirred during her absence, nor did I speak to him. She returned in a few minutes, dressed very quietly, and wearing a veil which completely obscured her features. We walked to the corner of the square, and then I called a hansom.

"I knew nothing about Lor dBlenavon," she said, a little wearily. "I suppose the Duke will not believe that, but it is true."

"You can do no more than tell the truth," I remarked.

"Tell me what he is like—the Duke she asked abruptly.

"He is a typical man of his class," I answered. "He is stiff, obstinate, punctilious, with an extreme sense of honour, to gratify which, by-the-bye, he has just deliberately pauperized himself. He will not remind you in the least of Lord Blenavon."

"I should imagine not," she answered.

Then there was a short silence, and I could see that she was crying under her veil. I laid my hand upon hers.

"I am afraid," I said gently, "that I have misled you a little. You are worrying about me, and it isn't half so necessary as you imagine. You thought me mad to listen to my father's offer, and a coward to give up those papers to Ray. Isn't that so?"

My words seemed to electrify her. She pushed up her veil and looked at me eagerly.

"Well? Go on!" she exclaimed.

"There are some things," I said, which I have made up my mind to tell no one. But at least I can assure you of this. I am not nearly in so desperate a position as you and Colonel Ray seemed to think."

She caught hold of my hand and grasped it convulsively. The hard lines seemed to have fallen away from her face. She smiled tremulously.

"Oh, I am glad!" she declared. "I am glad!"

Just then a carriage passed us, and I saw Lady Angela lean a little forward in her seat as though to gain a better view of us.

CHAPTER XXXV.

ANGELA'S CONFESSION

The Duke was in his study awaiting our arrival. I saw him rise and bow stiffly to my stepmother. Then I closed the door and left them alone.

I wandered through the house, a little at a loss to know what to do with myself. It was too soon to go to Ray, and the work on which I was engaged was all in the study. Just as I passed the drawing-room door, however, it opened suddenly, and Lady Angela came out, talking to a white-haired old gentleman, who carried a stick on which he leaned heavily. He looked at me rather curiously, and then began to hobble down the hall at a great pace. But Lady Angela laid her hand upon his arm.

"Why, Sir Michael," she exclaimed, "this won't do at all. You can't look him in the face and run. Mr. Duraine this is Sir Michael Trogoldy."

Ask Yourself These Questions

And Find Out if You Have Kidney Disorders. Also Make This Test.

Have you pains in the back over the kidneys?

Have you urinary disorders?

Do you suffer from severe headaches, dizziness or defective eyesight?

Is the skin dry and harsh?

Are you failing in health and strength and suffering from rheumatic pains or swelling of the limbs?

These are a few of the symptoms of kidney disease, and here is the test.

If the urine after standing for twenty-four hours is cloudy, milky or has particles floating about in it, or if there is a sediment in the bottom of the vessel, your kidneys are diseased.

There is no time to lose in beginning the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills. Delay means the development of Bright's disease, and you do not want to take any chances with that. Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills will help you more quickly than any treatment you can obtain, and that is one reason why they are so successful and popular.

Mr. W. H. Mosher, South Augusta, Grenville county, Ont., writes:—"I used Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills and firmly believe there is no medicine to equal them. I was troubled for years with kidney disease, and this treatment has cured me. When I began the use of these pills I could only walk from my bed to a chair. Now I can go to the field and work like any other man. Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills are an excellent medicine." This statement is certified to by the Rev. E. H. Emett, Baptist minister, of Brockville, Ont.

Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. The portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book author, are on every box. These are for your protection against imitations and substitutes.

CURED OF CONSTIPATON

Mr. Andrews praises Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills.

Mr. George Andrews of Halifax, N.S., writes:

"For many years I have been troubled with chronic Constipation. This ailment never comes single-handed, and I have been a victim to the many illnesses that constipation brings in its train. Medicine after medicine I have taken in order to find relief, but one and all left me in the same hopeless condition. It seemed that nothing would expel from me the one ailment that caused so much trouble, yet at last I read about these Indian Root Pills.

That was indeed a lucky day for me, for I was so impressed with the statements made that I determined to give them a fair trial.

They have regulated my stomach and bowels. I am cured of constipation, and I claim they have no equal as a medicine."

For over half a century Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills have been curing constipation and clogged, inactive kidneys, with all the ailments which result from them. They cleanse the whole system and purify the blood. Sold everywhere at 25c. a box. 2

BILLY'S CLOTHES

A Short Story

By Helen Mather, Author of "Comin' Through the Rye," etc.

All Rights Reserved.

Bill bounced in his chair. "The dressmaker is coming again to-morrow?" he said; "why, she is hardly ever out of the house! Do I have a tailor working here days together for me?"

"It might be a good job if you did," said Mrs. Bradbury, nodding significantly.

"Look at me!" cried Bill, as he stood up, revolving slowly before her for most dissatisfied inspection. "Two-pounds-ten inclusive I gave for this suit—while you—"

"But look at the difference between us!" said Mrs. Bradbury cruelly. "Don't you know that good looks are letters of introduction—that you are received according to your appearance, and taken leave of according to your deserts,' 'that manner make the man,' and a man's brain are usually illuminated, or extinguished to the onlooker by the shine or shade of his tile, that 'to be poor is a misfortune, but to look at it is a crime'; how many more truisms must I fire off to convince you that your two-pound-ten suit is a ghastly failure ,and that the dressmaker who turns me out is a good investment?"

Bill was not a person to be routed easily, but he was to a certain extent crestfallen as he lifted his two pounden coattails and reseated himself in his chair.

It flashed disagreeably across him that for all his undoubted position his friends fought shy of him in the street, and looked another way when he met them at one of his brief visit to the Park, while in the dress-suit he had been wearing for the last fifteen years he had so constantly been handed empty coffee-cups, and requested by arrogant persons to fetch their hats, or call a cab, that he had got into one or two first class rows in consequence.

He remembered that when he had to catch a train, the porters invariably opened a third class carriage door for him, that beggars never ran after him out-of-doors (this was a distinct boon), and that the women he condescended to admire when he went abroad, did not appear to admire him—quite the contrary indeed.

"And cheap cloth is an abomination," said Mrs. Bradbury, who had unerringly followed the working of her spouse's mind, "and two cheap suits cost more than a single good one. 'Cheap and nasty'—it's a fine proverb. I buy good materials and they last for ever; it's a sin to put good work into bad stuff, and never pays—it costs just as much to make up rubbish as what will wear well and I've had the luck to find a Frenchwoman who fits perfectly, and actually goes out to work, yet you grumble at her—when I should be a disgrace, not a credit to you without her."

Bill was silent. He hoped that his wife would not notice that his unattended suit of clothes was already wearing greasy at the seams, though he had only had it a week.

"Worse than that," she went on "your credit, your temper, and your pocket suffer equally. No person can possibly be at his best who is not quite at his ease about his appearance—he should do the best possible for himself in that way—then forget it; but the ill-dressed man or woman will be reminded at every turn of his or her shortcomings. Your very friends—as totally apart from your acquaintances—like you better when you are a credit to them than the reverse, and the poorest one you've got suffers or gains in his surroundings by the figure you cut when you go to see him! In short, you are either an affront to him or a consolation."

"And if people can't take me as I am, they may go to the devil for all I care," said Mr. Bradbury, goaded into bad language at last by what he knew to be the truth.

"Where they will probably find you," said Mrs. Bradbury neatly. "Only a millionaire could afford to dress as you do. 'To him that hath shall be given,' and not one of your rich relations would dream of leaving you a penny. I don't say live beyond your means—but I do say make as good an appearance as you can on it, and try to make an agreeable unit in this ghastly, neutral tinted crowd that paces unendingly through our streets."

"I hate loud colors," said Bill.

"So do I—yet I never see the

"PIMPLES"

Broke Out All Over Her Face.

Pimples are caused, almost entirely, by bad blood, and there is only one way to get rid of them, and that is to get at the seat of the trouble by using a good reliable blood purifying medicine.

Burdock Blood Bitters has been on the market for 35 years, and is one of the very best blood medicines procurable. After using it you will find that the pimples have disappeared, and you will have a beautiful clear complexion.

Mrs. Robert McNab, Badjeros, Ont., writes:—"I am greatly pleased to report the benefit I have derived from the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. About a year ago I became so weak and run down I could scarcely walk, and pimples broke out all over my face. I tried one thing after another, but nothing seemed to do me any good. I was advised by a lady friend to try B.B.B., and before I had used one bottle I felt it was doing me good so I used three bottles, and I am now well and strong, and the pimples have all disappeared."

BILLY'S CLOTHES

crowd edging the towing path, boat-race day, or spreading itself in those meetings in the Park, without thinking:

Where every prospect pleases
And man alone is vile!

Think of what a crowd in the East meant of the beauty, the gorgeousness of it!"

"And think of the Dyer's bills," said Mr. Bradbury drily, "and how nice our purple and scarlet vestments would look in a London fog. We should look fine in Mincing Lane tripping over cloaks from Tyre and Sidon."

"Yes, Bill, you would. Any scrap of color or brightness that you can contribute to any place you are in is a step towards brightening up our corner of this dull earth. God is Love, God is Light, God is Color and everything alive should try and be as bright and beautiful as it knows how."

"Very good, my dear. When I meet you out in a ruby gown, a blue coat, and a magenta feather, I shall know you are sacrificing yourself to your scheme of beautifying the world."

"You will never see that. You might even find me in a black dress—but I should have some one pure bit of color somewhere—a flower, if possible, that should cheer every eye that saw it—just as only knowing it was there would make me happy."

"Well, thank God," said Mr Bradbury, "I never felt like that. To be clean and tidy—that's all I want."

"Now you've got really good blue eyes," said his wife meditatively, "and they cry out for a bit of color somewhere—a little dark blue in your stock, for instance, or a buttonhole with some blue in it—yet you put on a hard black tie, and if you ever are beguiled with a flower you invariably choose a red one or a white one!"

Bill smoked, and looked pleased.

He had forgotten that his eyes were blue, and he liked Rose to notice it, and began to remember that when he was making love to her he had been most particular about his clothes and ties and so on, and he distinctly recalled that at that period he once had a pair of trousers of a very neat, invisible sort of blue that he had fancied mightily.

"Yes," said his wife, "a cornflower buttonhole—or a narrow bird's eye tie in a neat bow—and a white waistcoat cut the right way and a properly-made alpaca suit chosen by me, and you would be a downright good-looking man!"

"Perhaps," said Bill, taking her pretty chin in his forefinger and thumb, "you would like to change the man too, while you are about it?"

"No, sir, I shouldn't. You were good enough to fall in love with, and you're good enough to stick to—but to be proud of you when we walk out together would be enchanting."

"So you're ashamed of me," said Mr. Bradbury, thinking of the many proud half hours he had had walking with his wife, how people always saw her and smiled at her approach, yet she never brought him in a bill of any kind, and bore the accusation of extravagance, hurled against her by her enemies, with a smile.

"I'm never ashamed of you," she said softly, "I look beneath your atrocious coat, and I find you by your appearance—and the man they see is morally, mentally, and socially inferior to the man I know. How can they look inside your brains or heart? And I say that the good, well-fitting coat that a man wears who can pay for and has the right to wear it, is a truer expression of him than the coarse ill-made one that in price and quality was clearly intended for an inferior and much poorer man."

"My dear," said Mr. Bradbury, "for which tailor do you hold a brief?"

His wife shook her head so tragically, that Bill got up and went over to the glass. He twisted himself this way and that, but two pounds 10 shillings stared him in the face all over. His figure was tall and really good, but so effectually disguised by its covering, that, as his wife often remarked, he might have looked better if he were short—he would have shown less of that shoddy covering.

"A big man wants such careful dressing," she used to say. "It's just like a tall woman—but oh! when she is a success, she beats the little one into fits!"

Mr. Bradbury squared his broad shoulders before the long glass; he had not studied his appearance like this for years—not since he used anxiously to look to see if he had on what Rose would like.

"And you used to be so neat, Bill," she said mournfully. "I always had an eye for a smart man and vowed I would never marry a man who wasn't!"

"I'm neat now," he said, still intent on the glass. "Hang it all, Rose, do you want me to use scent?"

"No. I'd murder you if you did. But it's nice," she added slowly, unwillingly even, "to own a thoroughly well-turned out man; he is such a credit to one, just as you may love a man with all your heart, and yet he can make you look, and feel, small. A woman is proud, you know, and likes to make the world admit that she has good taste—even in selecting a husband."

Bill was still looking in the glass, but he was taking stock now of his wife, yet if anything the advantage lay with him in point of birth and position. In a sudden flash he realised how she must have winced for him, how she might have drifted—how in the mere impulse of like towards like, she might have slipped, little by little, into the company of one of the many presentable men who admired her—he had wounded her pride, and a woman's pride in the man she loves is so much keener, so much more easily hurt than her own.

"Rose," he said in a voice that had suddenly become twenty years younger, "how was it that you didn't take up with one of those other men?" She looked at him rather sadly.

"Oh!" she said, "a little walk—a little talk"—(and into her face came a sudden illumination that revealed much) "I never was a reasonable person in anything, and I never would begin it, because if I had, I should never have stopped!"

"Rose," cried out her husband as if she had hurt him.

"But I never did begin, Bill—I wouldn't. I always try and not squirm all over when you come to fetch me from a party or somewhere, where the men are all so fresh and well groomed—and yet there is seldom one there you couldn't beat easily if you tried."

"So all the men pity you when they see me," said Bill, sitting down suddenly, as under a shock, "and they envy me. So I get the best of it all round," he added slowly.

"Yes, they think I must have loved you so very, very much to have married such clothes, and that you love me very, very little to wear them. You see, Bill, people can't look inside your mind, but they do see your hat and guess what sort of a man you are by its style and shape. And a man who is really good inside likes to have his outside to match—purely as a matter of taste—to please himself, even more than others. The labourer should be made to stick to frieze, the man of brains and birth should wear the dress of his class. I'd give worlds to have the old distinction between the classes back, and the old Sumptuary laws put into force. It would be a real treat to wear satin again without emulating one's cook!"

"You attach far too much value to externals," said Bill, trying to harden himself into a middle-aged man again, and failing signally.

"No, I do not—because, as I said before, it is by externals we make ourselves known and influence others. It can't hurt to convey a pleasant instead of a disagreeable impression—you can do much more with a person who likes you than one whom you repel—and you take much more sunshine about you when you know you're exactly right, than when you feel you are all wrong! People often say to me: 'How nice and well you look! It's only that I'm fresh. You're very fond of me, Bill, aren't you?'"

"What do you think?"

"Well, I think you're much fonder of me than I am of you! And once it was the other way round. Oh! you need not fly into a rage—but shall I tell you what has enabled me to keep your love all these years? Mainly by being clever about clothes. If I had let myself slide as you have done, you would not be a bit fond of me now. I should be laid on the shelf with the broken china, and statues without noses passed into the limbo of what was, not what is. You would never have bought all the lovely things in this room—it is a lovely room—if you had a frump to set down in the middle as chief ornament. You have gradually had your eye educated up to real taste, and I think it's chiefly a hard, brutal sort of Philistinism that makes you delight in spreadin' gout you two-pound-ten coat-tails, and thank God you are economical—otherwise mean."

"So it is a sin to be economical," said Bill, "and pray where would you and the rest of women be if all men were spendthrifts?"

"No man has a right to dress above or below his station," said Rose decidedly. "By spending what you can afford to spend on your appearance, you encouraged trade, you contribute your mite to lifting the pall of depression that is weighing down every industry, from the highest to the lowest. People blame spendthrifts—but if they ruin themselves, they do help others, their money percolates through every class, and it lives, it fulfils its uses: it is the misers, and the people who don't know how to spend their riches who ought to be suppressed, and if they won't spend it properly, deserve to have it taken from them."

Bill gasped.

"A few women like you would land everyone belonging to you in the workhouse," he said.

"Oh!" cried Rose, "I can pity the unselfishness of misers who hoard their money for wastrels to spend—but I admire the generous-handed man more—for his money extravagances are good for trade. Oh!" she added softly, "if you only knew how delicious it is to a woman to be proud of the man she loves!"

"The man she loves." Bill drew a deep breath and thanked God that at least there was no past participle there. And yet all her love had not saved him from outraging his wife's and friends feelings by suits at two-pound-ten.

He seemed to see the horrid figures whichever way he looked—and yet he had been so proud of them, so unostentatiously fond of comparing his economy with Rose's silken frivolities and frequent changes of raiment. Now her words: "Yes; but look at the difference between us!" smote him with the accent of truth; and then she came over and kissed him, with a half-earnest, half-laughing look, and went away to bed.

He sat for awhile in deep thought—(that look in his wife's face of memory of another man hit him hard)—then slapped his leg with a decision that meant business. "Today's Monday, it can be done by Sunday and it shall," he said.

It was Sunday morning, and Rose came into the room slowly, buttoning her gloves for church parade, and started at seeing a man with his back turned to her, standing at the window, who belonged most unmistakably to the smart brigade from the little crinkled point at the nape of his neck (the ill-dressed man invariably lets his hair grow long) to the hang of his supremely well-cut coat and boots, while reflected in the mirror she saw just a gleam of cornflower blue. She stood gazing at the familiar, yet unfamiliar, figure, glanced at the hat and gloves—nice perfect of their kind on the table near him—then with a beating heart stepped forward, and with almost tears in her voice ejaculated: "Bill!"

Bill turned, revealing himself as what he really was, a remarkably good-looking, well set-up fellow, and the pride in himself that should be encouraged in every man stirred in him as Rose stood on tip-toe, pulled his face down, and kissed him tenderly.

"Oh, Bill, Bill!" she cried, standing off to look at him, "come along, or we shall be late, and I want all my enemies to see you, they will hate me worse than ever! They never forgave me for being clever about my clothes and your being so fond of me. But a real, lawful, smart man of my own, they'll be fit to murder me!"

And they were.

The loyal heart, with a smart coat outside it, is what every woman loves, and Rose had it.

FROM HUMAN HEAD to HUMAN HEAD

THE Story of the Making of Woman's Crowning Beauty and a Light on the Subject "Whence Comes the False Hair Worn So Generally by American Women?"

FROM time immemorial it has pleased lovely woman to place upon her own glossy hair the crowning glory of some other woman. The reason she has done this, doubtless, is because she could.

Strange to say, hair is the only part of the human body transferable. Exception may be made, perhaps, of the skin, but transferring this involves surgical operation. One may not borrow a prettier hand, foot or even an eyebrow. Neither will any amount of money buy these.

With human hair, however, it is different. The amount a woman may possess is limited only by the size of her purse—transformations which encircle her head, switches which pile themselves about it, puffs to build out the fashionable chignon and little curls to play hide and seek among the laces of her hat.

Never were greater quantities of false hair worn than are worn to-day. In the most extreme styles of antiquity the hair "towers" were brushed over pillows or cushions, thus saving the amount to be bought.

Feminine fashions are more or less a matter of combination among dealers, dressmakers and milliners. A style which calls much material is ceased to stay as long as possible. This is just as true in the matter of hair as it is in anything else. It is safe to prophesy that as long as human hair can be bought and women will buy it, false hair will stay in fashion.

This false hair journeys from the head of the European peasant girl working in the fields and becomes the splendid bejewelled coiffure of the American heiress sitting in her box at grand opera.

The story of its journeying and the processes it undergoes ere it is ready to grace the society belle's head is an interesting one.

It is true that almost all the false hair worn in this country is imported. The American girl does not sell her hair. Buyers would have to go out of business and human hair factories shut down if they depended on the girls of the United States to furnish the hair supply. Back of this lies the fact that Miss Columbia knows the commercial value of human hair. The small sum which the buyer is willing to give seldom tempts her either to cut off her hair or to save and sell her combings. Therefore the hair peddler, or buyer rather, wastes not his time in the United States.

In certain foreign countries he takes his pack of trinkets, a little money and goes from door to door and village to village. He makes friends with and dangles his trinkets before the eyes of the peasant girls of Germany, Austria-Hungary, Italy, Sicily, Russia, China and Japan. If he can induce Gretchen, Lisa and the rest to part with a portion of the locks growing on their heads he is pleased. He is also willing to pay what seems an extraordinary sum to the peasant girl, unused to money. If the girl has only a little bag of combings to sell she may take a bit of jewelry, lace or little novelty which strikes her fancy.

It is not generally known that much hair finds its way from European convents to the heads of the fashionable Parisienne or American woman. Nuns in convents sometimes sell in small quantities to peddlers, in larger direct to the market.

What Does Not Happen.

A popular fiction is that the hair peddler carries a huge pair of shears and when he sees a head of hair which he covets on a peasant girl he shears her as a farmer shears a sheep. The hair peddler to-day is far too wise to pursue any such tactics. He wishes to buy more hair in this locality. If he goes about giving the maidens thereabout the appearance of being shorn sheep he will lose—not make—friends.

His method is a much wiser one. He passes the peasant girl in a chair, takes out a comb and makes a part halfway around her head. Then he combs the upper part of her hair forward over her face. The remainder hangs down her back. He takes his shears and cuts a portion of the hair from the centre of the back of the head. Then the girl can brush the front hair back over the shorn place. Her hair is thinner, for by this method the peddler takes from four to six ounces, but she can so arrange it that few will notice the difference.

The hair most prized comes from Germany and Austria-Hungary. That is because it has more of the ashen or dead shades which go to make up blond hair and it is nice and soft in texture. At one time the maidens who lived in the Land of the Midnight Sun Norway and Sweden were much sought after by hair peddlers. They were perfectly blond, their hair being silky and beautiful.

When a maiden refuses to sell her hair the peddler's greed got the better of his judgment. Determined to possess the lovely tresses, he simply cut off the girl's head with the hair on it. So frequent were these murders of peasant girls to obtain their hair that the government of Norway and Sweden stepped in and stopped them. Now there is a ban on the girls of those countries selling their hair and hair peddlers are outlawed.

Next in value to the hair from Germany and Austria-Hungary is that from Northern Italy. This is darker in color, but nice and soft in quality. Southern Italy, Sicily and Russia rank next.

The cheapest grade only comes from China and Japan. The latter countries supply hair that is all coarse in texture and dark brown in shade and color. The hair purchased from Chinese and Japanese women is all combings. It is said that the cut hair is never exported.

One of the largest manufacturers of human hair goods in New York city declares that in all his experience he has never seen any cut Japanese or Chinese hair. This manufacturer laughs at the idea some people have that Chinese or Japanese hair is cut from the heads of dead bodies. In every country, civilized or otherwise, he states, it is a crime to mutilate the dead. In China and Japan, where the native religions and superstitions are based on ancestral worship, it would be worth any one's life to desecrate the dead.

Besides, there is the great physiological reason: unless cut immediately after death, hair becomes saturated and permeated with odors, that no earthly agency can possibly remove.

Hair is a great absorbent of odors. Once filled with fire smoke the scent remains always.

Another popular fallacy is that hair is sold from the heads of fever patients and other ill people. It could not be sold, for it becomes so dry and matted that no dealer would buy it.

The hair peddler takes his bundles of human hair bought from foreign peasant girls to the dealer in his nearest town.

They have brushes, combs, curling irons and hairpins on the table before them, just as the woman who buys the puffs has on her dressing table at home. In fact, there is a domestic look about the entire machinery of a human hair factory. The boiling and dyeing room resembles the laundry. Combines Are Stubborn.

THE TRUE TALE OF A PERFUME BRAZIER

AT four sharp Van Amringe drove up to the country club in his motor and made his way across the green to where Alice Darrow, a vision in a Paris creation, all clear white and pink, sat watching some sturdy looking young women making themselves unbearable over tennis. Van Amringe regarded Alice Darrow with satisfaction. There were mighty few girls who could issue such a challenge to the bright sunlight as could Miss Darrow.

Van [illegible] smiles, and an equally smiling face was turned to greet him. "Where had he been so long they had expected him there for luncheon and he had been very much missed." Van Amringe went forward [illegible] pity in response to these greetings and in a moment bent over the fair Alice to murmur an appreciation of her condescension.

A subtle something like a quickly drawn curtain [illegible] between them. Van Amringe felt chilled. He stammered out his compliment hurriedly and settled down to [illegible] the game. What had happened? He could have sworn she was glad to see him when he came up and in a second she had changed utterly. He blundered along making conversation, but the day was no longer bright. There could be no doubt about it, the fair Alice was snubbing him at [illegible] Van Amringe, thoroughly mystified, strolled over to the other side of the lawn and continued to watch the game in miserable bewilderment. "By Jove," he muttered, "she was glad to see me. I'll swear it, and yet she changed in a second. What was it, what have I done?"

Tea was being served when, just at five, Charlie Storm's car came booting around the curve. "Ah," muttered Van Amringe, "on that's the secret [illegible] me! I didn't count; she was looking for Charlie Storm." He frowned uneasily on the outside of the tea drinking circle while Charlie Storm made his way with glad self confidence toward Miss Darrow.

Miss Darrow undoubtedly was glad to see him. The newcomer slid gracefully into the seat beside her with his accustomed calm assumption that the good things of life were all for him. Van Amringe strolled moodily across the green toward the club house, which he had hardly reached before, to his astonishment, he was joined by the successful Storm. "Funny girl, that," was the second rambler's explanation of his hasty quitting of the side of his partner. "I could have sworn she was glad to see me when I came up, and yet in a second she was well, icicles would be cordial," and he called loudly for William to prepare him something in the way of a specific for the funny way that girls act.

The two men sipped pensively and regarded the bright green across the lawn where the fair Alice held court until, when it was nearing six, they beheld Winthrop Bolton strolling across the green. He was breaking up, and Miss Darrow was making her way [illegible] the club house, accompanied by her chaperon. "He only came down with her in Miss Jones' car," muttered Charlie Storm vindictively. "Of course, that's what she's been waiting for."

Winthrop Bolton joined Miss Darrow and her chaperon [illegible] was greeted with the greatest cordiality. There was an expression of [illegible] self satisfaction even in the set of his shoulders [illegible] duly his shoulders [illegible] their own eyes his arrogant [illegible] deserted him and his footsteps lagged. He accompanied Miss Darrow and her chaperon to [illegible] tation to ride home with them [illegible] accepted. Bolton [illegible] as they went off, and [illegible]

DOLBY PAID THE FARES.

DOLBY was a big [illegible] company of nine women. He did not know any women. He simply happened to land in [illegible] among them. [illegible] the seat of the [illegible] and [illegible] the seat facing it. [illegible] was Dolby. He sat at the end of the seat, and when the [illegible] obliged to help [illegible] he [illegible] reached over [illegible] and helped it [illegible] conductor [illegible] passed it back [illegible]

Naturally such a complicated financial arrangement caused some confusion. There were so many [illegible] forward at one time that it was hard to keep track of the amount contributed by each, and when the accounts were finally settled possibly no [illegible] knew just how matters stood. Dolby, he had kept his head level all the way through, so he had no scruples about reaching across toward the woman in the fur coat and smiling coyly. "Fare, please," in [illegible] tones.

The woman bowed.

"Why, good gracious," she said, "I paid you some while ago."

"I didn't get it," said the conductor. "I've only got nine fares."

"But I paid," said she stoutly. "I gave it to him," and she pointed to Dolby. "I gave him a quarter. I have been wondering why I didn't get the change back."

Dolby's face became eloquent with indignation and surprise.

"What?" said he. "You gave me a quarter? Well, of all the!"

"Of course I did," the woman insisted. "Just as if you didn't know it. Conductor, please make him give me my change."

The conductor shuffled along the footboard uneasily.

"You'll have to settle that between yourselves," he said. "All I want is the nickel."

And Dolby, speechless with indignation, gave it to him and handed the woman twenty cents in change.

The conductor grinned.

"I guess," said he, "that after this you had better let folks pay their own fares."

"Thanks," said Dolby, "I think I shall! It's cheaper."

The club house. "Girls," he said some time during the next half hour, "are very strange; [illegible] they seem glad to see you, and the next" and then suddenly he observed that his companions were unduly interested, and he said no more.

And it would have remained a mystery if it had not been for a Bolton cousin of Bolton's, who was coming for dinner at the club and encountered the three men as they were going out. "Oh," she said, "you do look gloomy." She drew a long breath. "Oh," she exclaimed, "and so you've been going through the mire; you've all been calling on Mildred Black."

The three men gasped. "Why, how did you know?" they demanded.

"I'll tell you more than that," said the cousin, "you've been sitting in that silly little summer house of hers where it's all dim and woodsy and green and she had on that weird, enticing yellow green gown and crouched in a corner and used all manner of subtle enchantments on you."

The men confessed the indictment, with bowed heads. "But how did you know?" the deep cried again.

"Goosies," said the cousin. "Don't you know that you all are fraught with the fragrance that comes from Mildred Black's perfume brazier and that every other girl who comes near you knows perfectly well that you've been there going through all the enchantments. There's a whole string of them that go along with the perfume brazier."

"And I'll give you a bit of advice," said the cousin. "If you care to [illegible] you with other girls be careful about the perfume [illegible] it doesn't [illegible] exceedingly to be a [illegible] connection [illegible] her who [illegible] such [illegible] of another [illegible] girl's perfume [illegible] it [illegible] belong to Mildred Black."

"So we would imagine," agreed the youths and the [illegible] their way, still considering [illegible] the [illegible] of women [illegible] the [illegible] fact among [illegible] that [illegible] between Mildred Black and Alice Darrow.

But in spite of the warning given by this perfectly true tale the perfume brazier is becoming popular. It is being much used in Europe, and, naturally, as women who use it go to great pains to procure it usually [illegible] and [illegible] perfumed. The braziers look something like chafing dishes except that the top is perforated or latticed. Some of them have long handles like old fashioned warming pans. They are very ornamental and in many cases extremely expensive, as of course an opportunity is afforded for original designs and expert metal work.

Weaving

"machinery"—some smooth wooden sticks about six inches long, white string and their fingers. Each girl takes a handful of hair and winds it tightly around the stick, just as any one makes "corkscrew curls." She makes one "corkscrew" turn to the left and one to the right. These combined [illegible] and one to the right. The girl then [illegible] the switch. She ties and winds the white string [illegible] and secures it. As she finishes a certain number of these [illegible] she takes them. He packs them solidly in a big copper wash boiler, puts [illegible] gas stove and boils the contents for [illegible] hours. Then [illegible] the [illegible] switches [illegible] clean. [illegible] boiled and then [illegible] the dye room the switches [illegible] very wavy [illegible] of curls. [illegible] some of its [illegible] [illegible] more it [illegible] [illegible] time it is [illegible] and clean into a boiler of clear [illegible] water. Then it [illegible] [illegible] washing. It [illegible] [illegible] fresh air and [illegible] lines of wavy switches of human hair swinging in the [illegible] to give one the feeling that there has been an Indian massacre in the vicinity.

When the switch is finished it goes through the hand of the weaver. These [illegible] are long tables [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and more [illegible] [illegible] than the real hair which is [illegible] the same way. Combings must be sorted and turned so as to have the roots and ends pointing the same way. They undergo a cleansing process with warm and green soap, said to be much more thorough than the shampoo the average woman gives her hair at home. After being thus prepared the hair of different length is mixed to give it the proper taper. Then it is weighed and is subjected to four hours' boiling to insure absolute cleanliness.

Chinese and Japanese hair requires no assorting. It is all of the same dark brown shade. It is "drawn" into proper lengths and turned, the same as the combings. Then it goes through a thorough boiling process. It is put into a bath of muriatic or equally strong acid, which eats away the roughness and makes the hair more pliable. After this it is bleached when blond hair is desired and afterward dyed the required shade. If wavy hair is desired the strands are wound around the tiny sticks and boiled very hard. All Chinese and Japanese hair [illegible] curled this way to make it [illegible] This destroys its elasticity. Hair not properly cured mats, the roots clump together.

When hair is ready for sale its value depends on three things, shade, texture and length. The shades most prized are the natural white, light gray, drab blond and all shades that tend toward an ashen or drab cast. The medium and dark brown shades are the cheapest.

Hair factories in New York are under the supervision of the Health Department. Women inspectors visit them frequently and look into the conditions surrounding the girls and the cleanliness. In one of the ideal ones the girls and men are on separate floors. The toilets have big western and eastern [illegible] There is a sweep of fresh air and a smell of sunshine both morning and afternoon. The girls are allowed to talk and even sing at their work. Most of those girls are Russians and they are very deft fingered and quick at the work. Apprentices start in at about $4 a week. A quick, expert girl can become an expert in [illegible] two years time, when her wages [illegible] from $10 to $12 a week. It is steady work the year round, for there is no [illegible] and no dull season in the case of hair goods.

No one need be afraid to buy what she knows is real hair [illegible] if she goes to a reputable dealer and avoids the cheap, [illegible] cheap counter product. Nothing she buys is cleaner or safer than the hair of the European peasant after it has passed through a reputable human hair factory and is sold by a reputable retail house.

If one were to count the persons involved in transferring the hair from human head to human head, beginning with the foreign hair peddler and ending with the clerk who sells it, the number would equal about twenty. There is the foreign peddler and dealer and the shipping crew, the dockman, factory foreman, the individual worker for each process, again the packers, shippers, salesmen, retail dealers and [illegible] All these aid in transporting the hair from the head of the peasant girl to that of the American.

Much Yellow Fever in Western Africa

In Numerous Instances New Comers Die of the Disease—Cause Can be Easily Removed

London, Oct. 22.—Sir Robert Boyce, who has just returned from West Africa, addressing members of the African Trades Section of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce on the question of yellow fever in West Africa, made some most interesting statements.

He said that in a very short time they would be in possession of facts which would throw a great deal of new light upon the diseases of the West African coast, and as the result they would probably ere long be taking very radical steps to diminish, if not entirely to eradicate, one of the chief causes of mortality on that coast. He had come to the conclusion, as a result of his own observations, that yellow fever was endemic to the coast of West Africa, and that for years it had been mistaken for malaria.

He found that many men had died on the coast from yellow fever whose deaths had been attributed to malaria.

In regard to Sierra Leone, yellow fever had never been absent from that State since 1896 and it always attacked those who had most recently arrived. It was even described by natives as "the disease of the newcomers." He reminded the meeting that the mortality returns in Sierra Leone had greatly improved. One cause for this was that now people used mosquito nets and exercised greater care in living generally. He went on to say it was stegomyia canopius which was the cause of all the trouble. It had been said that this mosquito was most difficult to tackle. As a matter of fact it was the easiest to get rid of. If they kept on attacking it, not only would they never hear anything more of yellow fever, but, what was far more important, the death-rate on the coast would go down with a run, and many other diseases would disappear also.

THE SCHOOLING OF AIR NAVIGATORS

The British Government is to Have a Fleet of Aeroplanes and Dirigibles

London, Oct. 22.—The brilliant work of the aeroplane and dirigible departments in the recent French manoeuvres, and the less striking but still valuable success of the unfortunate Captain Dickson and his comrade at the British manoeuvres have been promptly recognized by the British War Office as significant.

An energetic "forward movement" in matters aerial has therefore been decided on.

The following official communication was forwarded from the War Office:—

With a view to meeting Army requirements, consequent on recent developments in aerial science, it has been decided to enlarge the scope of the work hitherto carried out at the Balloon School at Farnborough by affording opportunities for aeroplaning, as well as by developing the training in the employment of dirigibles more fully than has hitherto been the case.

The object to be kept in view will be to create a body of expert air-men, both officers and other ranks, from which units capable of acting with troops operating in the field can be drawn.

Major Sir A. Bannerman, Bart., Royal Engineers, will be at the head of the new organization, having been selected to succeed Colonel J. E. Capper, C.B., whose tenure of appointment as Commandant of the Balloon School expires on October 7th.

The officers who will form part of the reconstituted unit will not necessarily belong to the Corps of the Royal Engineers. They will be selected from any branch of the Army, provided they show aptitude for aerial work.

Details of establishments and organizations will be published in due course in Army orders.

The official announcement, made for the first time, that the War Office means "to create a body of expert airmen" of its own is an important and welcome declaration of policy, and shows the authorities to be fully alive to the needs of the time.

TO IMPROVE NORTE DAME

A French Architect Has a Scheme to Restore the Cathedral to its Ancient Appearance

A municipal architect with a vaulting ambition wants to improve Notre Dame, the great cathedral in Paris. According to his scheme he does not propose to lay a hand upon the building itself, but only to improve and beautify the approaches to it. His plan is based upon historical fact. It has been noticed that Notre Dame looks as if it had sunk in the ground. Other ancient churches give the same impression. The fact is, of course, that the ground has risen around the buildings through the accumulation of centuries of deposits. For instance, it is certain that Notre Dame stood originally many feet higher above the streets round than nowadays, and that a flight of steps led up to the porch, which is now almost on a level with the Place du Parvis. The general effect of the building as the sightseer approaches it has evidently thus been much altered since mediaeval times.

The municipal architect's idea is to restore the original appearance of Notre Dame by the simple process of digging down to the level at which the square formerly lay. But the difficulty is that the foundations of the other buildings on the square cannot be touched. The only possible process, therefore, is to dig a square hole in the middle of the Place du Parvis. This would be "ornamentally paved in the taste of the old Italian palaces, and from this a new monumental staircase would lead up to Notre Dame." The visitor approaching the cathedral would, therefore, at all events while he stood in the hole, obtain the same view of the building as was presented in the Middle Ages. But the critic of architecture perceives a threefold danger in this ambitious scheme for improving Notre Dame. In the first place what would the effect be of a square with a large hole in it? A famous square in the ancient Italian town of Siena is built like a cup, rising to the sides from the centre, but the descent is not abrupt, as it would be in this case. In the second place, one fights rather shy of the attempts of the architects of to-day to reproduce the "ornamental pavements of ancient Italian palaces." Finally, one is also a little timid of modern architects who would venture to build a monumental staircase approaching Notre Dame that would suit the style of Notre Dame, which it has long since been beyond the power of architects to imitate successfully. Altogether it will perhaps be best to leave Notre Dame alone.

FRANCE'S BLACK SOLDIERS

The report of the mission of which Colonel Mangin is the head, states that the scheme for recruiting an army of negro soldiers in the French possessions in Western Africa promises to be completely successful, and that in Senegal and French Nigeria the Republic possesses an immense reserve of first-class fighting material. Colonel Mangin is said to have assured the Government that recruiting is not only possible, but very easy. He has held long "palavers" with the chiefs of the various districts, and has everywhere received assurances of hearty support. In French Guinea alone the chiefs have undertaken to provide nearly four thousand recruits annually. Colonel Mangin states that in four years it will be possible to create an army of about a quarter of a million splendid fighting men in French West Africa, and that if necessary this number could be increased almost indefinitely.

The raising of this force is of great importance to the Republic. It will, in the first place, enable Algeria to be garrisoned with perfectly loyal black troops, and thus provide for the large garrison there to be transferred to Europe in case of necessity. It is not intended that this black army should ever serve in France itself, but it is easy to conceive circumstances in which a resort to this might be justifiable. It must be remembered that the total population of the French empire exceeds that of the German Empire, and that in the event of a life-and-death struggle with her great neighbor France might be glad to avail herself of the enormous reserves of men in her African colonies, to whom fighting is the only occupation worthy of a man's attention. The creation of a great native army in French West Africa is an enterprise worthy of close observation, but one which, in the course of a few years, will create a factor that must be taken into account in European politics.

Silence!

The instinct of modesty natural to every woman is often a great hindrance to the cure of womanly diseases. Women shrink from the personal questions of the local physician which seem indelicate. The thought of examination is abhorrent to them, and so they endure in silence a condition of disease which surely progresses from bad to worse.

It has been Dr. Pierce's privilege to save a great many women who have found a refuge for modesty in his offer of FREE consultation by letter. All correspondence is held as sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription restores and regulates the womanly functions, abolishes pain and builds up and puts the finishing touch of health on every weak woman who gives it a fair trial.

It Makes Weak Women Strong, Sick Women Well.

HANDICAPPED HUMANITY

What Life is Like to a Really Ugly Woman

To fight life's battle as an ugly woman is to have a terrible millstone hanging round one's neck. Only those who themselves suffer in this way can fully realize, or begin to realize, how terrible such sufferings can be.

I know I am ugly—repellant. Fate was cruel to me, and sometimes I shudder when I look at myself in the glass. I need not write in detail of myphysical defects, let me but say that children have cried when they have seen me, and seared my heart with their cry as with a white-hot iron. For I fain would love children, and have them to love me.

At school I never realized its significance. I was eighteen when, one bitter day, an incident crammed the fact into my brain that I am not as other woman are. That is twelve years ago, and in those years I have had countless hours of untold misery.

First Signs

Quite unconsciously, men and women show me how I appear to them the first time I meet them. I have learnt to study their expression as they say, "How do you do?" and to watch for those minute signs of surprise or displeasure in their faces as they look at me. I would give anything to feel that I could go amongst strangers without seeing the trifling lift of an eyebrow, or noticing a nervous constraint of manner, which shows they are thinking how intensely ugly I am. But there is a malignant fascination in watching their play of expression, in looking out for those trifling mannerisms which play such a horribly jangling tune on my heart.

Occasionally I have met men with such self-control that they gave none of those signs I know so well. Women are more merciless. Even if it is done unconsciously, their eyes always betray their thoughts when I meet them. If people deign to take an interest in me, it is the same interest that they might take in some hideous reptile. The tragedy of it, for me, is that I can always see it.

With odd irony, Fate has given me a love for beautiful things. Sometimes, when I have been talking to a woman with an exquisite face, and watched the glory of her smile, I have felt that I would willingly sacrifice my life to look as she looked for a solitary day, feel that men worshipped me because I was lovely, and women hated me because I was more lovely than they were. And then the mad senselessness of such hopeless longings comes to me; I feel a wild despair creeping through my veins, and I long with every fibre of my being to make her as I am for one solitary day, so that she may know the agony she caused me by a look. But such bitter, cruel thoughts must be repressed at all costs. That way madness lies.

Oblivion and—the Truth

At times—perhaps in a drawing-room, while talking to men and women whom I know—I have forgotten my dreadful disfigurement, and drifted into the thought that I was an ordinary human being to look at, until some chance reflection of my face in a mirror brought home to me the terrible truth with a jar and I crept silently away, and hid myself in my room, with my tears of mortification.

I have tried living the life of a recluse, so that I might be spared the cruel glances, which are none the less cruel because they are unconscious; but solitude brought with it a keener pang when I remembered why I was a social outcast. Then I took my courage in both hands, and tried to face the world as though I cared nothing for its opinion. For a time I was quite unmoved by furtive glances and subtle signs of disgust; but in a month the bitterness of my position began to eat into my soul relentlessly once more, and I retired for ever into the place where Fate had placed me—the ignominious background.—Answers.

ALTERED MEANINGS

Some Words that Have Changed Their Signification

To prevent, which is now to successfully obstruct, meant in its Latin original to anticipate.

A girl was anciently a young person of either sex.

Mountebank was the term applied of old to the patent medicine vendor who mounted a bench to proclaim his wares. It is from the Italian.

Paradise in Oriental tongues meant only a royal ark.

Astonished means literally thunderstruck, coming from "attonare."

A knave was once merely a lad and a villain only a peasant.

To be silly was in its ancient sense to be blessed.

To be officious was to be courteously ready to do kindly office.

If a man was facetious, in the early English, he was but urbane.

An idiot was a private citizen as distinguished from an office-holder.

Frontispiece, if considered from its Latin source is not a picture in the front of a book, but the front view of something. The Latin word is "frontispicium."

"Beldam" is not an abusive term in its French source, but means a fair lady.

Shamefaced comes from a good Anglo-Saxon term which means not one exhibiting shame, but one protected by shame, being therefore innocent and modest.

CHINESE CHARITY

Convert to Christianity to Devote Wealth to Salvation Work

A valuable lesson in charity is daily being given at Ottumwa, Idaho, by a Chinaman, Lin You. He is the chief assistant of a Salvation Army captain in a great work among Ottumwa's poor, and the former resident of the Celestial kingdom is using Western ideas of how to dispense charity. When first locating in America, Lin You engaged in the laundry business and saved $20,000, which he has since spent in converting his fellow countrymen to the Christian religion. While Lin You has not completely mastered the English language, his earnestness to spread the faith has been demonstrated by his appearance at the street meetings of the Salvation Army, and therein taking an active part.

He is greatly in love with the United States, but will return to his native home and convert his brethren to the Christian religion. Lin You was converted to the Christian faith about thirty years ago, joining the Presbyterian Church in Kansas City, and ever since his conversion he has been an active church worker. He later went to Boston, where he did missionary work among the Chinese. Lin You opened a mission and during his stay in Boston converted 150 brethren to the Christian faith.

TO DISSOLVE MONDAY.

British Upper House Ignores Premier Asquith's Veto Bill.

London, Nov. 25.—In the House of Lords Lord Lansdowne's reform resolutions carried without a division. The previous day's debate went in favor of the Opposition, but yesterday Lord Chancellor Loreburn and Arthur John Morley contributed excellent speeches.

Lord Loreburn said that all the Lansdowne paraphernalia for joint sittings, a referendum, etc., would only be brought into existence when the Liberals were in power.

The Upper Chamber then adjourned until Monday, when dissolution of Parliament will take place. Thus the Government's veto bill has been ignored by the House of Lords.

A noticeable feature of the debate has been the number of Liberal peers who supported Lord Lansdowne's scheme and opposed the Government's veto bill.

In the lower chamber Right Hon. John Morley scornfully described the reform proposals as a schoolboy's sketch and expressed his amazement at the lewity wherewith the Conservatives had committed themselves to vast, unknown changes.

There will be a flood of oratory today, Premier Asquith speaks at Hull and Lord Lansdowne at Glasgow. Most of the front bench men will also be on the platform.

Right Hon. John Burns, speaking at Battersea, declared that neither Lansdowne's mending nor Rosebery's blending would prevent the people bending the Lords to their will.

Fighting for McNulty.

Toronto, Nov. 25.—An effort to save from the scaffold Thomas McNulty, convicted at Barrie of murder in connection with Mary Dolan, his paramour, to murder their babe, was made at Osgoode Hall yesterday, when A. E. Creswicke appeared before the Court of Appeal. McNulty and the girl are under sentence of death on Dec. 14. J. T. Mulcahey appeared with Mr. Creswicke for the prisoner, Deputy Attorney-General Cartwright, with E. Bayly, K.C., appeared for the crown.

Mr. Creswicke objected to the admission and rejection of certain evidence, and to Justice Britton's charge to the jury. Especial objection was taken to evidence to show that the prisoner had been intimate with Mary Dolan for a period of four years prior to the murder.

Mrs. Sage Builds Model City.

New York, Nov. 25.—The preliminary plans for the Russell Sage foundation, established by Mrs. Sage, as a memorial to her husband, for the establishment of a model suburban city, providing healthy and beautiful homes for persons of moderate means, were announced yesterday. Briefly the project is to utilize a tract of 142 acres of land at Forest Hills Gardens, Long Island, nine miles from this city, in laying out a town for 1,500 families. The initial financial expenditures for the purpose, it is announced, will be $25 a month, including principal and interest.

Through yesterday's announcement it is made plain that the enterprise is not a charity, but is to be made self-supporting and yield a fair return on the investment. Its purpose, rather, is to enable persons in moderate circumstances to own their own homes at a minimum cost, while obtaining buildings of better construction than the average individual could erect, and amid surroundings and under restrictions that will make the little city an ideal residence place. The minimum cost of paying for a home there, it is estimated, will be $25 a month, including principal and interest.

Highway Robber Sentenced.

North Bay, Nov. 25.—Judge Valin in the district court sentenced Alfred Bozanzon of Cobalt to three years in the Kingston Penitentiary for highway robbery in holding up and robbing Thomas Tunney, shift boss of King Edward mine. The jury disagreed in the case of Lucien Pineault, alleged "fence" of a gang of small boys who burglarized in Cobalt. Judge Valin stated he could not agree with the jury's verdict, as the evidence was clear and convincing. Pineault will have a new trial in June.

Tea Trade With Japan.

Ottawa, Nov. 25.—Iwao Neshi, commissioner of the Japanese Tea Traders' Association of Tokio, Japan, is in Canada and the States with the object of developing the tea trade with Japan, which has been seriously reduced with America.

"Ten years ago," he said, "we were exporting 10,000,000 pounds of tea to this continent; to-day the export business is only 5,000,000 pounds."

Fractured His Skull.

Brantford, Nov. 25.—James Adams, an Englishman, 40 years old, was found in the basement of the Imperial Hotel early yesterday morning with a badly fractured skull. He will die. Adams, it is thought, fell down the stairs, striking his head on the concrete floor. He recently inherited a sum of money from the old country. It was only this week that a bartender, Angus McLean, broke his leg in the same stairway.

Frauds Exceed $1,000,000.

Washington, Nov. 25.—Commenting on the arrest on Wednesday by post office inspectors of John W. Knight, senior member of the Cotton Brokerage firm of Knight, Yancey & Co., Decatur, Ala., Postmaster General Hitchcock yesterday gave out a statement in which he says that the operations of this concern through the alleged fraudulent use of the mails would doubtless exceed a million dollars.

First Power at Port Arthur.

Port Arthur, Nov. 25.—First power to be received by Port Arthur through sub-station and over the lines constructed by the Hydro-Electric Commission, came yesterday from Kakabeka Falls. Power for Kingston.

Kingston, Nov. 25.—Ald. Elliott had a conference with Hon. Adam Beck in which the latter said that the only chance for Kingston to get power from the Hydro-Electric Commission, would be to secure the co-operation of the nearby towns and villages. Mr. Beck suggested that the municipalities east and west of Kingston submit a referendum to the people, to see if they were in favor of giving the council authority to make a contract with the Hydro-Electric Commission.

The City Council will act on Ald Elliott's report.

Shot By His Father.

Ottawa, Nov. 25.—Gilbert Hunean was brought to a local hospital last night suffering from loss of blood, due to a gunshot wound he got while duck hunting near Vars. His father was with him at the time, and accidentally discharged his gun while pulling it over a log. The young man was shot in the arm, and the party set off for help, but got lost. They did not tie up the wound, which bled for two hours before help came. The man may recover.

Death From Infantile Paralysis.

Chatham, Nov. 25.—Infantile paralysis claimed another life in this city yesterday, when the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Robinson succumbed.

A WOMAN'S BACK.

Not One Woman In Twenty Has a Stong Back.

The kidneys are to blame nine times out of ten.

When the blood isn't properly filtered the poisons that ought to be cast off by the kidneys are sent back through the system, and it's hardly to be wondered that backaches and lame backs come to make life miserable.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a specific for all kidney troubles. They begin by expelling all the poisonous matter from the kidneys, and then heal the delicate membranes and make their action regular and natural.

Mrs. A. H. Hutton, Jr., McCreary, Man., writes:—"Two years ago last spring I had a very severe pain in the small of my back. When I would rise it seemed as if my back would break. My kidneys were very badly out of order, and I would have to get up three or four times during the night. I took one box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they effected a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by the T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

TWENTY OF THE WOMEN DISTURBERS HAVE BEEN SENT TO PRISON

NEVER SAW ANY LIQUOR IN THE BAR

Adjourned Case of Havelock Liquor Trial Heard Yesterday Afternoon Before Magistrate Edmison

JUDGMENT RESERVED

The adjourned case against Larry Kilborne, hotel keeper of Havelock, for selling liquor on the twelfth day of October was opened at the Court House yesterday afternoon, before Magistrate Edmison. The witnesses for the prosecution having been heard at Havelock a week ago, the evidence for the defence was proceeded with. Five witnesses were called and it was emphatically stated that there was no liquor sold in the bar of the hotel on the day in question. Every man who was in the bar that day being called and the knowledge of there being any liquor there was denied. Magistrate Edmison reserved judgment and enlarged the hearing of the other case for a week.

Mr. Dennistoun To Act For The Commissioners

WINNIPEG, NOV. 25.—The taking of evidence in the investigation into the social evil in Winnipeg will not commence until to-morrow afternoon. When Mr. Justice Robson sat at the City Hall this afternoon to commence the investigation, representatives of the Moral and Social Reform Association and Citizens' committee declared they had been taken by surprise by the hasty action of the City Council in deciding on the investigation at such short notice, and asked for an adjournment until they could arrange to be represented by counsel and could get their evidence in shape. It is understood that they have experienced some difficulty in getting legal representation. Mr. Isaac Pitblado, originally named as counsel for the Police Commission, declined to act, and Mr. R. M. Dennistoun has taken his place.

Several of the candidates for municipal honours on the "suppression" ticket declare that the whole investigation is designed as a farce to sidetrack the discussion during the election campaign, but they state that any findings of the commission will have no effect on the campaign they have entered upon for a clean city. Rev. Dr. Shearer has been invited to attend the investigation and support the charges made by him. Telegrams to this effect have been sent to his address by City Solicitor Hunt, but no answer has been received to-night.

LOSES TWO HUSBANDS SAME WAY

Examiner Special.

BELLEVILLE, ONT., NOV. 24.—To lose two husbands in the same spot and the same manner is the fate of Mrs. W. G. Brown, whose husband was crushed between Grand Trunk cars here yesterday and died this morning. Her first husband, a brakeman, Geo. Dicks, was killed just five years ago.

Mr. Lamey has been in Vancouver about eight years and has been engaged in the brokerage business. BRAZILIAN MUTINEERS HAVE SURRENDERED "UNCONDITIONALLY" WINS POINT ALL THE SAME Senate and Congress Hold an Emergency Meeting This Morning and Knuckle Down Unanimously to the Demadns of the Crews.

SHELLED THE CITY

Special Wire to The Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., NOV. 25.—First class seaman Candido, who took command of the Brazilian fleet when the crews all mutinied and drove ashore all their officers, has announced that his men will surrender unconditionally. It is believed, however, that government agents have secretly promised men reforms and the raise of pay they demanded.

Later.

RIO JANEIRO, BRAZIL, NOV. 25.—While the mutinous sailors surrendered unconditionally, they certainly did not do it till they had brought President Fonseco and his government to time at the mouth of their own guns. At an emergency session this morning the Congress and Senate knuckled down almost unanimously to the demands of the crews of the warships. During the night the city was in a state of siege, with occasional shells from the Dreadnought dropping in.

COLLEGE BOYS FIGHT FOR LIFE IN A BALLOON

A Thrilling Struggle in Big Gale---Part With Their Clothes in an Effort to Check Their Descent Into Lake---All Are Thrown Out and One is Badly Hurt.

Examiner Special.

PROVIDENCE, NOV. 25. — Aeronaut Leo Stevens, of New York, and four students of Williams' College, made a perilous balloon flight in a heavy gale to-day from North Adams. All were pitched out of the basket, and one of the students was seriously hurt, in landing on the edge of the lake just outside this city, after they had had a terrific fight to keep from falling into the lake.

The students were Robert Starrett and George Ernst, of New York; Kenneth Price, of Chicago; and H. P. Schramm, of London, England. It was the Englishman who was injured. His condition is improved to-night, and there is now every hope of his recovery.

Pilot Stevens declares it was the most hazardous trip and the worst landing he has ever experienced.

The troubles of the party began before they got away from North Adams, where the balloon, the Cleveland, was inflated. The start was a sensational one, and all but ended in a catastrophe through a collision with a house.

A violent wind storm was blowing. Prof. Milhan estimated that the wind had a velocity of 120 miles an hour at an elevation of 5,000 feet. Stevens would enable them to reach.

It was nearly an hour before the balloon could clear the ground. The force of attendants was dragged all over the field, and when at last they let go the Cleveland shot up like a rocket.

For more than three hours and a half the trippers were buffeted by the furious 65-mile-an-hour gale, and when they found themselves over the lake here the balloon had lost so much of its gas, through the flogging of the wind, tha tit was only by aid of the direst resources the party kept in the air. One thing after another had to be thrown out of the basket to lighten the weight.

Finally, to save themselves, the men had to strip off their clothing and throw that overboard. Overshoes, sweaters, walking shoes, overcoats, jackets, almost everything, no matter how light, was cast over the side.

Despite that the balloon came down with great force only just on the border of the lake. Schramm was flung out as the basket first struck the earth. He fell on his back and was rendered unconscious.

With Schramm's weight gone the Cleveland rose rapidly. When it came down again it bounded against a wire fence and then bounced on until it crashed into a stone wall, throwing out the four other occupants of the car. All except Schramm escaped with only a bad shaking and considerable bruising.

LETTER OF INTEREST TO EVERY RATEPAYER

Dear Sir,—I have been much interested in reading your articles recently re municipal government by commission, and as a ratepayer thought I should like to state my opinion on the question. I certainly endorse your statement that the present government of the city it not at all satisfactory, but I do not think it is all on account of the system, nor do I think there is any guarantee that government by commission would be an improvement, unless the faults that militate against the present system were first removed. Those are largely: 1, annual elections of the whole council; 2, apathy of the electors; 3, difficulty in getting strong efficient men who will do the city's business as they would their own; 4, leaving the council to themselves from the time they are elected until the end of their term without either criticism or imitation.

Now, I think that, if we substitute government by commission for the present system and these conditions remain the same, we shall have practically the same results, plus the extra expense of salaries. The fact that one city saved $180,000 by the change in one year, is no guarantee that we should do the same here, for there are no doubt cases in which an economical council has succeeded in effecting a saving on the estimates of a former and more extravagant council just as some governments make a better showing than others.

Again, I am against any change that tends to make our government less democratic than it is, and in my opinion government by commission is in that direction placing the power in the hands of a few and giving them carte blanche. I do not think either that the water commission is a fair comparison at all, as this commission has simply the charge of one department, which it runs without doubt, well, and with a profit, but there is, in my opinion, a great difference in running the water works department and the city, with its diversified objects and interests.

I would like to suggest a change or two, which I think would help some in the direction of making our city's government more efficient. Instead of electing the council for one year I would make it three years, with one-third of the council retiring annually. Thus we should have two-thirds of the council who would always be tried men used to the work and thus remedy the defect of non continuity. 2. I would suggest the formation of a good live ratepayers' association, where questions affecting the interests both of the city and the ratepayers could be discussed, resolutions passed upon them and sent to the council, who would thus have the mind of the ratepayers upon, and their authority for, the matter discussed. Public meetings should also be occasionally held, and important public questions put before the citizens. In this way new men would be brought forward and a larger choice of candidates be secured, as well educated, for the council work. This would also be a means of creating interest in the city's government, a city which has such glorious possibilities, which if rightly handled now, will make her one of the chief cities of Canada. Apologizing for taking up so much of your valuable space, I am,

Yours, etc.

LONDON, ENG., NOV. 25.—Most disorderly women have been treated much too leniently in the past," said Sir Albert Dermitzen, police magistrate, this morning, when sentencing twenty suffragettes each to two months hard labour for smashing windows in the government offices. Some with tears and some with laughter, the women marched off to prison while their comrades raised the cry of "See the martyred heroines go."

"It's All a Part Of The Job" Says Mangled Policeman

NEW YORK, NOV. 25.—Policeman George Patteson lay on the sidewalk at Fifth Avenue and Forty-second St. yesterday afternoon with his left foot cut off and his right leg badly mangled. He had been hurled by one car under the wheels of another going in the opposite direction. Through the crowd that surrounded the policeman Deputy Commissioner Driscoll pushed his way.

"It's too bad, old man," said Driscoll, patting the shoulder of the injured policeman.

Another policeman was making a tourniquet out of his own club and a silk scarf given to him by a newsstand woman, and Patteson was watching the process with seeming interest. At the Commissioner's words he looked up. Then with a manifest effort he called a smile to his pallid features.

"It's a Part of the Job."

"It's all right, Commissioner," he said. "That's part of the job. We must expect such things in our business."

Then Patteson was hurried off to the New York Hospital in an automobile the police had commandeered. Neither Driscoll nor Patteson knew at that time that the policeman's other leg probably would have to be amputated. When he heard of it at Police Headquarters last night, Driscoll said that if Patteson lived his injury would make no difference with his pay rating.

"We want cripples like that in the department," said Mr. Driscoll. "It he comes out of the hospital with no legs at all he'll be kept at headquarters as a clerk and his pay will be that of a policeman."

Then Deputy Commissioner Driscoll in his automobile went to the hospital, where he told the policeman that he wasn't to worry about his future, but think only of getting well.

HOW IT HAPPENED

Patteson, who is twenty-seven years old, was not the regular man on duty at the crossing. Policeman Glennon, who was assigned to direct the stream of traffic at that corner, had just gone to a telephone and Policeman Patteson had relieved him for a few minutes. An old man with his feeble wife had been standing for some moments on the north side of Forty-second street waiting for the traffic to be halted so that they could cross. Policeman Patteson escorted them across and then turned to go to the north side of the street again.

As he did so an east-bound car struck him a glancing blow of sufficient force to throw him beneath the wheels of a Fort George car bound west. The wheels passed over his legs. The west car was stopped at once, but the east-bound car passed on, its motorman evidently not knowing of the accident.

WOMAN GIVES HER SCARF

Men ran to the policeman's assistance and women ran screaming the other way. Policeman Miller, who was near by, helped a score of others to carry the injured man to the sidewalk. Then he turned to the crowd and asked for a woman's scarf. Fashionably dressed women were hurrying by, but Lizzie Goldman, who keeps a newsstand near by, pushed her way through the cluster of men.

"Here's what you want, and may it do the poor fellow good," she said, jerking with fingers that were not steady a silk scarf from her neck.

Then with the aid of the newswoman the loss of blood was checked. Policeman Glennon whom Patteson had relieved blamed himself bitterly for the accident.

"If I hadn't gone away and left him," said he, "he wasn't supposed to handle traffic. That was my job."

HAMILTON HAS GONE RUGBY MAD

Ambitious City Preparing for the Biggest Day in its History To-morrow---Muddy Field Expected

BACKING THE TIGERS

Special wire to The Examiner:

HAMILTON ONT., NOV. 25.—This city is preparing for the biggest day in its history to-morrow, when it is expected nearly ten thousand people will witness the Tiger-Varsity battle for the Rugby championship of Canada. The field will undoubtedly be very muddy, which will hurt the Toronto players chances. Independent sports from Ottawa and Montreal are betting strong on the Tigers, in addition to those who can see the game. There will be thousands of others here to get in to the excitement which will follow.

The police fear trouble and it is suggested that a battalion of special constables be sworn in.

WERE MURDERED BY BURGLARS

TRENTON, N. J., NOV. 24. The Rev. Andrew L. Armstrong, the venerable pastor of the Presbyterian church at Dutch Neck, 10 miles east of here, and his wife were murdered last night at their home by burglars.

The aged couple were shot, and it is believed they died instantly. The pastor and his wife had not retired when the burglars entered their home at about 11 o'clock last night, and that fact probably accounts for their having been murdered.

The custom of the couple to retire early led probably to the burglars to expect that everybody in the house would be sleeping when they entered the place. The burglars, it is believed, being detected, immediately shot the minister and his wife.

Mrs. John Sears, an aged woman, who had been for years housekeeper in the Armstrong family, was upstairs when the shooting occurred and was so afraid that she might be shot herself that she hid under the bed until the arrival of her son, who also lived in the house, but who had been spending the evening away.

Meanwhile the burglars ransacked the house and carried away jewellery, money and other articles.

Prosecutor Crossley and County Detective Kirkham left here for the scene of the murder this morning.

The police are out on the trail, but no arrests have yet been made.

Belmonts Tender Farewell Banquet To Departing Members

About thirty-five members of the Belmont Club gathered at Coleman's restaurant last evening for the purpose of tendering a farewell banquet to Messrs. Gordon Miller and T. Hannah, members of the club who are leaving the city. Mr. Miller going to Victoria, B.C., and Mr. Hannah to Victoria, B.C., and Mr. Hannah to Chicago. An excellent repast was served by Messrs. Coleman, after which a short toast list was proposed. Mr. J. T. C. Laing presiding. Mr. Hawley Shepard, of Bay City, Mich., who is in the city, for the purpose of directing the Belmont Club Minstrels, with his wife, and Mr. W. S. Davidson, were guests of the club. After the toast to the "King" had been honoured, Mr. Paul Trebilcock, proposed the toast to the visiting guests, Mr. and Mrs. Shepard and Mr. Davidson. Mr. Davidson responded with a song and also added to the pleasure of the evening by rendering two recitations. Mr. Shepard also delighted those present with humourous and entertaining stories.

The toast to the departing members was proposed by Mr. J. T. C. Laing. Mr. Laing referred to the regret that the members felt at the forthcoming departure of Mr. Miller and Mr. Hannah. Both were valued members of the club and would be much missed. Several other members added their expressions of regret at the removal from the club associations of the two popular young men, who were leaving Peterborough.

Mr. Miller and Mr. Hannah made suitable replies in which they thanked the members of the Belmont club for their many kind words. They would take with them memories of many pleasant times spent in the club and of the good friendships they were leaving behind.

MR. LEADER'S LETTER.

The Examiner prints with pleasure Mr. Leader's reasonable and sensible letter presented in this issue on the seventh page. The letter is welcomed because it is concrete evidence of the fact of the existence of a ratepayer who thinks, who takes an interest in the management of civic affairs. While some of our correspondent's positions may not be tenable and open to question, it not criticism, there is a reasonable candor that sets a good example to any discussion which may appear in these columns of the subject.

And this suggests the statement that the Examiner will gladly welcome letters from the ratepayers on the subject, especially if they are of the length, reasonableness and evident sincerity of the letter of Mr Leader. Letters should be to the point and cover specific ground. They should contain an embodiment of opinion as to whether (1) the present system of municipal government is satisfactory, (2) if improvement is desirable, what form that improvement should take, and (3) whether government by commissioners elected for, say, three years gives promise of providing a remedy for the improvement that is desirable.

ERIN GO BRAGH.

There is no doubt that the condition of Ireland has greatly improved in standing and prosperity. Whether or not this is due as it very probably is, to results of ameliorative and juster legislation, the fact remains. Those who consider Ireland a poverty stricken country without much to recommend it as a factor in the trade of the world will be agreeably surprised to learn that the importance of Ireland with its statistics lumped as they ordinarily are in the trade of the British Isles has been generally overlooked. Take for instance the question of cattle. Ireland exported to England in 1909 no fewer than 858,000 head, while the number shipped to England from all other countries amounted to only 820,000 head, and of this number 173,000 were sent from Canada. A proof that Ireland's trade is growing in importance is indicated by the fact that her imports during 1909 increased by $24,000,000, as compared with 1908, and her exports increased by $18,000,000 during the same period. Next to Denmark, Ireland ships more butter and eggs into England than any other country, while in poultry the Emerald Isle easily leads all other countries in exports to England. In bacon and hams Ireland leads Canada in the English trade, the figures being $16,000,000, as compared with $6,000,000. In fact the statistics throughout the list show the very important position Ireland continues to hold in the British market.

The more liberal attitude of the imperial government, the improvement of land tenure conditions, the partial removal of the evils of, especially, absentee landlord conditions, the possibilities of the people getting "back to the land" in a freer and more untrammelled manner, the increased popular contentment, the consequent absence of popular agitation, have concrete results in improved production and consequently improved property. Peace is the essential condition of prosperity. If the people dwell together in harmony, they are not disturbed by turmoils that must distract their devotion from productive pursuits.

This is a lesson to Canada at the present time when there are disintegrating and disarming influences at work. The people of Canada must resist the Bourassa campaign of sectionalism. This duty is all the more urgent since one of the two great parties, at least its leaders and organs of influence, practically join with the sectional campaign of the greatest enemies of Canada, those who, to gain some personal or racial aggrandizement, do not hesitate to imperil and wreck the national harmony and consequently, the national progress. The Conservative leaders may justify almost anything to down Laurier, except sympathy, even passive, with the propaganda of political sectaries and wreckers of the empire.

When Ireland gets peace, when she is successful in securing a fair measure of local autonomy, a nation within the United Kingdom, with a similar measure of self-government to that Canada, a nation within the empire, enjoys, there would seem to be no reason why Ireland with her fat soil, and industrious enterprising people, should not enter upon the fruition of a new lease of national life with a new lease of conditions that make for progress, contentment of the people, and freedom to pursue the fruitful paths of peace.

UNWORTHY TACTICS.

The Mail and Empire must be in painful straits for political ammunition when it resorts to exploiting bogus despatches on the subject of the navy, as if it and those who think "do" act without thinking with it, had not already told enough "whoppers" on the subject. In the Mail and Empire of Wednesday is printed a double-leaded yarn from Montreal, stating that "it is rumoured" the Government had decided to submit the question of the Canadian navy to a plebiscite. This yarn is on the very face of it, a complete concoction made out of whole cloth without an atom of foundation, not even a dot to an iota. Yet, the organ, in Thursday's issue employs a column of its editorial space to argue from those false premises to the discredit of the government. As the late lamented John Henry Pope would say, "There ain't nothin' in it." There's not the slightest intention on the part of the Government to adopt the scheme which Mr. Borden, in desperation devised, in order to obtain a logical ground work of opposition to a Canadian navy in line with what he and his following to a man, voted for as a principle. They only opposed the naval policy because they grudged the government the credit that would accrue from taking an action dictated by our dignity, our self respect, and our unwillingness to any longer "sponge upon" the Imperial Government for defence. Hon. Mr. Brodeur put the matter in a nutshell when he said in the House on Wednesday: "We shall stand by our policy" and "all with it if the people so decide." That is if the people declare in favour of the Conservative-Nationalist conspiracy, which seems to be the last resort of the Conservative party to gain power alliance with Bourassa and his pals whose war cry is "nothing from Drummond and Arthabaska is 'We have had enough of the English.'"

PROMPT BRITISH JUSTICE.

Ottawa Journal, Nov. 24.

This morning Dr Crippen paid with his life the penalty of his crime. A comparison between the manner in which this greatest criminal trial of England in recent years was handled, with the manner in which the similarly celebrated Thaw trial of the United States was conducted, reveals a remarkable contrast.

Thaw shot his enemy in the open, about the fact there could be no doubt. The evidence of the Crippen case was entirely circumstantial. Thaw any prophecy of the duration of the two trials might have well have felt that the English one would require much the longer time.

As a matter of fact, the Crippen trial was concluded in four days, less than one day of which was taken up by the expert medical evidence. The Thaw trial dragged its way through six weeks, two of which were required for the medical evidence. The one was simple, stern, dignified, the other was hysterical, sensational, and incomplete. Crippen is quickly punished. Thaw is still alive and surrounded by every luxury.

And the two countries reap the effects of their difference of methods. In Britain almost every third murderer suffers full punishment, in United States hardly one in three hundred meets his due. Thus England is the most orderly and safest country in the world, while the United States, of all civilized countries is the one in which life is least safe. Moreover the prisoner's interests are more safely guarded in England, with all its strictness and severity, than in the Republic in the former evidence alone is allowed to weigh, in the latter the prisoner, if unpopular, and prosecuted by a paper that brings in a verdict of "guilty," no matter what his defence may show.

Crippen in the United States would have undoubtedly gone free to furnish another public instance of the stated inability to weigh delicate probabilities and another argument in favour of the red-handed lynching of slippery criminals immediately when caught. The British criminal law and court system have been triumphantly vindicated; and the public lesson will doubtless act for years to keep in the straight path many scoundrels whose mental, moral, and other qualities urge them to the commission of crimes similar to the one which was today legally avenged.

PILES Dr. Chase's Ointment

E. G. CHASE & CO., TORONTO.

AD CAPTANDUM ELOQUENCE OF CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER

The general election campaign is on in Great Britain. We receive by cable only very much condensed reports of the speeches referred to. Below are given excerpts from the opening speech of the campaign of David Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, as a sample of effective and appealing platform eloquence of the Welshire variety.

"They threw out our budget, these Lords, like an unclean thing. Ah, we will reckon with them. We have come here to ask you to throw them out." (Cheers, and cries of "We will.")

"An election is to ail of us worry, torment and exhaustion. I delivered fifty speeches at the last election. Does any man in his senses believe we would provoke another general election unless we were certain that if we got a majority it would be a final one in this long drawn out struggle between the peers and the people?" (Loud cheers).

Pensioners Like The Dukes.

"The Protectionist Budgets of other countries have been a failure. Ours has been a complete financial success. We are going to bring in an additional 280,000 poor old people who are now branded with the stain of pauperism and we are going to make them state pensioners like the dukes.' (Loud laughter and cheers).

"We have got the cash to start an insurance scheme for two millions of workmen against the evils of unemployment." (Cheers).

"We are starting next year, and all the money is arranged, for a scheme to insure fifteen million of work people, men and women, against the distress that comes to the household when the breadwinner's health breaks down. All the taxes are comin in, including that on whiskey." (Laughter).

"These great schemes for keeping the invader from our shores, for keeping hunger and want from invading the hearths of the people, were in the budget. Why did they throw it out? Because we dared to touch the ark of the covenant of the land. We taxed the landlords' rent." (Cheers).

"When I see our trade rising until the flood begins to overflow, I say to myself 'Colt as I am, I still believe what the old King said 3,000 years ago: 'Ah blessed is he who considereth the poor.'" (Loud cheers).

A Surprise to Him.

"I believe the budget will open a new era of prosperity. It has already unlocked the land. Have you noticed how the landlords are beginning to sell? I knew they would do it sooner or later, but I never thought they would begin so soon (Laughter).

"But all this has been rejected by the Lords, and we may 'no more.' This time we want an irrevocable decision. (Loud cheers).

"But stop. It is not the budget that is worrying us. We are doing all this at the dictation of Mr John Redmond. (Laughter).

"The Tory party must always have a bogey. There are savage tribes addicted to devil-worship. The Tory party is one of these tribes (Laughter). At the last election the Germans were the bogey. In 1900 it was the Dutchman of South Africa. In 1895 it was the Irish. In 1885 it was Joseph Chamberlain (Loud laughter). Now, having exhausted the list, they're coming round to the Irishman again (Laughter).

"But he is different from the Irishman of 1895. That Irishman was a ragged, tattered, and fierce, but the Irishman of today is a gilt-edged legacy daughter—who is framed in American dollars.

"Since when have the British aristocracy started despising American dollars? (Loud laughter and cries of 'Ask the Duke of Marlborough?') I see you understand that many a noble house nowadays to its tall has had its foundation underpinned and its walls buttressed by a pile of American dollars.

Transatlantic Gifts to Ireland.

"Ah, American dollars! Was it all from America? A large proportion came from Canada. Since when has Canada become a foreign country? (Laughter). When Canada and Canadian statesmen are to be used as excuses for taxing the bread of the people, then Canadians are our kith and kin beyond the seas (laughter)—and our dearest relations, but when Canadians subscribe money for the purpose of enabling Ireland to win the same measure of self-Government as they themselves enjoy, then Canadians are aliens. So says the Daily Mail." (Laughter).

"Clear Out, Please!" To the Lords.

"The Lords have taken over thirty years to do it, but they are hurrying up just now. (Laughter and cheers). They call out excitedly 'Don't shoot! We will come half-way down!' (Laughter). 'No' we of the Radical party reply, 'Clear out, please.'" Lord laughter and renewed cheers).

"Every Radical bill would, under their scheme, have to be sent to a referendum, and a referendum like a general election, would cost a million or two, so that the nation would be fined into the millions every time a Radical Bill had to be proposed. (Cries of "Shame.")

No others Want the System.

"But a Conservative bill would just canter through (laughter) without the slightest difficulty. We insist on a course of equal treatment for all round, we will have none of these shams." (Cheers).

"The peerage is created to ennoble the misdeeds of kings. The next time I am called a thief and robber by one of the descendants of these noblemen because I propose to levy a tax upon the wealthy, I will say 'You are living well upon the proceeds of the church pool-box your ancestors robbed.'" (Cheers).

"No free country would look at our system. Go to Australia. They would say 'Rather than be governed by men like that, we would have a Senate of kangaroos (laughter). It is no use going to the colonies.

"It is no use trying to tinker and to patch. They are past it. The Tory party is now doing its very best to put life into the old horse. They are putting up electric wires to its tail (Loud laughter).

"Lord Rosebery wants to give a new pair of hind legs. (Renewed laughter). I am opposed to cruelty to animals). (More laughter). I would turn the poor old thing to grass and convert the old horse from a encumber home.

"Let us clear the encumbered land so that justice may have an easy access to the grey homes of the people as to the palaces of the mighty." (Loud and prolonged applause).

Mr. Lloyd-George ended by recommending the East End for a Socialist candidate named Lansbury. He was not a Radical, but he was a true friend of the people.

RECOMMENDS A MORE RIGID INSPECTION

From Farm and Dairy.

It was estimated by bee keepers at the Ontario Bee Keepers' Convention in Toronto last week that about $60,000 was the loss through the spread of foul brood in apiaries in the counties of Grey and Wellington alone; furthermore, 15 per cent. of the hives of bees in Ontario are afflicted with foul brood. Mr. Morley Pettit, Provincial Apiarist, recommended a more rigid inspection of bees imported into Canada. He advocated the establishment of quarantine stations where diseased hives may be treated, or if necessary destroyed. A suggestion was made that practical demonstrations in effective methods of combating foul brood and other diseases be given regularly for the benefit of apiarists.

Many practical and helpful addresses were given the delegates in attendance. General principles in the management of an apiary and the handling of queen bees in particular were dwelt upon by Mr. A. Dickson, of Lancaster. Miss Ethel Robson, Ilderton in her address stated that women had an advantage over men in keeping bees. Bee keeping was preferable to poultry raising in that the work could all be performed in pleasant weather.

Instead of allowing individuals to compete for prizes at the Canadian National Exhibition next year it was decided that it would be preferable for the Association to put up the complete exhibit. Directors for the ensuing year were elected as follows: A Dickson, Lancaster; A McLaughlin, Cumberland; H. E. Eyre, Chantry; C. F. Chisholm, Wallbridge; Jas. Storer, Lindsay; J. L. Byers; Mountpos; J. F. Switzer, Orangeville; F. W. Bowen, Niagara Falls; W. J. Craig, Brantford; D. Chalmers, Poole; D. Nolan, Newton Robinson and Miss Ethel Robson, Ilderton.

NATIONAL APPLE SHOW

From Farm and Dairy.

Canada has had its first national apple show and we may well feel proud of its success. It was held recently in Vancouver, B.C., and was the greatest show of its kind ever held in the world. Large exhibits were made by British Columbia growers and by growers from the famous apple growing sections of the Western States. Exhibits of apples grown in all parts of the Dominion were made by the Dominion Department of Agriculture. The prize list was the largest ever offered at a horticultural exhibition, amounting to $25,000. It is estimated that in the Show there were 1,638,000 apples and these apples were valued at $50,000.

The part of the show which attracted the most attention was an exhibit of car lots of 600 boxes each. In this class, there were 12 entries, the sweepstakes prize going to Central Okanagan Lands Ltd. The total prize money won by this single exhibit was $1,100. In the district displays, Kelowna was awarded first, the prize money being $500 and a gold medal. The displays of plates and boxed apples were the largest ever seen at any exhibition and the quality throughout was excellent.

British Columbia fruit men excel in box packing. The exhibit which attracted the greatest attention of any single entry was the carload lot shown by the Kelowna Farmers' Exchange. So perfect was the pack that in each of the 600 boxes, there were just 120 apples. The judges gave full points for the packing of this exhibit.

British Columbia is the newest of Canada's fruit growing provinces and great credit is due to the men who made this show the "best yet." An idea of the magnificence of the show may be gathered from the illustration on page five of this issue. And this is only part of the show as several necessary buildings were also used.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

OPINIONS ON TO-MORROW'S FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

"Wet grounds will sure help the Tigers," says a Toronto expert. "Speed and tackling are the students' strong points, and heavy going works against both."

"Trick plays are all right," quoth Chaucer Elliott of Montreal, "when your back line is well protected, but with a heavy forward division tearing through continually there is not a great deal of room for trick work. I doubt if Varsity will get away with any of the fancy stuff they pulled off against Ottawa last year."

Pete Green, the Ottawa coach, says: "If the game was played on neutral grounds I would call Varsity to win. But in Hamilton I am inclined to favour the Tigers. I do not think them a better team or even as good as Varsity. It is simply a question of grounds. Youth and stamina is certainly Varsity's, but the other fellows have the experience and play together. I think the score will be very close and the game a hard-fought one.

A. T. for takin' the gaff, the Toronto youngsters can stand more of it than the Tigers. Impossible to stop those young students unless they are maimed."

Montreal Star: Judging from the news that comes down from Hamilton, there appears to be some danger of the ambitious, but, on the whole, conservative old city going into hysteria over the Varsity-Tiger final for the Dominion championship. "Rooster" bands are being organized and trained to make on the day of battle various noises which, it is hoped, will get on the nerves of the college boys and strike terror into their hearts. Noise as an engine of warfare was once thought highly of by the Chinese, but the cold, hard facts of the case have made them pin their faith to bullets and gun-powder. And so, too, with football. The noise from the grand stand may show sympathy and sound brave, but it is the almost silent play on the field that the score board takes notice of.

HAMILTON PEOPLE ARE SATISFIED WITH THE TIGERS

HAMILTON, NOV. 24.—The Tigers held another practice to-night and, with one day between them and Saturday's big battle, feel confident that they will win the championship. It is said that the team is in first-class shape so far as condition is concerned, and that it will be able to go the distance. Its play is fast and resourceful and local fans have no fear of the outcome.

With more rain to-day the field is sure to be in a slippery condition on Saturday and both the teams and their supporters claim that this will work to their advantage, as they have always shown up well on such occasions. They also feel that it will tend to put a crimp in Varsity's efforts to pull off trick plays, and that at straight football they will prove the superior masters.

The "rooters" held another practice to-night and Fred Murphy, "Root Master," introduced some new songs and calls which will add to the gaiety of the occasion. The demand for seats is still heavy and some fancy prices are being paid by those who were unable to get in early. It is thought that even bigger sums will be paid between now and Saturday.

The Tiger team will be exactly as announced yesterday, with the exception of one surprising change, the substitution of Wally Baron, the big wing man who has been out of the city for some weeks, for Scott. Scott, Lowrey will meet the "rooters" from Varsity at the station with a posse of police, but will not attempt to molest the students so long as they keep anywhere within bounds. Chief Smith explains that the police deputation is being sent to the station as a matter of courtesy. The whole police force has been ordered out to do duty on the afternoon of the game.

With Varsity's Rooters.

Toronto, Nov. 25.—Never were such elaborate preparations made by University of Toronto students as for the Varsity-Tiger game to-morrow. Two thousand leather-lunged rooters gathered yesterday for the rehearsal of yells and songs and to receive instructions for the big doings over under the mole hill.

Extensive preparations are being made for an orderly and well-organized noise-producing brigade. The chief marshals will be Cayen, Meds.; Brock, Arts, and Campbell, Science. These will have a number of assistants to handle the big parade and maintain order. Everything possible is being done to dispel the impression general in Hamilton that the students are going over on mischief bent. Not so. They are out in loyal support of their colours by fair and proper means only.

KILLED IN GAME

Seventeen-Year-Old Boy Has His Skull Fractured When Tackled

WINSTED, CONN., NOV. 24.—Harry Lee, aged seventeen years, was killed here to-day in a football game between the Tierney Cadets and an independent team, composed principally of Gilbert Preparatory school students. His skull was fractured, and he died a few minutes after the accident before medical aid could reach him.

Lee had been running with the ball. He was tackled and downed, but arose after the pile of players had gotten up. He took a step, staggered and fell to the ground unconscious. Water was immediately applied to his head, and a call made for a doctor. The lad died on the field, however, within five minutes after he received the injury. The game was stopped at once.

SHRUBB WON BOSTON RACE

Defeated Tom Longboat by Three Quarters of a Lap in Fifteen Miles

BOSTON, MASS., NOV. 24.—Alfred Shrubb to-night defeated Tom Longboat, the Onondago Indian, in their fifteen-mile Marathon by three-quarters of a lap. The race was the concluding and star event of a meet at Mechanics' Hall. Shrubb was his old-time self, and what little betting was done was at 2 to 1 on the Britisher. His time was one hour, 26 minutes 3 3-5 seconds.

The finish was sensational. It was a case of speed against endurance, and if the race had been for a few miles more it looked as though the Indian would have won. Shrubb finished very tired, while the shambling gaited Indian passed the tape fresh as a daisy.

At the opening of the fifteenth mile Shrubb had a lead of two laps and then the Indian opened up and began to cut down the distance. It was much like the New York marathon between these two except that this time Shrubb did not collapse, though he was near it at the finish. Shrubb's clean stride put him five yards in the lead on the first lap of the race. For the first mile the Englishman's time was 5 minutes 3-5 seconds, at the second mile 10 minutes 3 seconds, and at the sixth mile 31 minutes 26 seconds. At the end of the twelfth mile his time was 1 hour 5 minutes 4-5 seconds.

HOCKEY

Picton Gazette: N. E. Irving of Trenton, was in town arranging for Picton to enter the Professional Hockey League Association for Eastern Ontario. Satisfactory arrangements, it if said, were made with the rink management for the use of the rink. From present indications the league will be composed of five teams, viz.: Port Hope, Peterborough, Trenton, Belleville, and Picton. Many of our boys are delighted with the proposition to inaugurate a season of professional hockey, and have already commenced training.

EVER THUS WITH PROS

Proposal on Foot Now to Establish a New Circuit in the East

OTTAWA, NOV. 24.—The nerves of hockey-enthusiasts which have been kept jingling for the past fortnight through rumours of disruption in the National Association and even cries of dissatisfaction from the striking puck-chasers received another jar this afternoon when it was announced that a number of Ottawa and Montreal players had requested Dr. P. D. Baird, President of the Ottawa Football Club, to organize a syndicate and assist in the formation of a big professional circuit.

Bob Shillington, late of Rochester, Harry Ketchum and others were also approached. Stuart, Lake, and others of the Ottawas have expressed their abeyance. Dr. Baird has called a meeting of the proposed syndicate for to-morrow, and says that they are willing, in the event of the Ottawas withdrawing, to take over the present franchise and pay the men salaries equivalent to those received last year.

"Newsy" Lalonde, Lacey Gilmour, George Barnett, Ambrose O'Brien and other Renfrew magnates were all here to-day, their presence lending colour to the new league story. It is not thought, however, that Renfrew would quit the National, in which they hold two franchises, one which they are now exercising, and another which Ambrose O'Brien proposes to sell next year to Toronto promoters. President Mettee of the Ottawas said that they would not decide until to-morrow as to what course they would pursue, although he made it plain that Ottawa would throw up the sponge rather than operate the club at another big loss. He declared that the Ottawas took in $25,000 at the gate last season, and that they finished with a deficit the salaries totalling about $16,000. The whole situation will be very much clouded until next Saturday's meeting at Montreal.

"Newsy" Lalonde is trying to secure his release from the Renfrew Club, which is loth to let him go. The Renfrew Club meets to-morrow night to decide as to Lalonde.

RUGBY

The following from the Toronto Star is the kind of stuff that makes many people hope that the Hamilton Tigers will just everlastingly bang the rah rah boys all over the lot when the Big Four champions and Varsity clash to-morrow at Hamilton:

Rules for guidance of Torontonians at the football game:

1. On alighting from the train, football enthusiasts from the city are advised to walk through the fields to the ball grounds, as the "carpet-sweepers" run only every fifteen minutes, and hold twenty people.

2. Students. Don't root too hard for Varsity. It annoys the nervous people in the Foolish House on the hill, at the south end of the field.

3. Don't heckle any special "constay-balls" or "gosh, gol darn it" you'll get put in the pound. ("Now you do that exactly, gol darn you.")

4. The Reeve and Council request that no windows be broken in general stores on the main street.

5. Meet all friends from the city at the post office — that is where all the townsfolk meet, by heck!

6. All poultry and live stock running at large on the main street must not be annoyed.

7. Dont' take any farmers' whisky over the bars. You haven't been in the town long enough.

8. Prof. DuMoulin will give a trained Tiger show in the Town Hall in the evening. Folks from the city are advised to see this, as it is very comical.

9. Good meals (with cider) may be had at Steve Spulphin's Hotel, opposite Smith's flour mill.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"Lord, for the erring thought, not into evil wrought
Lord, for the foolish will, betrayed and baffled still for the heart from itself kept, our thanksgiving accept."

Twelve years ago next Sunday night the steamship Portland, disappeared from the sight and ken of man.

She left Boston at six o'clock at night, carrying 150 passengers.

She was sighted at eight o'clock off Thatcher's Island, and that was the last that was ever seen or heard of her. There was not a single survivor, and it has never even been known where the ill-fated ship went down.

Probably you are wondering why, on Thanksgiving morning, I am recalling such a gruesome disaster as that.

Well, I'll tell you a little anecdote connected with this event, and then maybe you'll understand.

I happened to be living in Boston at the time and was near the Eastern Steamship wharf at the hour the ill-starred ship sailed. Just after the gangplank had been pulled up and the Portland had begun to back out a carriage dashed up to the wharf and a man leaped out and tried to jump to the boat, which was then about twenty feet away. Two men on the wharf stopped his insane attempt and he stopped there alternately insisting that the boat had sailed five minutes too early and giving his unvarnished opinion of the cabman, who had got caught in that fool blockade and made him miss the boat.

A day or two later I read an interview in a Boston paper with this man telling about his narrow escape and expressing his thankfulness for the dispensation of Providence that made him miss that boat. (There was no mention of the cabman.)

Today is Thanksgiving. Someone, of course, has reminded you to be thankful for your positive blessings, but what about your negative ones?

What about the "erring thought not into evil wrought"?

What about the chance you just missed, the opportunity that was denied you and what you now see would have led you in decidedly the wrong direction.

In short, what about the happy "It might have been"?

Of course the story of the man who missed the Portland is the story of a very big, and once in a lifetime, or ten lifetimes, "it-might-have-been."

But surely there were some lesser "it-might-have-beens" of the same sort, in your own life this past year?

There was a very sweet and wise poet once who said:

"Of all sad word of tongue or pen
The saddest are these, "It might have been."

and of course they are sometimes, but not always by any means.

Quite as often they are happy words only usually then we forget to say them.

And that isn't fair, is it?

So why not make this Thanksgiving, in the year of our Lord, 1910, a little unusual by recalling to mind some of these happy "it-might-have-beens," by giving thanks for "the erring thought not into evil wrought" by admitting that some of the things we have fought against have proved blessings and best of all by looking at some of our present worries in the light of this recollection.

CANADIAN WAS SECOND IN THE YONKERS MARATHON

NEW YORK, NOV. 24.—J. J. Reynolds of the Irish-American Athletic Club won the much-heralded Yonkers Marathon to-day in 2:38.36 2-5. Daniel Sheridan of Toronto, finished second in 2.43.46 2-5 and Wm. Galvin, Yonkers, I.A.A.C., was third, his time being 2.45.30 1-5. Fifty-four men started.

The distance was 90 yards of 25 miles, and led from the Hollywood Inn in Yonkers, south on South Broadway to Valentine lane to Riverdale avenue, north on which the trail led to Warburton avenue, to Hastings to Farragut road, to Sawmill River road, south to Tuckahoe road, to Central avenue, to Yonkers avenue, to the Empire City race track, where the last nine miles were run.

Many men well known in the long-distance running game were among the competitors, and incidentally, among the "also rans." Thousands of interested spectators lined the course from end to end, and fully 5,000 persons flocked into the race track enclosure to witness what proved the gruelling part of the race.

The course was probably as exacting as that which prompted a revival of Marathoning, being well calculated by its heart-breaking hills to tax the stamina of better fitted men than those who took part in yesterday's race.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The male quartette of the Y.M.C.A. will sing two selections at the meeting in the Crystal Theatre next Sunday night. They will sing "The Wayside Cross" and "The King's Business." Those who heard this quartette last Sunday night will want to hear it again. The two selections chosen by the quartette are two of the best that can be found. The latter was made famous by the Torey-Alexander mission and the former has been a favourite for many years.

There is no address at this meeting. Most of the time is spent in the singing of familiar hymns, just as is done in many of the homes of the city. A selection from the Bible is read and the message comes through the hymns or the reading.

The usual Sunday morning Bible Study Club will be held in the Association parlour on Sunday morning at 9.30. All young men are invited to attend this class. The lesson will be from the sixth chapter of St. John.

A Teacher Training Class will be organized in the near future. Teachers watch for the notice of the organization meeting. The class will study "Normal Lessons for Sunday School Teachers" in the first half hour and the lesson for the following Sunday in the second half. The general secretary of the Y.M.C.A. will be pleased to hear from all who are interested in the organization of such a training class.

For Constipation

A Medicine That Does Not Cost Anything Unless It Cures

The active medicinal ingredients of Rexall Orderlies, which are odorless, tasteless and colorless, is an entirely new discovery. Combined with other extremely valuable ingredients, it forms a perfect bowel regulator, intestinal invigorator and strengthener. Rexall Orderlies are eaten like candy and are notable for their agreeableness to the palate and gentleness of action. They do not cause griping or any disagreeable effect or inconvenience.

Unlike other preparations for a like purpose, they do not create a habit, but instead they overcome the cause of habit acquired through the use of ordinary laxatives, cathartics and harsh physic, and permanently remove the cause of constipation or irregular bowel action.

We will refund your money without argument if they do not do as we say they will. Two sizes, 25c. and 10c. Sold only at our store.—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury, druggists.

FOWL SUPPER

Held in the Hastings Town Hall Was a Great Success

Examiner Special.

HASTINGS, NOV. 19—The fowl supper held in the town hall on Monday last, under the auspices of the Methodist church, was a decided success. The tables were tastefully arranged, and decorated with plants, cut flowers and wax candles, and were waited on by the most winsome lads and lassies, who helped those present to the most toothsome viands. After ample justice had been done the good things, the large company repaired to the church to listen to the lecture given by Rev. Mr. Kenny, of Belleville, which was much appreciated. The musical part of the programme was well rendered, consisting of two anthems by the choir, a solo by Miss L. Tate and two selections by Mr. Asa Huycke of Peterborough and a duet by two male members of the choir.

On the following evening a social was held, and a pleasant hour spent together. The proceeds were in the neighbourhood of $180. The services on the Sunday previous were conducted by Rev. Mr. Kenny, who preached two eloquent sermons, which were well received.

Our citizens were shocked during the week to learn of the terrible accident which had befallen Mr. J. King, who so miraculously escaped immediate death by the train striking the wagon in which he was riding and throwing him several feet in the air. Mr. King's injuries, which were principally of the head, were attended to by Drs. Edmison and ade, after which he was removed to the Peterbrough Hospital, where we learn he is doing as well as can be expected. Mrs. King and child have the sympathy of all.

The funeral of the late Mr. Hughes, of Bracebridge, was held from St. George's church here on Sunday last to the Trent Valley cemetery. Deceased was for many years a highly respected resident of Hastings and has many friends who extend sympathy to bereaved family.

Miss Beatty, of Smith's Falls, is visiting at the home of Mrs. H. Collins.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Oliver, of Percy, spent Sunday in town.

Mrs. G. Buchanan, of Havelock has been the guest of her mother Mrs. J. Carter.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Carter, of Otonabee, visited friends in town on Monday.

Miss Rae Humphries, of Keene, has been a guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. Humphries.

Mrs. Aubrey Doxsee and little son are spending a few weeks with friends in Port Hope.

Mrs. Robt. Collins spent a few days during the week with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Richardson.

Mrs. W. Fowlds has returned after an extended visit at her former home in Petrolea.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Philips, of Percy spent Sunday with the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Oakman.

Mr. J. Collins has taken to himself a wife in the person of Miss Mulhern, of Campbellford. All his friends extend congratulations.

Mr. B. Oakman left last week for Lindsay, where he has secured employment with the railroad company.

Mr. J. Peters and Mr. Leo Lynch have returned, after spending the summer in Western Canada.

Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson, of Warkworth, spent Sunday in town.

REVIVAL MEETINGS

To-night at the revival meeting Mr. Mulligan will sing, "The Bird With a Broken Wing." This beautiful and touching song has been a comfort to many. It pictures the downfall and sin of a young life and its final restoration through the power of the gospel. A hearty invitation to all. This is the last meeting this week. Sunday night will be special.

WEDDING BELLS

OVEREND—PRICE.

A quiet, but very pretty wedding was solmenized yesterday afternoon at 3.30 at Dr. O'Brien's rectory, when Miss "Nettie" Helen Overend of 178 Lock street was joined in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. W. S. Price, also of this city. Dr. O'Brien officiated.

The bridesmaid was Miss Marion Overend, while Mr. H. Wadley, manager of the Brinton Carpet Company, assisted the groom.

OBITUARY

MR. JOHN HAYES.

He left for the States some time ago, thinking the change of climate would be better for his health. His remains are now on the way here and are expected to-night.

He is survived by three sisters and three brothers. The sisters are Misses Hannah and Nellie at home, and Mrs. Daniel Kelly, of Asphodel. The brothers are Messrs. Daniel and James, of Otonabee and Cornelius J., of Sudbury.

The funeral will be held on Sunday afternoon at 2.30 from the homestead, "Skibbereen" Farm, to the church of the Sacred Heart, and thence to St. Peter's cemetery.

SPLENDID PROGRAMME AT CHARLOTTE STREET CHURCH

Canada Quartette Proved Very Clever Entertainers — Local Talent Assisted in the Entertainment.

A GREAT SUCCESS

A very large assemblage of people gathered at the Charlotte Street Church Lecture Room last evening, to enjoy, what proved to be, a simply delightful programme. The entire programme, consisting of six teen numbers, was given by the Canada Male Quartette, Miss Spencer, reader, and Miss Pringle, soloist.

The numbers on this excellent programme were as follows:

Quartette—"The Chapel," by The Canada Male Quartette.

Bass solo—"When the Bell in the Lighthouse Rings"—by Mr. Edward Barton.

Reading—"A Scotch Lassie's Advice" by Miss Spencer.

Soprano solo—"Angels Guard Me"—Miss Pringle.

Quartette, "Robin Adair", the Canada Male Quartette.

Reading "A Leap for a Life,"—Miss Spencer.

Tenor—"Sally in Our Alley" by Mr. G. W. Collins.

Quartette, "Tenting on the Old Camp Grounds" by the Canada Male Quartette.

Reading—"Why Paddy Believes in Dreams" Miss Spencer.

Baritone — selected — Mr. F. E. Walden.

Quartette, "The Bill of Fare"—The Canada Male Quartette.

Reading—(a) "Uncle Eph's Heaven"; (b) "The Cane Bottom Chair"; (c) The Girls of Canada." — Miss Spencer.

Bass solo — "Nazareth" by Mr. Edward Barton.

Quartette — "The Soldier's Farewell" by the Canada Male Quartette.

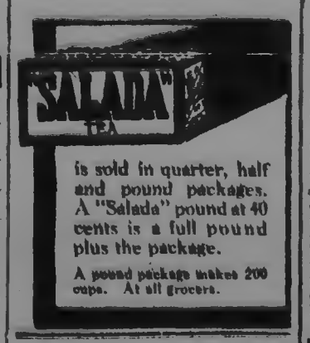
Mr. F. E. Walden was accompanist for the evening.

Every number, with the exception of the introductory quartette, received a hearty encore and other expressions of appreciation greeted the items. Speaking of the quartettes, especial mention may be made of "Tenting on the Old Camp Grounds", also the encore "Lucky Jim." These two items are worthy of special praise. They were very entertaining. The former selection stirred up a feeling of patriotism and enthusiasm in the hearts of the audience, while the latter wrought a complete change, drawing great applause and laughter from the crowd. "The Soldier's Farewell" was also a very appropriate number, being highly interesting and entertaining. The members of the Quartette are the following: Messrs. Edward Barton, R. D. Morris, G. W. Collins and F. E. Walker.

Miss Spencer's Readings greatly delighted the audience being of a very humourous nature, and each number drew forth great applause and encores every time.

"Angels Guard Me" by Miss Pringle was also much appreciated and the encore likewise was greatly applauded.

The concert, on the whole, was a complete and splendid success. Each member of the entertainers did his or her part admirably well. The lecture room was crowded and everyperson was well pleased with the pleasant time they enjoyed. The concert was closed by singing the National Anthem.



is sold in quarter, half and pound packages. A "Salada" pound at 40 cents is a full pound plus the package.

A pound package makes 200 cups. At all grocers.

MISSING DAUGHTER OF MILLIONAIRE RETURNS

Woman who Vanished when Father's Chauffeur did is at Home Again--- World wide Search by Brother.

CHAUFFEUR LOCATED

Examiner Special.

NEW YORK, NOV. 23. — Miss Maud Blaisdell, seventeen years old, daughter of Joseph Blaisdell, of No. 261 Decatur Street, Brooklyn, a millionaire, and formerly head of the Curtis-Blaisdell Coal Company, now President of the Standard Wood Company, has returned to the home of her father, from which she disappeared last May, at the same time her father's chauffeur, John T. Havens, a married man, vanished. Havens is in Palm Beach, Fla., managing a roller chair concession for Henry E. Bemis, of No. 243 Fifth Avenue.

Less than a week ago a telegram received from a Justice of the Peace in Palm Beach said that Havens had alleged that he had married Miss Blaisdell. A confirmation of this report could not be obtained from the family last night.

IMPLICITLY TRUSTED HAVENS

For eight years Havens was the chauffeur of the Blaisdells. He had charge of all their automobiles, and was treated as a member of the family. He frequently took Miss Blaisdell for long automobile rides through Long Island. Nothing was thought of this, as he was trusted implicitly.

On May 21 Miss Blaisdell disappeared. At the same time Havens, who had previously resigned his position, told his wife that he was going West to buy an aeroplane from the Wrights. For this alleged purpose he drew nearly $6,000 from the bank.

A world-wide search was made for Miss Blaisdell by her brother Bruce. At one time a reward of $1,000 was offered for clue to her whereabouts.

When Havens left for the West a note was found by his wife saying that he had gone to England, and a note was found in Miss Blaisdell's room saying she had gone to Liverpool. She asked to be forgiven.

When she left home she told her family that she was going to spend the night with friends in New York. When she failed to return the next day it was learned that she had not been with the people with whom she was supposed to have spent the night. It was then that the note was found in her room.

At the Blaisdell home last night Bruce Blaisdell said that his sister had returned.

"We refuse either to confirm or deny any reports that have been printed relative to the disappearance of Miss Blaisdell," he said. She has returned, and that is all we care to state."

It is said that since her disappearance Miss Blaisdell has been in San Jose, Cal., and that she has not been with Havens in Palm Beach. Mrs. Havens has had no word from her husband since he disappeared.

—Some one with a distorted sense of humour telephoned a personal item to the Examiner the other day in regard to Mr. and Mrs. Michael McMartin. TO-MORROW'S RUGBY REPORT

Those who are interested in to-morrow's Canadian championship football battle at Hamilton between Toronto Varsity and the Hamilton Tigers, and who is not? should not fail to read to-morrow's Examiner. This paper has made arrangements by which a graphic story of the big game will be told in to-morrow's issue, with every important play and every interesting feature set forth by an expert football writer. The Examiner has facilities at its command for securing such reports, that are equalled only by the big city dailies, and feels safe in saying that the story of the Canadian final will be as complete and interesting a sporting account as has ever been given the people of Peterborough. Only a few local people are lucky enough to be able to see the game, but everyone can read all about it a few minutes after the final whistle has sounded, in to-morrow's Examiner. Do not fail to secure a copy.

Warner The Jail Breaker At The Grand Opera House

The Grand Opera House has a vaudeville act of more than usual interest and merit just now in the performance of Warner, the jail breaker and company, in mystery feats that are away above the average. Mr. Warner features the great trunk mystery, in which he is placed in a trunk lined with plate glass and then securely closed by being sewed up in a canvass. It takes him only a minute to escape, to the mystification of the audience. Mr. Warner also escapes from a straight jacket into which he is securly fastened. To-morrow night as a climax to his wonderful work he will permit a committee from the audience to enclose him in a packing box and nail him in, after which he will get loose.

Murdered For Revenge.

New Orleans, Nov. 26.—James H. Reid of Houston, Miss., a civil engineer, was, according to a despatch received yesterday from Mexico City, killed there by a policeman who sought by taking the life of an American, to avenge the burning of Antonio Rodrigues by a mob in Texas.

In company with L. B. Lollier of Memphis and some other friends, Reid, last Sunday, had just stepped out of a restaurant, when Sebastian Verderel, a policeman, fired two bullets into his body. When Reid fell Verderel exclaimed: "I have killed the gringo because the gringoes burned a Mexican."

Arbitrators Can't Agree.

Winnipeg, Nov. 26. Different views are held by each of three arbitrators sitting in street railway dispute, and after strenuous efforts to come to a unanimous decision, the board adjourned yesterday afternoon. The members agreed to each prepare a report and submit these reports at a final meeting to-day, when it is hoped a compromise may be reached.

MONK IS RUNNING OMNIBUS

Member For Red Deer Makes Merry the Opposition Amendment to the Reply to the Speech From Throne —Speaker Marcil Adequately Answers Col. Sam Hughes Regarding Gallery Episode.

Ottawa, Nov. 26. Before the House resumed the debate on the address yesterday, Col. Sam Hughes (Victoria and Haliburton), arose to call the Speaker's attention to the treatment accorded Rev. George Jackson and Rev. Dr. Henderson, who were expelled from the Speaker's gallery on Thursday.

After Col. Hughes had concluded, Speaker Marcil said that, while not required to answer the question, he would do so in courtesy to the House. He explained that the first row in the gallery was reserved for Her Excellency and party, the wives of the Cabinet Ministers, and of the Speaker and wife of the leader of the Opposition. As to clergymen of other denominations occupying the same seats without molestation, the Speaker said that he had, on the request of a member, granted permission to Bishop Gruard of St. Mary's, Northwest Territories, to occupy the front seat in order to follow the proceedings more closely, but at that time the front row was unoccupied. He would see that the incident did not occur again.

Col. Sam Hughes, reminding the House that French blood ran in his veins, deprecated the race cries. The independence sentiment expressed by Mr. Fowke he condemned, and looked forward to a united British Empire.

Dr. Michael Clark (Liberal, Red Deer) paid a compliment to Mr. Borden's reference to our relations with the United States as being the best monument of international peace. The acceptance of the Government's naval policy in England was presumptive evidence of approval, and quoted Sir George Doughty in support of that contention. Mr. Borden's amendment he characterized as a benevolent ineptitude." He thought it was a victory for Mr. Monk, and was surprised by the amount of energy shown by that hon. member, who was apparently so "lamb-like." Mr. Monk seemed to have smashed the compartments of the Conservative party and got possession of the whole omnibus. He had not put Mr. Borden out of the driver's seat, but had pushed George E. Foster aside, and evinced a desire to put Mr. Bourassa in his place. If the Opposition thought that was extreme language, what had become of the talk of an "emergency contribution"?

Mr. Fowke and Martin Burrill also spoke.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier yesterday morning presided over the committee to revise the list of members of the various standing committees. There were few changes. Albert Allard, M.P. for Ottawa, who was not given any committee last session, was made a member of the committees on railways, private bills, standing orders, and agriculture.

L. A. Rivet was substituted for Hon. L. P. Brodeur on the private bills committee; P. E. Blondin of Champlain took the place of Gerald White on the standing orders committee.

Hon. Charles Murphy was added to the printing committee, thereby providing that the man who is the head of the printing department shall be a member of the committee which supervises the printing of Parliament. Mr. Murphy was also added to the public accounts committee, as was also Mr. Fraser of Prince Edward Island, and Mr. Turriff was made a member of the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. Russell of East Toronto is put on the agriculture committee in place of W. H. Smith of Algoma, and Gerald White is added to the mines committee in the stead of P. E. Blondin.

Pale-Faced Fanatics.

Montreal, Nov. 26.—There was a wild scene at the license commissioner's court yesterday afternoon when Secretary Roberts of the Dominion Alliance took the place of Mr. St. Julien, a K.C., and being asked to leave, refused, a scuffle ensuing.

Mr. Roberts says he will take action against the lawyer for assault.

During the day Mr. Perion, M.P.P. for Gaspe, made a violent attack upon what he called "pale-faced fanatics who want to curtail the liberty of the people." The majority, he added, would rule in this city.

Confesses to Murder.

Trenton, N. J., Nov. 26.—After a thrilling fifteen-hour examination, J. Sears, a half-breed Indian and negro, suspected of the murder of the Rev. A. L. Armstrong and his wife, collapsed early yesterday, and confessed. It is said he expected to benefit under Mr. Armstrong's will.

Plans For Cruisers.

Ottawa, Nov. 26.—The naval service department has received from England the plans for the four 5,000-ton cruisers and the six destroyers it contemplates to build for the Canadian navy. It will now advertise for these vessels, stipulating that they must be built in Canada.

Sentiment at McGill.

Montreal, Nov. 26.—Imperialism v. Nationalism in the Bourassa sense was the subject of an animated debate last evening at McGill University, and of the number present, sixty voted for imperialism, and fifteen against it, which is about the percentage of the university.

REFORMS GRANTED IN NAVY

Extraordinary Session of Parliament to Hold and Demands of the Men Are Acceded to In Full—Several Persons Were Killed in the Uprising—The Movement Not a Political One, Says Report.

Rio de Janeiro, Nov. 26.—The Government of Brazil yesterday yielded to its mutinous navy.

Congress, meeting in extraordinary session, voted to concede every demand of the ultimatum presented on Thursday, including general amnesty for the sailors who, after murdering as many of their superior officers as was necessary to place them in complete control, trained the guns of the warships upon the capital.

What effect the outcome will have eventually on the discipline in the navy, is a matter of some concern. The immediate effect is to give the sailors increased pay, shorter hours of service and less work through the recruiting of additions to the crews, and to abolish corporal punishment in the fleet.

Following the action of Congress, the mutineers went through the formality of surrendering and before noon yesterday the city had resumed its normal activities and the public excitement had subsided.

During the progress of the revolt, Hon. James Bryce, British ambassador to the United States, was the guest of Baron Rio Branco, the Brazilian foreign minister.

The mutinous battleship Sao Paulo had on board several British subjects, who accompanied the vessel on its first trip home after its construction in England. At the outbreak of trouble, Sir Wm. H. D. Haggard, British Minister to Brazil, notified the Brazilian Foreign Office that any attempt of the loyal torpedo boats to destroy the revolting warships would be attended with danger to British subjects on board.

About ten o'clock on the night of Nov. 22, as Capt. Nunes, commanding the battleship Minas Geraes, came back from dinner on board the French training ship Duguay Trouin, he heard a violent uproar and a volley of shots. It was the crew of his vessel who had revolted. Capt. Nunes and two other officers offered resistance to some of the sailors and were killed, and one officer was mortally wounded. Several sailors were also killed. The mutinous crew meanwhile shouted "Long live Liberty!"

The insurrectionary movement then broke out on board the other new Brazilian Dreadnought, the battleship Sao Paulo, and the scout ship Rahul. All the officers having been handed, a plain sailor of the first-class named Jean Candido took command of the squadron.

Ammunition was provided, provisions were requisitioned and a coal depot on the Isle of Vienna was taken. Vessels were prevented from transporting coal destined for the French steamer Atlantique and the English ship Orenso. The movement was declared to be without political significance.

The mutineers sent a message by radiograph to President Fonseca setting forth their claims for an immediate abolition of a corporal punishment on board ship, an increase in their pay according to the program submitted to Congress some time ago and diminution of the work with which they are burdened by reason of the maintenance of incomplete crews. The statement added that a bombardment of the city and of other ships in the harbor would follow the refusal of the demands.

The Government refrained from replying to the ultimatum of the mutineers, and a moderately severe fire was soon opened by them upon the city. This continued at intervals all night. The inhabitants of Rio Janeiro were thrown into confusion by the suddenness of the event.

On the morning of Nov. 23 there was further firing on the city by the mutineers, the shots coming at infrequent intervals. Little damage to the city resulted from the bombardment, however.

Cabled For Blackstock.

Toronto, Nov. 26.—George T. Blackstock, K.C., left last evening for the old country, after having, on Thursday night, received a cablegram from the chief Unionist whip, Right Hon. Sir A. F. Acland Hood, asking that he hurry over to "take the stump," in behalf of tariff reform. At last year's election, Mr. Blackstock addressed meeting in over a dozen English constituencies.

His departure will render it necessary to appoint a new counsel for Oxford County in the Canada Craft enquiry, which opens at Woodstock next Wednesday.

Would Kill Competition.

London, Ont., Nov. 26.—A stir was caused yesterday when it became known that a statement of Mayor Beattie that the city should undersell at all hazards the London Electric Co., so as to kill off competition was made the basis of an appeal to the Ontario Government and the Hydro-Electric Commission at Toronto.

As a result of the appeal, it is stated, the Hydro-Electric Commission will not allow the City of London to increase the discount to Niagara power users from 10 to 20 per cent, as the mayor proposed.

Hon. Adam Beck will say nothing as to the situation. The London Water Commissioners are likely, in order to avoid a long and tedious war with the London Electric Co., to consider the matter of the purchase of the [illegible]

CONFERENCE DEFERRED

Ottawa, Nov. 26. Premier Roblin of Manitoba returned to Ottawa yesterday from New York, and left again in the evening for Prescott to meet his wife. He leaves for Winnipeg to-day. During a portion of the afternoon he occupied a seat on the floor of the House of Commons.

Mr. Roblin's visit to Ottawa was to continue the adjourned interview he had with Sir Wilfrid Laurier last week regarding the question of the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba. Yesterday's interview was fruitless. Sir Wilfrid Laurier declared that he was too busy at present to give any consideration to the matter. It will be remembered that last summer the Federal Premier said in Winnipeg that if he and Mr. Roblin were to get together alone they could settle this matter in an hour. Therefore, soon after Sir Wilfrid Laurier returned to Ottawa, Premier Roblin wrote to him and suggested that he should go to Ottawa and hold a conference regarding the boundary question. Sir Wilfrid replied that he would be very glad to have such a conference.

Mr. Roblin accordingly came down to Ottawa last week and saw the Premier, but Sir Wilfrid assured him that he was very busy with the matters to come before Parliament and that he would have to ask that the conference be postponed until this week. Mr. Roblin went to New York and returned yesterday. Sir Wilfrid stated that he was still too busy and asked that the conference be delayed until after the new year.

Mr. Roblin says that he will return to Ottawa after the new year.

Chief Must Wear Uniform.

Chatham, Nov. 26.—The police commissioners yesterday insisted that Chief Holmes wear his uniform while on duty, and that the other officers on the staff salute him when they pass him on the street. Formerly Chief Holmes only wore his uniform when he went to church.

The Alva Sails.

London, Nov. 26.—The Alva, built by order of the Canadian Government for quarantine service, sailed from Falmouth Thursday. It is expected that she will arrive in Halifax in three weeks.

New Sheriff of Bruce.

Toronto, Nov. 26.—D. M. Jermyn, who contested North Bruce twice in the Conservative interest, was yesterday appointed sheriff of Bruce in succession to the late Sheriff Parker.

THE STRONGER EYE

Are you aware that almost everyone is equipped with unequal eyes? That is to say, the right is stronger than the left, or vice versa. We rarely realize this, because the stronger eye takes upon itself all the work and the weaker one scarcely ever attempts to do anything.

NATURE'S INEVITABLE LAW!

Every organ or faculty which is not made use of for a considerable length of time, becomes gradually but surely useless. And this is the effect on the eyes; work keeps the strong eye in good order, but lack of work causes the other to grow worse.

Possibly you may be in this condition, if so my record in the Optical Business during the past seven years in this city, is proof of my ability to benefit you.

HELPLESS CRIPPLE FROM RHEUMATISM

4 HOME PLACE, TORONTO, DEC. 15th, 1909.

"I was a terrible sufferer from Rheumatism for nearly a year, and my right arm was swollen and the pain was fearful. All down the right side, the pain was dreadful, and I could hardly move for the agony. I was treated by two physicians but their medicine did me no good, and I tried numerous other remedies but received no benefit. I was simply a helpless cripple and suffered from Rheumatism all during last winter.

I saw "Fruit-a-tives" advertised in "The Telegram" and decided to try this remedy. After I had taken one box, I was much better and the pain less, and I continued the treatment with good hopes. When I had taken three boxes, I was so well that I could use my arm again and the pain was practically gone. After I had taken five boxes, I was entirely well again—no pain—no suffering—and now I am as WELL as I ever was.

The cure of my case by "Fruit-a-tives" was indeed splendid because all the doctors failed to even relieve me of my sufferings.

For the sake of others who may suffer from this terrible disease, Rheumatism, I give you permission to publish this statement."

MRS. LIZZIE BAXTER.

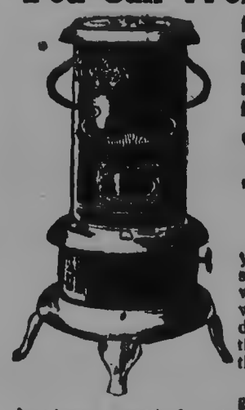
"Fruit-a-tives" is the only remedy that actually cures Rheumatism, and Sciatica because "Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine that actually prevents Uric Acid being formed in any quantity in the body. If there is no excess of uric acid in the blood, there can be no Rheumatism.

"Fruit-a-tives" keeps the stomach clean—the liver active—the bowels regular—the kidney strong and the skin healthy. These are the organs that rid the body of all waste. When "Fruit-a-tives" so regulates the system that all waste is eliminated, then there can be no waste or "urea" to be changed into uric acid. Thus, there can be no uric acid in the blood, to inflame nerves and cause the pain which we know by the names of Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago, Neuralgia. "Fruit-a-tives" will cure every trace of Rheumatism, Pain In The Back, Swollen Hands and Feet, and other troubles due to the blood being poisoned by uric acid.

If you are subject to Rheumatism, cure yourself now with "Fruit-a-tives" and be free of pain this winter.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At all dealers, or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa, Ont.

You Can Work Near a Window



in winter when you have a Perfection Oil Heater. It is a portable radiator which can be moved to any part of a room, or to any room in a house. When you have a

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

Absolutely smokeless and odorless

you do not have to work close to the stove, which is usually far from the window. You can work where you wish, and be warm. You can work on dull winter days in the full light near the window, without being chilled to the bone.

The Perfection Oil Heater quickly gives heat, and with one filling of the font burns steadily for nine hours, without smoke or smell. An indicator always shows the amount of oil in the font. The filler-cap, put in like a cork in a bottle, is attached by a chain. This heater has a cool handle and a damper top.

The Perfection Oil Heater has an automatic-locking flame spreader, which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back, so the wick can be quickly cleaned. The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged and can be unscrewed in an instant for rewicking. The Perfection Oil Heater is finished in japan or nickel, is strong, durable, well-made, built for service, and yet light and ornamental.

"THE BETRAYAL"

(By E. Phillips Oppenheim.)

He swung round and held out his hand. His eyes searched my face eagerly.

"Nephew," he said, "I wanted to meet you, and I didn't want to meet you. God bless my soul! you've got Marie's eyes and mouth. Come and dine with me one night next week—any night—let me know. Good-bye, good-bye, Lady Angela. God bless you. Here, James, give me your arm down the steps, and whistle for my fellow to draw up. There he is, in the middle of the road, the blockhead."

Lady Angela and I exchanged glances. I think that we should both have laughed but for the tears which we had seen in his eyes.

"Poor old man," she murmured. "He is very nervous and very sensitive. I know that he dreaded seeing you and yet he came this afternoon for no other purpose. Will you come into the drawing-room for a moment?"

There was a certain stiffness in her manner, which was new to me. She remained standing, and her soft, dark eyes were full of grave inquiry.

"Mr. Ducaine," she said, "I passed you just now driving in a hansom with a person of whom I disapprove. May I know is it any secret why you were with her?"

"It is no secret at all, Lady Angela," I answered. "I was sent to fetch her by your father."

"By my father?" she repeated incredulously. "Do you mean that she is in this house?"

"Certainly," I answered. "Your father is anxious, I believe, about Lord Blenavon. It occurred to me that he perhaps hoped to get news of him from Mrs. Smith-Lessing. At any rate he sent me for her."

She seemed to me to be trembling a little. Her eyes sought mine almost pathetically. She was afraid of something. In the half-lights she appeared to me then so frail and girlish that a great wave of tenderness swept in upon me. I longed to take her into my arms—even to hold her hands and try to comfort her. Surely to do these things was the privilege of the man who loved her. And I loved her. I loved her so that the pain and joy of it were woven together like live things in my heart, fighting always against the grim silence which lay like a seal upon my lips. But there were moments when I was sorely tried and this was one of them. My eyes fell from hers. I dared not look her in the face.

"Is this all?" she asked falteringly.

"It is all that I know," I answered.

Then we were silent. With a little sigh she sank down in the corner of a high-backed easy chair. It seemed to me that she was thinner, that something of the delicate childishness of her appearance had passed away since her coming to London. I knew that she was in trouble, and I dared not ask her the cause of it.

"I wish that we were going back to Paris to-morrow," she said suddenly. "Everything and everybody is different here. You seem to spend most of your time trying to avoid me, and Colonel Ray, I do not know what is the matter with him, but he is to me like a walking tragedy."

"I have not tried to avoid you," I said.

Then I stopped short. Her eyes were fixed upon mine and the lie stuck in my throat. I went on desperately.

"I think," I said, "that if you knew Colonel Ray is different you should ask him about it."

She shook her head dejectedly.

"I cannot," she said. "Sometimes I am frightened of Colonel Ray. It is like that just now."

"But you should try and get over it," I said gently. "He has strange moods, but you should always remember that he is the man whom you are going to marry. There ought to be every confidence between you, and I know, yes, I know that he is very fond of you."

She leaned a little forward. Her hair was a little dishevelled, her face was almost haggard. Her under lip was quivering like a child's.

"I am afraid of him," she sobbed out suddenly. "I am afraid of him, and I have promised to marry him. Can't somebody—help me?"

Her head fell suddenly forward and was buried in her hands. Her whole frame shook with convulsive weeping, and then suddenly a little white hand shot out towards me. She did not look up, but the hand was there, timid, yet inviting. I dropped on my knee by her side, and I held it in mine.

"Dear Lady Angela," I murmured. "You must not give way like this. You must not! Ray is not used to women, and you are very young. But he loves you."

"I don't want him to love me," she sobbed. "Oh, I know that I am foolish and wicked and childish, but I am afraid of him."

I kept silence, for my own battle was a hard one. The little hand was holding fast to mine. She lay curled up in the corner of the chair, her face hidden, her slim, delicate figure shaking every now and then with sobs. All the while I longed passionately to take her into my arms and comfort her.

"Don't!" I begged. "Oh, don't. Ray has told me his story. He has made me his confidant. He has told me how unhappy he has been, and how he loves you. Oh, Lady Angela, what is there I can say? What can I do?"

I was losing my head a little, I think, for her fingers were gripping mine convulsively, warm and tender little fingers which seemed to be drawing me all the while closer to her.

"I am so miserable," she murmured.

Then suddenly her other arm was round my neck, her wet tear-stained face was pressed to mine. I scarcely knew how it happened, but I knew that she was in my arms, and my lips were pressed to hers. A sudden, beautiful wave of colour flooded her cheeks; she smiled gladly up at me. She gave a delicious little sigh of satisfaction and then buried her face on my shoulder. Almost at the same moment Ray entered the room.

She did not at once raise her head, although she pushed me gently away from her at the sound of the opening of the door. I, facing in that direction, saw him from the first, a dark stern figure, standing as though rooted to the ground, with the door-handle still in his hand. For the second time in one day he seemed to have intervened at the precise psychological moment. He did not speak to me, nor I to him. Lady Angela, as though wondering at the silence, turned her head at last, and a little gasping cry broke from her lips.

"Mostyn," she exclaimed, "is that you?"

For answer he turned towards the wall and flooded the room with electric light. Then he looked at us both intently and mercilessly; only this time I saw that much of his wonderful self-control was wanting. He did not answer Lady Angela. He did not glance towards her.

"You cur!" he cried. "Twice in a day am I to be brought face to face with your cursed treachery! Twice in a day," Lady Angela, may I beg that you will leave us?"

She stood up and faced him, slim and white-faced, yet with her head thrown back and her voice steady.

"Mostyn," she said, "this is my fault. I do not ask for your forgiveness. I have behaved shamefully. But I was miserable, and I forgot. Mr. Ducaine is blameless. It was my fault."

"You will pardon the keenness of my observation," he answered, "but the attitude in which I was unfortunate enough to find you tells its own story. You will oblige me, Lady Angela, by leaving us alone."

I would have spoken, but she held out her hand.

"I think you forget, Colonel Ray," she said, "that this is my house. I am not disposed to leave you and Mr Ducaine here together in your present mood."

He laughed harshly.

"Are you afraid for your lover?" he asked. "I promise you that I will hold his person sacred."

"Lady Angela," I begged, "Please leave us! I——"

Then came an interruption so unexpected and yet so natural that the whole scene seemed at once to dissolve into bathos. The door was thrown open, and a footman ushered in callers.

"Lady Chelsford and the Marchioness of Cardene, your ladyship," he announced. "Mrs. and the Misses Colquhoun. Sir George Treherne."

It was a transformation. The room with its dull note of tragedy, was suddenly filled with faint perfumes, shaken from the rustling draperies of half a dozen women, a little chorus of light voices started the babel of small-talk, Lady Angela had taken her place behind the large round tea-table and was talking nonsense with the tall young guardsman who had drawn his chair up to her side, and I, with a plate of sandwiches in my hand, nearly ran into Ray, who was carrying a cup of tea. For a quarter of an hour or so we played our parts in the comedy. Then a servant entered the room and whispered in my ear.

"His Grace would be glad to see you in the library, sir."

I rose at once. Angela's eyes were fixed upon mine questioningly. As I passed the table I spoke to her, and purposely raised my voice so that Ray should hear.

"Your father has sent for me, Lady Angela. He is terribly industrious today."

She smiled back to me quickly. I lingered in the hall for a minute, and Ray joined me there. He did not speak a word, but he motioned me fiercely to precede him to the library. Directly we entered it was clear that something unusual had happened. The great safe door stood open. Lord Chelsford and the Duke were both awaiting our coming.

CHAPTER XXXVI

I LOSE MY POST.

The Duke solemnly closed the door. "Ray," he said, "I am glad that you are here. Something serious has happened. Mr. Ducaine, Lord Chelsford and I desire to ask you a few questions."

I bowed. What was coming I could not indeed imagine, unless Ray had already made the disclosure.

"The word code for the safe today was Magneta; I believe?" the Duke asked.

"That is correct, sir," I answered.

"And it was known to whom?"

"To Lord Chelsford, yourself, Colonel Ray, and myself," I answered.

"Exactly! Those documents are now all missing."

I strode to the safe and looked in. It was as the Duke had said. The safe was practically empty.

"They were there this morning," I said. "It was arranged that I should examine the contents of the safe the first thing, and take any finished work over to the War Office. Do you remember who has been in the room today, sir?"

"Yourself, myself, and the woman whom you brought here an hour or so ago."

"Mrs. Smith-Lessing?" I exclaimed.

"Precisely," the Duke remarked, drily.

"Did you leave her alone here?" I asked.

"For two minutes only," the Duke answered. "I was called up on the telephone from the House of Lords. I did not imagine that there could be the slightest risk in leaving her, for without the knowledge of that word Magneta the safe would defy a professional locksmith."

"You will forgive my suggesting it, your Grace," I said, with some hesitation, "but you have not, I presume, had occasion to go to the safe during the day?"

"I have not," the Duke answered loudly.

"Then I cannot suggest any explanation of the opening of the safe," I admitted. "It was impossible for Mrs Smith-Lessing to have opened it unless she knew the code word."

"The question is," the Duke said quietly, "did she know it?"

Then I realized the object of this cross-examination. The colour flared suddenly into my cheeks, and as suddenly left them. The absence of those papers was extraordinary to me. I utterly failed to understand it.

"I think I know what you mean, sir," I said. "It is true that Mrs. Smith-Lessing is my stepmother. I believe, too, it is true, that she is connected with the French Secret Police. I was there this afternoon—you yourself sent me. But I did not tell Mrs. Smith-Lessing the code word, and I know nothing of the disappearance of those documents."

Then Ray moved and placed deliberately upon the table the roll of papers which I had given up to him a few hours ago.

"What about these?" he asked, with biting scorn. "Tell the Duke and Lord Chelsford where I found them! Let us hear your glib young tongue telling the truth for once, sir."

Both the Duke and Lord Chelsford were obviously startled. Ray had always been not dumb and upholder. He spoke now with very apparent enmity.

"Perhaps you would prefer to tell the story yourself," I answered. "I will correct you if it is necessary."

"Very well," he answered. "I will tell the story, and a pitiful one it is. This boy is watched, as we all know, for, owing to my folly in ignoring his antecedents, a great trust has been reposed in him. News was brought to me that he had been seen with his father and Mrs. Smith-Lessing in Gattini's Restaurant. Later, that he had found his way to their lodging. I followed him there. He may have come there with an errand from you, Duke, but when I arrived there he was doing a little business on his own account, and these papers were in the act of passing from him to his father."

"What are they?" Lord Chelsford asked.

"Your Lordship may recognize them," I answered quietly. "They are a summary of the schemes of defence of the southern ports. I was at that moment, the moment when Colonel Ray entered, considering an offer of five thousand pounds for them."

Even Ray was staggered at my admission, and the Duke looked as though he could scarcely believe his ears. Lord Chelsford was busy looking through the papers.

"You young blackguard," Ray muttered through his teeth. "After that admission, do you still deny that you told Mrs. Smith-Lessing, or whatever the woman calls herself, the code word for that safe?"

"Most certainly I deny it," I answered firmly. "The two things are wholly disconnected."

The Duke sat down heavily in his chair. I knew very well that of the three men he was the most surprised. Lord Chelsford carefully placed the papers which he had been reading in his breast pocket. Ray leaned over towards him.

"Lord Chelsford," he said, "and you, Duke, you took this young man on trust, and I pledged my word for him. Like many a better man, I made a mistake. For all that we know he has secret copies of all the work he has done for us, ready to dispose of. What in God's name are we going to do with him?"

"What do you suggest?" Lord Chelsford asked softly.

"My way would not be yours," Ray answered, with a hard laugh. "I am only half civilized, you know, and if he and I were alone in the desert at this moment I would shoot him without remorse. Such a breach of trust as this deserves death."

"We are, unfortunately," Lord Chelsford remarked, "not in a position to adopt such extreme measures. It would not even be wise for us to

After La Grippe

"I had suffered several weeks with LaGrippe. Had pains in my head and eyes. It felt as though there was a heavy weight on the top of my head, until it seemed that my brain would burst. I was so nervous that I could not rest or sleep. When I dozed off I would awake with a sudden jerking of my whole body. Dr. Miles' Nervine, Heart Remedy and Nerve and Liver Pills cured me. A number of friends have since realized the same benefits."

MRS. ALVIN H. LOCKS,

The after effects of LaGrippe are often more serious than the disease, as it leaves the system in a weakened condition that invites more serious troubles, such as pneumonia, etc.

"THE BETRAYAL"

attempt to formulate a legal charge against him. The position is somewhat embarrassing. What do you suggest, Duke?"

I glanced towards the Duke, and I was surprised to see that his hands were shaking. For a man who rarely displayed feeling the Duke seemed to be wonderfully affected.

"I can suggest nothing," he answered in a low tone. "I must confess that I am bewildered. These matters have developed so rapidly."

Lord Chelsford looked thoughtful for a moment.

"I have a plan in my mind," he said slowly. "Duke, should I be taking a liberty if I asked to be left alone with this young man for five minutes?"

The Duke rose slowly to his feet. He had the air of one not altogether approving of the suggestion. Ray glowered upon us both, but offered no objection. They left the room together. Lord Chelsford at once turned to me.

"Ducaine," he said, "forgive me that I did not come to your aid. I will see that you do not suffer later on. But what in Heaven's name is the meaning of this last abstraction from the safe?"

I shook my head.

"The woman could never have guessed the word'" I said.

"Impossible'" he agreed "Ducaine do you know why Lord Blenavon left England so suddenly?"

"Colonel Ray knows, sir," I answered "Ask him'"

Lord Chelsford became very though Lord Chelsford became very thoughtful.

"Ducaine," he said, "we are in a fix. So far your plan has worked to perfection. Paris has plenty of false information, and your real copies have all reached me safely. But if you leave, how is this to be carried on? I do not know whom I mistrust, but if the day's work of the Board is really to be left in the safe, either here or at Brasted—"

"You must choose my successor yourself, sir," I interrupted.

"The Duke has always opposed my selections. Besides, you have prepared your false copies with rare skill. Even I was deceived for a moment just now by your summary. You do not overdo it. Everything is just a little wrong. I am not sure even now whether I should not do better to tell Ray and the Duke the truth."

"I am in your hands, sir," I answered. "You must do as you think best."

"They will be back in a moment. It is absurd to doubt either of them. Ducaine. Yet I shall keep silent. I have an idea. Agree to everything I say."

The Duke and Ray returned together. Lord Chelsford turned to them.

"Mr. Ducaine," he said, coldly, "persists in his denial of any knowledge of to-day's affair. With regard to the future, I have offered him his choice of an arrest on the charge of espionage, or a twelve months' cruise on the Ajax, which leaves tomorrow for China. He has chosen the latter. I shall take steps of course to see that he is not allowed to land at any calling-place, or dispatch letters."

Ray smiled a little cruelly.

"The idea is an excellent one, Chelsford," he said. "When did you say that the Ajax sailed?"

"To-morrow." Lord Chel-ford answered. "I propose to take Mr. Ducaine to my house to-night, and to hand him over to the charge of a person on whom I can thoroughly rely."

The Duke looked at me curiously.

"Mr. Ducaine consents to go?" he asked.

"It is a voyage which I have long desired to take," I answered coolly, "though I never expected to enjoy it at my country's expense."

The Duke rang the bell.

"Consumption"

Three Doctors Attended Her. Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup Cured Her.

It has long been known that the balsamic odor of the newly cut pine tree heals and invigorates the lungs and consumptives improve and revive amid the perfume of the pines. Since but few can command the luxury of a visit to the pineries, it will be good news to many to know that the essential healing principle of the pine has been separated, and refined, and combined with other absorbent, expectorant and soothing medicines of recognized worth in the manufacture of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup.

Mrs. Charles McDermott, Bathurst, N.B., writes: "I thought I would write and let you know the benefit I have received through the use of your Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. Three years ago I had Consumption and had three doctors attending me, and they were very much alarmed about my condition. I was so weak and miserable I could not do my housework. While looking through your B.B.B. almanac I saw that Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup was good for weak lungs so I got a bottle and after taking ten bottles I was completely cured. At that time I weighed 138 pounds and now weigh 172, a gain of 37 pounds in three years. I now keep it in the house all the time and would not be without it for anything as I owe my life to it."

Baby Nearly Died with Itching Rash

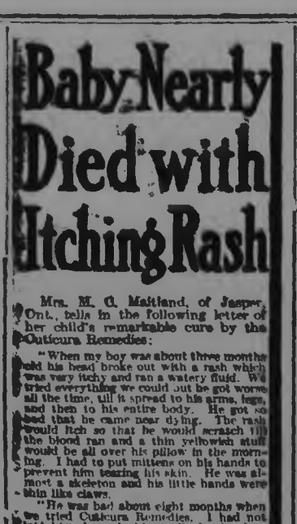
Mrs. M. C. Maitland, of Jasper, Ont., tells in the following letter of her child's remarkable cure by the Cuticura Remedies:

"When my boy was about three months old his head broke out with a rash which was very itchy and ran a watery fluid. We tried everything we could but he got worse all the time, till it spread to his arms, legs, and then to his entire body. He got so bad that he came near dying. The rash would itch so that he would scratch till the blood ran and a thin yellowish stuff would be all over his pillow in the morning. I had to put mittens on his hands to prevent him tearing his skin. He was almost a skeleton and his little hands were skin like claws.

"He was bad about eight months when we tried Cuticura Remedies. I had not laid him down in his cradle in the daytime for a long while. I washed him with Cuticura Soap and put on one application of Cuticura Ointment and he was so soothed that he could sleep. You don't know how glad I was he felt better. He took one box of Cuticura Ointment and pretty near one cake of Cuticura Soap to cure him. I think our boy would have died but for the Cuticura Remedies and I shall always remain a firm friend of them. He was cured more than twenty years ago and there has been no return of the trouble."

(Signed) Mrs. M. C. MAITLAND, Jasper, Ont.

No more convincing proof of the efficacy and economy of the Cuticura Remedies could be given. As in this instance a single cake of Cuticura Soap and box of Cuticura Ointment are often sufficient. Sold throughout the world. Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A. Send for free Cuticura Booklet on skin and scalp diseases.



THE FAMILY HEARTH

FRIENDSHIP

I have so much to thank you for
At which you may not even guess,
Although that does not matter, nor
Do I give thanks the less.
A happiness in little things.
The hope that bids my courage rise
And passes like a whirr of wings
Cleaving the sullen skies.
Because—ah, just that you are you
And promise you will be my friend,
I laugh at Time, and work anew
Henceforth, until the end.
My path is crossed in amber light,
The loneliness of soul is passed.
From now there comes no dreamless night,
My spirit is made fast.
We may be all the world apart.
Tossed far amidst that world's affairs:
Hiding your friendship in my heart
I know that someone cares
All this, my friend, you cannot know,
There is so much I dare not say.
My heart is far too full, and so—
I go upon my way.

SYBIL GRANT.

EMBROIDERY

The revival of tapestry as decoration brings to notice the fact that Halley's comet was pictured for the first time in the most famous tapestry of all. A part of this work is supposed to represent Harold receiving news of the landing of the conqueror and the disastrous portent of the comet which appeared in 1060.

The rest of the work sets forth the history of the Norman conquest. Strictly speaking, it is not tapestry at all, but embroidery, roughly wrought on coarse linen. It is generally supposed to have been the work of Queen Matilda, wife of William the Conqueror.

Whoever the fair needlewoman may have been, she had apparently but slender resources of material. Only six colours are used—green red, yellow, buff, and two blues. The tapestry stretches to 213 feet in length, though it is but 20 inches broad, as if intended for a frieze.

Lively little figures—there are no fewer than 630 of them—represent the heroes of the period, beginning with King Edward the Confessor. The battle scenes are particularly spirited. Mounted Norman warriors clad in chain mail attack the English, who are mostly on foot and armed with swords, axes, javelins and clubs.

To wear a cluster of flowers or a single blossom on a tailor-made coat, sew a little loop of heavy braid underneath the collar lapel, with the ends sewed together at the outer edge, just under the buttonhole. In this way flowers can be attached without sticking a pin into delicate cloth just where it will show most. It is a plan adopted by men also for their boutonnieres, and a useful one.

It is quite easy to renovate—or, rather, replace—an old parasol that has not been too elaborate. Simply stitch this stoutly on the old frame, by means of a sharp pen knife, being careful not to cut it. Then use it as a pattern for cutting out a new one—which may be of cretonne, of chints, of linen, of pongee, or of any other easily worked goods—and stitch this stoutly o nthe old frame. It might be a good idea to give a fresh coat of black enamel to the ribs while they are uncovered. And behold! A new parasol at a cost of practically nothing!

When a glove edge is torn or tipped buttonhole it with fine cotton thread of the same colour using a small-size needle. Then whip these buttonholed edges together. Even kid gloves may be mended in this way, so that they stand any amount of wear, as the cotton does not cut the glove.

An interesting variation on the lingerie hat was seen recently. It consisted of a dark grayish blue felt in cloche shape, completely covered with linen embroidery in English eyelet (what the French call broderie anglaise). The only trimming the hat possessed was two stiff bows of the eyelet, lined with panne velvet the colour of the hat.

When turning a hem or measuring a skirt to straighten it at the bottom one dressmaker saves herself time and nervous strain by marking the place she wants on the tape measure with a small paper clip—one of the kinds that "stay put." Then she does not have to search out her desired mark every time she puts a pin in the skirt, but feels automatically for a clip. In turning a three-inch hem, for instance, she will put the clip at three, and for all practical purposes have with her a three-inch tape measure.

One cup of sugar, one-half cup of butter, one-quarter cup of milk, one egg, two cups flour, one teaspoon cream of tartar, one-half teaspoon soda, one teaspoon vanilla. Mix in order given, cut into strips, roll in granulated sugar and bake in a quick oven.

OATMEAL MACAROONS

Stir together two and a half cups rolled oats, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, one-quarter teaspoonful salt. Beat two eggs, add one cup sugar and one tablespoonful melted butter. Combine the two mixtures. Drop on to baking sheets, about four inches apart, a small teaspoonful at a time and bake in quick oven.

RASPBERRY SHORT CAKE

Enough for six. Eight heaping tablespoons prepared flour, sifted with teaspoon of salt; two even tablespoons butter and one of lard, rubbed into the flour. Wet with enough ice water till the consistency to handle easily. Place on pastry board and pat, not roll, quite thin. Cut with biscuit cutter sixteen rounds. Place eight of these in baking pan, some small bits of butter, then another one on top of each, making an individual cake that will separate easily when baked. Bake in hot oven fifteen minutes. Filling—three cups raspberries mashed with half cup powdered sugar and the beaten whites of two eggs. Place between and on top of cakes. Serve with whipped cream.

BAKED LIVER

Wipe a whole liver and score several times to the depth of half-inch. Lay thin strips of salt pork, in the scores and add an onion, two carrots, a turnip, a potato and any other vegetable on hand; cut fine. Place them around the liver and sprinkle two tablespoonfuls of finely cut pork over the vegetables. Dust all well with salt and pepper. Cover the liver with water at first, letting it boil away. Serve the vegetables on the patter with the liver.

CANNED BEANS

Prepare the beans as for cooking pack in glass jars; fill the jars with cold water; let them stand for two hours, then fill the cans to overflowing with cold water and seal. Place strips of wood in a boiler, set the cans to dry, dip the lid in melted paraffin and bring to the boil. Boil for three hours. Let the cans get cold before removing them from the water. Wipe each can dry, dip the lid in melted paraffin and put in a cool dark place.

POOR MAN'S CAKE

One cup of sugar; one cup of water; one cup of raisins; half-cup of lard; one teaspoonful of cinnamon; half-teaspoonful of cloves. Boil until the raisins swell. When cool add a pinch of salt, two and a half cups of flour and one and a half teaspoonfuls of soda. Bake threequarters of an hour.

RED CURRANT JELLY

Wash but do not stem the currants. Put, without water, into the inner vessel of a double boiler and cook until soft and broken. Take from the fire and squeeze through a jelly bag. Measure the juice and to every pint of it allow a pound of granulated sugar. Put the juice into the preserving kettle over the fire. Set the sugar in shallow pans in the oven to heat, stirring occasionally that it may not scorch. Boil the juice for twenty minutes, skimming off the scum that rises to the surface. At the end of twenty minutes add the heated sugar, stir until it is all dissolved, bring the jelly to the boil and take at once from the fire. Pour into glasses.

GRAPE JUICE

Remove the stems from twelve quarts of grapes, wash the fruit, drain it and put into a preserving kettle adding two quarts of cold water. Bring slowly to the boil and strain. Return the juice to the fire, bring again to the boil, take from the fire, turn into bottles and seal immediately.

You Can See How It Heals

No Question or Doubt as to the healing power of

Dr. Chase's Ointment

To people who have used internal treatment in an effort to cure eczema it is almost beyond belief what benefit can be obtained by a few applications of this soothing, healing ointment.

It is seldom that the cause of eczema can be determined, but one thing is certain, the itching must be stoped and the sores healed up.

These results are secured by the use of Dr. A. W. Chase's Ointment. The itching is relieved almost instantly, and you will be surprised at the healing which will take place overnight.

A little patience and persistent treatment with Dr. Chase's Ointment will give you more practical and definite results than a whole lot of dosing with internal medicines. You can see how the Ointment heals. The other is guesswork.

Mr. Geo. Peterson, South Bay, Ont., writes: "I wish to communicate to you the great benefit I received from using Dr. W. Chase's Ointment. For years I suffered with a great skin disease on my head, a sort of eczema. I tried four doctors, giving each a fair trial; but got no better. In fact, the disease spread to my left arm.

"I saw Dr. Chase's Ointment advertised and began using it. Persistent use of this treatment has entirely cured me, and I give you a statement of my case with pleasure, as I hope thereby to induce some other sufferer to try the same Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Because this ointment has made its world-wide reputation by curing the most severe and long-standing cases of eczema and piles is no reason why you should overlook its scores of uses in the relief of itching and irritation of the skin.

ON LOVER'S GRAVE

Tragedy of Dancing Girl's Passion for Dead Aviator

Indirectly aviation has claimed another victim in the person of a young Montmartre dancing girl who was devotedly attached to the 22-year-old aviator Edmond Poillot, killed at Chartres some days ago. His death came as a dreadful blow to the girl, and her grief was such that she decided to put an end to her life. She carried out her intention in dramatic style, shooting herself on the grave of Poillot in the cemetery of Montmorire. When she heard of her sweetheart's death she hurried off to Chartres, and the scene when she was taken to see the dead aviator in his coffin was touching in the extreme. She was taken back to Paris, where she bought a wreath of roses. She followed the hearse to the cemetery on the day of burial, and was in a terrible state during the night. The next afternoon she left her home, walked to the cemetery, knelt down on her dead lover's grave, and, placing a revolver against her heart, pulled the trigger. She was found a few seconds later quite dead, her head lying on the wreath of roses, already, says the Leader, beginning to fade.

MINTO, A SPORTSMAN

Few Outdoor Diversions in Which He Does Not Excel

Lord Minto is probably the finest all-round sportsman in the peerage. As a young man at Cambridge he was so devoted to sport that he took his degree in a riding costume covered by an academic gown. Immediately after the ceremony he leaped into a saddle and galloped off to the racecourse, where he arrived just in time to win the University Steeplechase. Ever since then his success as a sportsman has been remarkable. Indeed, there are few outdoor diversions in which he does not excel, for he is a fine shot, a fearless rider, a good oarsman, and a keen angler. As a soldier Lord Minto has been through many rousing scenes. He fought with the Turkish Army in 1877, he was with Lord Roberts in Afghanistan two years later, and served as Chief of Staff to General Middleton against Riel in the Canadian Rebellion of 1885. Added to this, he helped to extinguish burning Paris after the Commune, and was implicated with the Carlists on the Spanish frontier. Probably the most extraordinary event in Lord Minto's varied and interesting life, however, was the breaking of his neck and recovering after having been completely given up by the doctors. Lady Minto was a daughter of the late General Charles Grey, who was a favorite Private Secretary to Queen Victoria. Since her marriage Lady Minto has shared in a good many of her husband's adventures. Once she journeyed with him from Ottawa to Montreal, a distance of over 100 miles, in Canadian canoes, and camped out at night. On another occasion she caused a sensation by riding on the cowcatcher of a locomotive in far-away Klondike.

Lots of people are opposed to the theatre on religious grounds—because it costs too much.

10 Good Reasons why the 'FORD' is a Good Buy

- Because it will travel from 25 to 35 miles on one gallon of gasoline
- Because it is built of venadium steel, the best material that money can buy
- Because it has more power per pound of load than any car built
- Because it will climb any hill on high gear that any other car will, and many hills that many of them cannot climb.
- Because it has larger tires and cubic inches of air space in them per pound of load than any other car.
- Because it will travel more miles on one set of tires than any other car.
- Because it has an automatic cooling and an automatic oiling system, doing away with all gears and pumps for this purpose, thus ensuring simplicity and eliminating many troubles.
- Because the whole car is the simplest that brains can build
- Because it is built by a man who has never designed a failure, therefore you have no chances to take.
- Because Henry Ford has capital enough to buy and pay spot cash (and he does it) for enough material to build 25000 cars at one time (one year's output) and thus save one third the cost.

For these reasons he can give you a 5 Passenger Touring Car, complete, for $975.00

Life Insurance

Many a father is going to mortgage the house in town or the farm in the country this Fall that the son may go to college. Possibly that "rainy day" fund is going to be drawn upon for this purpose. I have enough faith in Canadian youth to believe in such investments. The son intends to pay back to his father every cent just as soon as he gets into business for himself. With but an exception now and then, he will—If He Lives. It is the latter point I want to emphasize. Life is not a certainty. A glance at any college catalogue will show the asterisk in the list of students and the word "deceased" at the bottom of the page. Frequently there is added to the loss of the son, the Loss of the Cost of His Education. The latter may mean the loss of the home. One of the legitimate uses of life insurance, it seems to me, is to take care of just such cases. The cost of life insurance for the son is very slight, because he is young and a good risk. It adds but little to the financial burden. In return it gives full protection to the parent, and in later years—after college debts are paid—it safeguards the home which the son sets up for himself. No son who can get insurance has the right to mortgage his father's or his mother's future happiness when there is such a good way to avoid it. One word more, young man. Be sure that your insurance is in a well established, responsible company.

Some one has said, "The true value of a life assurance policy must be gauged by the security of the protection given; if it proves to be a good investment, all the better; when both are shown, there is nothing on earth to equal it."

The security of the protection afforded by the SUN LIFE OF CANADA needs no comment, and the profits paid—let the actual results tell their own forceful story.

KINGS AND QUEENS LIVING IN EXILE

Old England Offers a Pleasant Refuge For Several Despised Monarchs

King Manuel has now joined the pathetic circle of "kings in exile," and has availed himself of England's traditional hospitality.

Manuel has taken up his residence at Norton, near Evesham, the seat of his Orleans relations, a residence which which by its seclusion and surroundings is ideally suited to console the early days of the exile.

The days when an Emperor and Empress of France, a Queen of Spain, and a King of Hanover were in exile at the same time are now over. The rulers in exile of to-day are Oriental despots, the Shah of Persia, a pensioner of Russia, and Abdul Hamid not really in exile, but hidden behind the walls of the Villa Allatina, in Salonica. These, with the widow of the ex-King Milan and the aged ex-Empress Eugenie, complete the list. And yet the lives of the majority of royal and princely exiles seem cast in pleasant places. Endowed as most of them are with great wealth, they enjoy the honors and pleasures of royalty without the responsibilities. Even when an opportunity occurs of returning to their former position they generally refuse. A notable instance is the Grand Duke Michael of Russia, who, going to England owing to royal displeasure, has now settled down to the life of a great English nobleman, not even despising the office of mayor, and though the gates of Russia are again open to him, sensibly prefers his adopted home.

In older times Twickenham was a refuge for dispossessed Royalties, and it was here that Louis Philippe and the Prince de Joinville came after the Revolution of 1848 had driven them from France. Orleans House—Louis Philippe's Twickenham home is now "to let." By the park gates there is a public-house known as the "Crown. Many years ago a former landlord of this hostelry saluted the ex-King of the French as he was walking through the streets of Twickenham. "What were you when I lived here?" asked Louis Philippe. "Please your Royal Highness," replied the man, "I kept the Crown." "Did you?" said the ex-King. "Well, you were lucky; you did what I was unable to do!"

EFFIGY OF A KNIGHT

Strange Discoveries in the Unearthing of an Abbey

London, Oct. 8.—Recent excavations at Abbey Wood, near Plumstead, on the site of Lesnes Abbey, have revealed the existence of a much more important building than was ever anticipated. Since Cardinal Wolsey destroyed the Abbey in 1525 there has been nothing to see beyond a part of the cloister wall and some rough farm walls built from the rubbish of the monastery. The ruins of the abbey which have now been unearthed in the orchard attached to Abbey Farm show a building more than 250 feet long and about 50 feet across the transcepts. In the centre of the cross there stood a square tower and part of the columns supporting this tower are still to be seen. A plan has been prepared of the excavations, which shows the Abbey Church, including the Lady Chapel and some smaller chapels, the Chapter House, Frater cloisters, and indications of other buildings. Besides some fine glazed and encaustic tiles, pieces of carved stone and stained glass, there has been found the stone effigy of a knight. This is decidedly the most interesting thing ever discovered, and rumor says an offer of a large sum of money has been refused from a gentleman who wished to buy it. The carving on the effigy is very finely done, and the stone has been colored with pigments that are still sufficiently bright and fresh to make the coat of arms on the shield quite distinct. The effigy is that of De Luci of Newington (Kent), who was a descendant of the founder. It doubtless came from a tomb, for it was found in a grave that had been destroyed in the Lady Chapel. Its date, as proved by the fashion of his dress and armor, is the early part of the fourteenth century. That a large abbey, one of the most important in Kent, belonging to the Augustin Order, should have existed for 350 years, and then been destroyed and its site lost in the next 400 years, is sufficiently remarkable to cause surprise; yet such is the case, for the only known plan is that of a small building drawn in the eighteenth century, and it is evidently a product of the imagination which passed for fact, until the digging in the early part of this year brought to light the ruins of a large group of buildings of a size and workmanship totally unsuspected.

KILLED ON THE SPOT

The "Mahdi" and His Three Sons Refused to Surrender

London, Oct. 8.—Particulars of the latest "Mahdi" incident, reported several days ago from the province of Berber, have now been received. A Berber, have now been received. A his title "Sherif," claims to be a descendant of the Prophet, and his three sons, proclaimed themselves mahdis in the village of Kittat Lebab, and were disposed to resist the Sudan authorities. The Governor of Dmaer was advised by telephone and the case was submitted to the Governor of Berber, who immediately despatched the sub-Governor of Dmaer and a small force of soldiers under the command of Lieutenant Hassan Sharara to induce the false mahdis to surrender quietly. On arriving at Kittat Lebab, the kadi of Omdurman was charged to approach the sherif and his sons and induce them to give up their wild ideas. The efforts of the kadi, however, were unsuccessful, and the sheikh of the district was deputed to use his influence with the fanatical men. By this time they had become somewhat excited, and the sherif, drawing his lance, killed the sheikh on the spot. Whereupon a skirmish ensued, two of the dead sheikh's companions being wounded in the fray. With the object of frightening the unruly men, the officer in command fired several shots in the air, but his was without avail, and the "mahdi" and his three sons threw themselves upon the soldiers, and fire consequently had to be opened on them. The sherif was wounded and one of his sons killed, while the two other sons received slight injuries. One soldier was killed in the melee, another seriously wounded, and a sub-lieutenant was slightly hurt. The affair was terminated by the arrest of the sherif and his two remaining sons.

ALMOST ANYTHING TO PLEASE

An influential woman member of a fashionable church in Philadelphia had gone to her pastor with the complaint that she was greatly disturbed by one of her neighbors.

"Why," said she, "that man in the pew behind ours destroys all my devotional feelings when he tries to sing. Couldn't you ask him to change his pew?"

The pastor reflected. "Well," said he, at last, "I naturally feel a little delicacy on that score, especially as I should have to give a reason. But I tell you what I might do—I might ask him to join the choir."

PLATINIZED GLASS.

It Produces an Odd and a Tricky Kind of Mirror.

Platinized glass consists of a piece of glass coated with an exceedingly thin layer of a liquid charged with platinum and then raised to a red heat. The platinum becomes united to the glass in such a way as to form an odd kind of mirror.

The glass has not really lost its transparency, and yet if one places it against a wall and looks at it he sees an image as in an ordinary looking glass—but when light is allowed to come through the glass from the other side as when it is placed in a window, it appears perfectly transparent, like ordinary glass.

By constructing a window of platinized glass one could stand close behind the panes in an unilluminated room and behold clearly everything going on outside, while passersby looking at the window would behold only a fine mirror or set of mirrors in which their own figures would be reflected while the person inside remained invisible.

In France various tricks have been contrived with the aid of this glass. In one a person seeing what appears to be an ordinary mirror approaches it to gaze upon himself. A sudden change in the mechanism sends light through the glass from the back, whereupon it instantly becomes transparent, and the startled spectator finds himself confronted by some grotesque figure that had been hidden behind the glass.—Harper's Weekly.

ORIGIN OF LLOYD'S.

Humble Beginning of Europe's Great Maritime Agency.

Two centuries ago a man who had a cargo to send to the Mediterranean contrived to get rid of some of the risk by inducing a friend to take an interest with him. It was necessary to write out a statement of contract to which the guarantors subscribed. This was the first underwriting. These two men happened to be frequenters of Lloyd's coffee house in London, which was a favorite place for the merchants of the town to resort to, to do business or to gossip.

Others immediately saw the advantage of the scheme which their colleagues had devised, and on the next voyage the risk was parceled out among a larger number of the patrons of the coffee house.

Out of this small beginning has grown the great European maritime agency, still bearing the name of the humble coffee house proprietor, and which not only writes risks on vessels, but rates them and publishes their arrivals at every port the world over, no matter how small or how remote [illegible] of the American

Peerless Peninsular

Little Conveniences That Mean Much To The Housewife

A Lady said, not long ago to one of our dealers, that "Peerless Peninsular" Ranges could not have been more conveniently planned if they had been designed by the women who use them.

This was a high compliment, but only indicative of the years of effort to meet all points of convenience that have culminated in the production of our "Peerless" Ranges.

The front Key Plate of the range is fitted with a handle by which it can be raised for broiling and toasting.

The Back of the Oven is Aluminized to reflect light into the usual dark corners.

The Clean-out Door under the oven is where it can be reached without the usual struggle.

The Oven Door drops down level with the oven floor and forms a shelf for basting or inspection of cakes, pies, etc.

The Oven Damper is adjustable—not simply open or shut, but slides so that the heat can be regulated to a degree.

The Oven Thermometer, Peninsular Grate Bars and Low Closet for holding flat irons, pots, pans, etc., are only a few of the other "little things" that you should see before buying your new range. When you do see them, you will buy a "Peerless".

"Harmony Peninsular" is similar in essentials but more elaborately decorated.

"Constant Peninsular" is different from the others mainly in plainer design and finish.

"Adanac Peninsular" is plain in design with swing door for those who prefer it.

The Logans Of Whyanella Creek

A Short Story

If I wanted to know the day of the month, or how many "I's" there are in parallel, I should never ask Howard Kerr. But, if I wanted to know what had become of any man who had dropped out of the world known to most of us; what sea-serpents and bunyips really look like; whether hypnotism is practised in the West African oil-rivers; how it feels to be swimming alone in the open sea south of Cape Horn, or what was the true story of anything that ever happened in the Bush; then, if he were within a few day's journey of me, I think I should ask Howard Kerr.

Kerr and I were locked out of the old "Estrepa" in Lisbon, during the small hours of a certain summer's morning, and we sat down together in the little garden at the end of Rua d'Aura, and Kerr told me about Mark Riddell and the Logans.

It appears that Mark Riddell was engaged in London by the agents of the company which started the "Sydney Times," to come out to Australia as editor of that paper. When Riddell was in the Suez, the company failed, and by the time he arrived in New South Wales, the "Times" had stopped issue.

Then came to him a desire to make a living out of the soil. The fecundity of the South fascinated him, and it was delightful to hear him orate on the text of "Nature's neglected gifts to humanity." Habitually reserved, and inclined to take a cynical view of things, he bodied half timidly, under the influence of his early courting of Nature, and to a friendly listener, would dilate in language redolent of fruit and flowers, rather than of corn and oil, on his mistress' wealth of beauty.

He journeyed to the north, and the luxuriant greenness of the great Clarence and Stephens watersheds, laid hold upon the man. The juicy vines that tangle in and out the stately timber of the North, seemed to have twined their clinging tendrils round his heart and the tall grass to have checked his unwilling feet, when he turned his face towards towns and civilisation. But that to which he bared his head with the admiration of a devotee, was the wattle.

The waving, golden, fragrance-bearing wattle, with its sensuous rustle in afternoon sunlight, and its glove-fitting bark, which peels in dripping slices, like the skin of a mango: the wattle was the finishing touch to his fanaticism, of making a living out of the Bush, generally, and in particular, by the cultivation of wattle-bark for the use of tanners.

It was part of his phase that he should regard the Logans of Whyanella Creek, as Arcadians of pre-historic honesty of purpose, a draccept their overtures, as being inspired by the guileless generosity of simple children of the soil. He lodged at their slab and weather-board homestead, took up his tract of land through old Vincent Logan, bought his horses from the married son and his stores through the old woman; and he employed the three single sons, on Sydney wages, to build his house, and help him with the wattles. One may take up: "Church and School land," in that locality, on a twenty-one years lease, and at about the rental one would expect to pay for a bathing-machine. It was a corner of old Logan's run that Riddell rented, but he got it for a child on the soil, considerably more for this untrodden, uncheated patch of bush, than Logan paid the Government for the entire Whyanella run.

For years the Logans had jogged comfortably through life doing a little cattle-dumping, horse-breeding, and timber getting, and an enormous amount of real loafing. Now they rested on their oars, and prepared to end their days comfortably, on the little income which, with care, could be extracted from the supply of Riddell's stores, the rent of his pretty, but practically useless patch of their land, his wages, and incidental profits to be made from horse deals, and other friendly offices.

Mark Riddell did not see Fanny Logan's eldest daughter, when he first arrived at Whyanella Creek. Mrs. Logan said her daughter was away in the paddock, across the creek, and therefore, of course, Fanny could not have been putting on her best frocks, in the little room built out by the side of the kitchen. In any case, when at last, Fanny did step across the little verandah, into the room where there were almanacs and antimacassars, then Riddell decided that Miss Logan's daughter was a Bush beauty, well worthy of the Arcadian surroundings in which she lived. She really was beautiful in a sense, this twenty year old brunette, born in the Bush of Bush parents. Her eyes were so blue, her lips so full, and crimson, and the curves of her figure, so rich and provocative. There was the grace of a panther in her movements, and the hot sunshine of Australian summers, running swiftly through all her veins, flooded her rounded cheek and sloping neck, when she shook hands with Mark Riddell. Anyone would have admired her beauty, and to the Englishman, in the full fanaticism of the phase through which he was passing, Fanny Logan seemed the physical embodiment of all the throbbing life of that green, and creeper-tangled country. So he bowed to her with even more enthusiasm than he had bared his head to the wattles.

On that first evening at Whyanella Creek, Riddell walked down to the slip-rails of the home-paddock, to smoke his pipe and talk to old Logan. As the two men stood there, the Englishman was startled by the sound of a horse's feet, thundering down the little wooded hillside beyond the fence. Then a pony, ridden by a young girl whose hair was flying loose in the cool breeze came galloping across the little open patch of green, and, clearing the three-rail fence with hardly a break in its stride, scattered a little cloud of leaves and broken twigs over Riddell, as its rider, with a final shout of childish laughter, reined in sharply, and sprang to the ground near the two men. This was Norah, aged thirteen, and Logan's youngest child.

At six years of age oNrah had ridden almost every horse on the run, and, up till within a year of the evening on which Riddell first saw her, she had ridden more often with out a saddle than with one, and had sat her horse like a boy.

A picture of liberty, was this child, as she stood before Riddell, one half bared, brown arm through the bridle of her horse, her great, black eyes flashing, the fearless timidity of childhood, and the crumpled, silver curls of bark peel clinging to her wind tossed hair, giving evidence of the recklessness of her gallop through the apple-tree scrub, outside the paddock. Then the picture vanished. Norah had taken one comprehensive look at stranger, and, with an abashed murmur of "I didn't know!" had sprung upon her pony again and galloped off to the homestead.

Very soon after this, Mark Riddell took up his patch of the run; but continued to live at the Logan's homestead whilst, he, with old Logan's three unmarried sons, worked at his little slab house, just as men wrecked on a desert island might work at something they had no particular desire to complete, but yet meant to carry out in strict accordance with their amateur theories, as to what such work should be. At intervels, the three Australians would sit down and fill their pipes, whilst Riddell discoursed in glowing language of the richness of Nature's gifts to dwellers in the country round about Whyanella. They smoked, as he raved of the neglected wealth of the place, and nodded acquiescence, as he told them how, later on, he would establish schools of agriculture, and places for social intercourse.

He insisted on both th ntamdrrf

He insisted that every inch of the land, was suited to wine-growing, and, to clinch his argument, he sent down to Mattel's vineyard on the Stephens River, and ordered casks of red wine, which accordingly became the staple beverage of the Logan household, vice tea condemned on hygienic grounds, by Riddell's authority.

Through all these days, little Norah with her wild look of freedom, and her streaming blue-black hair, lay on the grass, or sat on logs, near the half-built slab house, her chin resting on her little brown hands, and her great eyes following Riddell's every movement. That steady gaze of hers, was purely untamed childhood of the Bush; but when she spoke to him it was wonderful to note the sore infection in her voice, the tender core of which became all a woman's. Then one of her brothers would speak; and Norah would throw her head back like a wild colt, sniffing a presence from another world. Her answer would be flu ngout in her own wild, child's way, startling Riddell, like a sudden gust of wind from the bottom of some rocky gully, in which dead leaves are whirled about, and grey wallabies sit, like figures hewn but of granite.

In the evenings, old Logan and his sons would hover, for a while, in deferential half-companionship, about the verandah, where the Englishman sat smoking. Then Fanny, in her best attire, would sit down with her work in her lap, inside the open window behind Riddell; and the men-folk would drift away into the shadows that surrounded the kitchen and the built-out part of the house. She became the emblem of human beauty in the Englishman's pleasant Nature-worship. A sentence in Fanny's melodious voice was enough to show Riddell, in the dim half-lights of the evenings in the bush, that her brother Larry required a new saddle, or that old Logan wanted a little help in connection with the purchase of a team of bullocks. A breath from her crimson lips, or a movement of the smoothly curving arm in the window sill, was amply sufficient to prove to the Englishman, as he sat drinking in the night's wattle-scented fragrances, that it would be positively lethal on his part not to supply at once the needs of these children of the forest. So he supplied them.

After bidding Fanny good night on one of these evenings, Riddell stood hesitating a moment at the door of his room, and listening to a curious series of sounds that seemed to come from the outhouse by the kitchen, on the other side of the big lemon-tree. Riddell shivered, because the idea of physical pain, was, to him horrible, and these sounds that he heard, resembled, so it seemed to him, those that would be made by a whipthong, or leathern strap, in falling heavily on some creature's body.

The Englishman turned, and took two steps across the dark room, pausing again, as he heard a little human moan. Then, as he walked toward the out-house, he heard in old Logan's gruff voice, the muttered words: "And you'll tell him just what I tell you to, and nothing else—and that'll teach you to; you what? Take——"

Then the sounds ceased, as Riddell's steps approached the outhouse, and when he pushed open the crazy door of the place, old Logan was saying: "Well, Norah child, if that oil o' cloves won't ease your tooth ache, I don't know what will! Poor child! You'd better go to your mother; and what, Mr. Riddell? Sure, I thought you were in bed, and as—Here's the child raving with toothache. There, go to you mother, Norah, and see what she can do for you!"

And the old Irishman dropped something on the floor behind him, as Norah walked out past the Englishman, her little brown hands clenched and her black eyes blazing from between long, wet lashes, which glistened in the moonlight.

It was shortly after the evening of Mark Riddell's queer fancy about some animal being thrashed, that his firsto parcel of wattle-bark was sent to market by river-punt. The success of this first achievement was somewhat marred by the fact, that whilst the price obtained for the tons of wattle-bark, was eighty pounds Riddell's accounts showed that its placing upon the market in a finished state, had cost justf twelve pounds ten shillings per ton. As old Logan pointed out, however, it was "Fine Bark," and "sold as easy as shelling peas." Possibly this reflection, and one or two others connected with Vincent Logan's oldest daughter, were what caused Riddell to retain still much of his enthusiasm, in the face of one or two warnings from disinterested sources, and the half-open ridicule of the settlers round about Whyanella.

Sometimes he wondered idly what might be the meaning of little Norah's curious way of following him about, and her strange looks. He came to the conclusion that this child was a beautiful, unaccountable product of the Bush; and he forgot her looks, as he forgot most other things when he sat listening, in the dreamy evenings, to the murmur of her older sister's voice.

Coming unexpectedly to the Logan's homestead one afternoon, Riddell heard a sound o flow moaning in the little out-house behind the kitchen. He tried the door, but found it locked. And when, that evening, he asked Fanny who had made that moaning noise, she told him that her little sister had violent toothaches, and sometimes would lock herself up in the outhouse, and refuse to be comforted. On the following day he spoke sympathetically to the child about this. She stared at him, with big tears standing in her black eyes, and laughed in her wild way, as she said: "Yes! Toothache's dreadful!"

Then came a day of disaster for the Logan family. It was strange that so much should have happened on one day. During the month that preceded it, Riddell had had one or two uncomfortable reminders that his capital was running short. But, the bursting of the thunder-cloud was reserved for this one day. In the early morning he rode into the little post town of Marulah, and called for his letters. From one of these letters he learned that he had been paying double the rent of the Whole Whyanella run, for the use of one corner of it. In another, the commercial homelessness of his position, was candidly dwelt upon by a Sydney friend, and after he had read this, he was approached on the subject of his relations with the Logans, by the only store-keeper of Marulah, and by the one well-to-do farmer of the district.

In five minutes the Englishman's feet pre-flushed in the beginning of an angry awakening to the facts. At the end of an hour he rode away from the little post office, sick with disgust and contemptuous anger, after hearing the truth on one or two little transactions with the Logan family, which, even in the early days of his fanaticism had rather worried him. This then, was the end of his little phase of Nature-ship—his life on the soil, and he knew it. What gave the situation its real sting, however, was his sudden recognition of the crude manner in which the whole family, taking advantage of his enthusiasm, had swindled him in all the details of his connection with them.

He thought over the past few months of his life, as he rode out to Whyanella: and realised that, with the single exception of Norah, every member of the family had, in some way partaken of the feast. "And I suppose the very child, with her black hair and savage eyes, would have robbed me if she could," he muttered; as the roof of Logan's homestead came into view, on the far side of the little creek.

As he walked his horse quietly across the Whyanella home-paddock, the Englishman heard one or two sobbing cries of pain issuing from the kitchen, behind the lemon tree. "That child ought to have all her teeth taken out," said Riddell to himself as he recognized Norah's voice. As he drew nearer to the house he heard the child scream: "I won't! I won't and I'll tell him about the horses of you." Then the sharp, half hysterical notes died away into a muffled sound, and when Riddell dismounted outside the kitchen door, he saw no sign of little Norah.

Old Logan and his wife were both standing in the dark, old kitchen, the windows of which were like swing doors hung on leathern hinges.

Fanny, not expecting the Englishman's return at this early hour, was unprepared to meet him, and Riddell caught a flying glimpse of a not very pleasing dishabille, as the girl whisked herself into the little room opening out of the kitchen, and slammed its creaking door.

Standing there, in the sunlight which fell in quivering patches on the ground below the lemon tree, Mark Riddell told old Logan and his wife of all he had learned that morning. He was at pains to show them that their ends would have been better served, had they not hurried the collapse of his little attempt to make a living out of the soil. The Irishman was abashed, but his wife waxed insolent, to cover her lord and master's shame.

They without a word to any other membe of the family, Riddell walked across the paddock to his own still uncompleted slab house, and, gathering together a few personal odds and ends to carry in his saddle-bag, he rode away from Whanella, to arrange in Marulah, for the removal of his horse and other effects. And as he walked his horse through the apple tree scrub, beyond the slip rails, he met Norah; her white face tear-stained, and her little body quivering with pain. He asked her what had caused the swollen weal he saw on one of her brown arms, and Norah said she had burned it.

"Poor child!" he muttered; thinking of the pain of her tothaches. Then he said: "Good-bye, little girl," in a tone made tender by the sight of the child's tear-stained face, and rode slowly on, never mentioning that he would not return that night, or ever. Norah stood there in the apple-tree scrub, gazing after him, with a hungry look in her wild eyes.

After his return to civilization, Mark Riddell remained quietly in Sydney; making his living comfortably enough, as a moderately successful journalist. He resumed his old reserved ways, and his views of life, being only by the greyness of cynicism, lacked colour.

Just four years after the finish of his Bush life, Riddell was sent up North to write descriptive articles for the "Weekly Mail." He reached the town of Maitland at three o'clock one autumn afternoon, when the farmers were praying for the break up of a five months drought, and, immediately after his arrival, he hired a horse to ride out to the show ground beyond East Maitland. As he rode Riddell gazed across the brown and scorched up meadow land, to where the great bush of of the Clarence river watershed loomed, dark and gray-looking against the glaring sky. He had not been in the Bush for four years. And for three years, he had not thought of the curious little phase in his life during which he had lived in a slab-house.

"Thirty—no thirty-five miles, over there is Whyanella Creek," he muttered, as he rode along the dusty road; "I wonder if the slab-house is still there! The vines I planted must have grown, and—H'm! No she was part of the fraud. But the child—I wonder if she still has those awful pains! She is almost a woman now—quite! I wonder if I—what nonsense! But she was not part of the fraud; and, I'm not sure that it was toothache. It's rather absurd! What would the 'Weekly Mail' say?"

As he approached the cross roads, near the Show Ground; Riddell pulled his horse into a walk, and let the reins fall on the animal's neck. The horse lowered its head, and with a lazy indifference chose the road turning northward fom the Show Ground. Ten minutes afterwards Mark Riddell was ridin gat a smart canter aleng the main northern road, which runs through the watershed of the Clarence River.

At nine o'clock that evening, the Logan family had, with two exceptions, retired for the night. Old Vincent Logan sat smoking by the side of a dying fire in the kitchen, and Norah Logan was leaning idly over the slip-rails of the home-paddock, listening to the croaking of a big bull frog, on the bank of the little creek. She was in her eighteenth year then, and such a beauty as one rarely sees, in or out of the Bush. As she stood there, dreaming and wondering, she heard a horse's feet crushing the dead twigs and fallen leaves, in the appletree scrub. Then a man rode across the clear patch, and up to the slip-rails.

"Oh! Oh! He's come Lack-" Norah spoke in the hushed whisper of the confessional, but the very air she breathed quivered its answer to the emotion in her voice.

"Norah! Is this you? Child, you are a beautiful woman!"

Oh, no! But—but, why did you go away, and not tell me? I thought they would have killed me on that day, because I would not.

Oh, Norah! What a brute I was! But I had not dreamed of it then. I have only half dreamed of it now. Norah, forgive me!"

The moon sank behind a dark bank of cloud while they stood there, the three rail fence between them; and old Vincent Logan, sitting in the slab-walled kitchen, knocked the ashes out of his pipe upon the hearth, and went to bed. And when the old man awoke at six o'clock next morning, he was obliged to ask his wife to make his early cup of tea, for there was no Norah in the homestead by Whyanella Creek. It was strange, too, because, none of the horses were missing, and the old side-saddle still hung in the outhouse behind the kitchen.

The horse from Maitland had carried a double burden through the Bush the night before; because Mark Riddell had told beautiful, black-eyed Norah, that she must take away no single thing, not even a recollection from the run by Whyanella Creek.

It was very nearly daylight, and the market women were walking past with huge baskets on their heads, when Howard Kerr rose from my side in the garden at the end of Rua d'Aura. He shivered as we turned to walk back to our hotel, for the morning air was fresh.

And what became of them, Kerr?" I asked, just as we reached the door of the Europa.

"Ah! Riddell had left Sydney, when you first went out," replied Kerr. His uncle, or somebody died, and they live in Ireland now. Somewhere in the south, I believe. I must send his wife a few wattle leaves one of these days, to remind her of the Clarence River Bush."

Then Kerr and I went up to bed.

WINE-BIBBING RAT

A Notable Recent Addition to the London Zoo

Some notable additions have recently been made to the London Zoo, mainly in the shape of new birds. Among these are four kea parrots.

The kea, or Nestor notabilis, which is found in New Zealand, is a carnivorous bird. It perches on the back of a sheep, and fixing its claws into the wool, probes deeply into the flesh with its powerful beak. The kea is rarer than it used to be, owing to a price being put on its head by the Government.

Another recent acquisition is the blue-cheeked barbet. The note of the barbet resembles the sound of striking metal. Thence the bird has gained the name of the coppersmith, or the tinker-bird.

Among the new mammals there stands out conspicuously the Great Galago. This odd little creature has been nicknamed by the Portuguese the "Rat of the Cocoanut Palm." One great authority, Sir John Kirk, has asserted that it is incapable of resisting the fascinations of palm wine, and will brave captivity for the sake of indulging in its favorite drink.

ITALIAN LOVE TRAGEDY

A Husband Shoots His Wife and Her Lover

An amazingly tragic story comes from Italy. One of the wealthiest citizens of Leghorn, suspicious of his wife's fidelity, pretended to be going away on a visit to Florence, and meanwhile watched events from a house which he had hired opposite to his own. He saw a friend of his enter about midnight, and on crossing to his own house, discovered the former in his wife's boudoir. He immediately shot the man, and then, at her own request, inflicted the same penalty on his wife. On explaining the cause of the disturbance to a mob which had gathered in the street below he was loudly cheered.

CENTURY OF PEACE

British, Canadian and American Publicists and Educators Contribute Suggestions to American Peace Society—Arbitration Treaty and Removal of Customs Houses on Frontier Are Mentioned.

Boston, Nov. 26.—The American Peace Society gave to the press yesterday a collection of suggestions received by it from publicists and educators in Great Britain and Canada and the United States in regard to the methods of celebrating the anniversary of the hundred years of peace since the war of 1812.

John W. Forbes, formerly United States Secretary of State, and Prof. John Bassett Moore of Columbia University, propose that the celebration be marked by a treaty of unlimited arbitration between the United States and Great Britain.

Sir Edward Fry, chairman of the British delegation to the second Hague conference, recommends that the precedent of disarmament on the great lakes should be extended as well as commemorated.

Lord Courtney of Penwith, president of the International Peace Congress at London, 1908, advises that the historic agreement for disarmament on the lakes be followed by the removal of customs houses along the American-Canadian border to reduce the cost of living, and do away with the last pretext of guardships and causes for international conflict.

George N. Morang, publisher, of Toronto, advises Canadians and Americans to study each other's history and institutions, as a means of promoting a better understanding among themselves.

Prof. J. C. Carter Troop of the University of Chicago suggests the publication of a centennial edition of Canadian authors and the selection by the heads of leading Canadian universities of orators for the celebration.

R. L. Borden, leader of the Conservative party in Canada, favors setting apart a day of thanksgiving, with the ringing of bells and the observance of the anniversary in the churches of the Dominion and the Republic. Mr. Borden also believes in erecting a permanent memorial in each country.

Approval of the celebration, but without suggestions as to its program, is given by Major J. A. Chisholm of Halifax, Dr. John Forrest, president of Dalhousie University, Halifax; Chief Justice Charles T. Townsend, Judge J. W. Longley of Nova Scotia, and United States Senator Elihu Root. Judge Longley observes that all traces of ill-will and prejudice are disappearing between Canada and the United States and rejoice in their growing friendship.

D. Russell Jack, secretary of the New Brunswick Loyalists Society, St. John, N.B., welcomes the celebration as a means of unifying the English-speaking race.

The Guy Got Fresh.

Chicago, Nov. 26.—Jauntily declaring "the guy got fresh, so we plugged him," two 19-year-old boys lounged into a police cell here yesterday and between puffs of their cigarettes detailed to the police who captured them a story of murder and robbery unequaled in Chicago since the days of the notorious "car barn bandies."

The two prisoners, Earl McDonald, or Bird, of Cleveland, Ohio, and Ray Cannon, who claims to hail from Carroll, Iowa, are said by the police to have given full details of how they shot and killed Jon Ostoszewsky and wounded E. J. Seert during two holdups. Three boys took part in the robberies, but one has not yet been rounded up by the police. The three are credited with being responsible for an epidemic of hold-ups which for weeks have kept the northwest side of the city in terror.

Eleven Die in Mine.

Providence, Ky., Nov. 26.—Eleven coal miners, two white men and nine negroes, were entombed in mine No. 3 of the Providence Mining Co. yesterday afternoon following a gas explosion, and it is believed that all are dead. The mine is a new one, the shaft being but 100 feet in depth, with only a few entries.

The explosion was so violent that little hope is entertained of the miners having escaped death. The explosion blew great masses of slate and stone from the shaft. A mule blown out of the shaft slightly 150 feet away, still lives.

To Start Construction.

Montreal, Nov. 26.—Hon. A. K. McLean, Attorney-General of Nova Scotia, and E. Finn, M.P.P. for Halifax, are here negotiating with J. D. Barteaux, president of the Halifax and Eastern Railway Co., and Duncan Cameron, also of Toronto, who is manager of the trust company, which is financing the project. It is understood that the work of construction will be started almost immediately.

Revolution a Fake.

New York, Nov. 26.—Arthur E. Stillwell, president of the Kansas City, Mexico and Orient Railway, and the dominating influence in many important Mexican interests, yesterday declared that the "Mexican revolution" was a pure fake, concocted largely by persons who had interests to serve.

"Inside of ten days you will forget you ever heard of it," he said. "I have telegrams from my agents at Zacatecas, where 300 were supposed to have been killed, saying that nothing of the kind happened. My agent at Torreon says the fall of that place did not occur. From Chihuahua I have a message saying that all is peaceful."

Cholera in Italy.

Rome, Nov. 26.—Another case of cholera was discovered in Rome yesterday. The sick person is a Mason who had just arrived from the country. Two hundred persons are being held in quarantine. Throughout the rest of Italy only six new cases and no deaths were reported during the past twenty-four hours.

Velvety is the word to describe how your skin feels after the use of Infants' Delight. You will be surprised and delighted. Just as good for big folks as for little folks.

Clever Trick of Smugglers.

Montreal, Nov. 25.—The United States customs are much exercised over the smuggling of a large number of Chinese in automobiles, in fact it is widely known in Canada that for many years it has almost openly been carried on all along the border. A Chinaman wants to go to the States or to China. If the latter, he buys a ticket to a station, say, six miles from Rouse's Point, disembarks, and pays $25 to be driven across the line. There, his coming being expected, he is arrested, taken to Plattsburg, N.Y., is tried, and sentenced to be deported, not to Canada, but to China—exactly where he started for—at the expense of Uncle Sam. He pays no traveling expenses which a benevolent administration is prepared to put up.

If he wishes to remain in the United States the procedure is somewhat of a different nature. He is not arrested, but dropped in a quiet spot where an American stage picks him up and takes him a good bit south. Then he is free to go as he pleases.

Animals Must Be Well Bred.

Washington, D.C., Nov. 26.—Animals imported for breeding purposes by citizens of the United States on and after Jan. 1, 1911, must be accompanied by certificates of the bureau of animal industry that the animals are pure bred of a recognized breed and duly registered in the foreign book of record for that established breed. The Secretary of Agriculture has revised regulations on the subject in order to enforce more thoroughly the provisions of the tariff law instructing him to "determine and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury what are recognized breeds and pure bred animals," as a basis on which customs officers may determine what animals may be passed through the customs free of duty for breeding purposes.

NERVE AGONIES

All Nervous Diseases Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

Nerves that are over-worked or weak quickly indicate their distress by pain. That pain may be neuralgia or inflamed nerves, usually affecting the head, but often the spine and limbs. It may be nervous dyspepsia, easily started by worry, excitement or weakness. It may be St. Vitus' dance, a common affliction among children, or neurasthenia, a condition of general nervous exhaustion accompanied by acute melancholy. Worst of all the pain may signal the early stages of paralysis or nervous decay. All these disorders signify that the hungry nerves are clamoring for nourishment in the form of good, rich blood. The numerous cures of the above named nervous diseases and weakness in both sexes by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are accounted for by the fact that these Pills actually make new, rich blood and so supply the starved nerves with the vital elements needed to strengthen them. Mr. Wm. G. Jones, Westmead, Man., says: "A few years ago it was my misfortune to suffer from nervous debility brought about through a severe attack of la grippe or influenza. When the first effects were felt I used to ring like a lead, and in a bath of cold perspiration. Later the trouble grew so bad that I scarcely got a wink of sleep and would toss about in bed, growing so weak that I feared for my life. A doctor was called in, and then another, but without avail. I became more and more low spirited, and without any apparent reason would have fits of crying. While in this condition, a nervous wreck, a pamphlet was given me telling what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills had done for others, and I determined to give them a trial. By the time I had finished a few boxes I began to get some sleep, and this greatly encouraged me. Then my strength began to return, my nerves grew steadier and in a few weeks more I was feeling as well as ever I did in my life, and you may be sure I will always gratefully recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to every one sick or ailing, as they restored me to health and strength after all other medicines had failed."

You can get these Pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Origin of Grocer.

Grocer appears in Hollinshed's Chronicle, 1580, as "grosser," and in other mediaeval records it is sometimes written "engrosser" and was applied to the spicers and pepperers who were wholesale dealers in various spices—that is, who dealt en gros—in large quantities, as distinguished from "regrators," who were retail dealers. The Grocers' company first adopted the word grocer in 1373, when the spicers and pepperers allied themselves into a single corporation.—London Express.

Where Abraham Fished.

Mrs. Victoria de Bunsen in "The Soul of a Turk" relates a legend concerning Abraham which will be new to many readers. She learned of it while at Edessa, the traditional Ur of the Chaldees. She was shown there a large oblong tank of water so filled with fishes resting just below the surface of the water that their fins and backs seemed almost wedged together so as to form "an almost solid layer of silvery life."

"The guardian of the mosque throws some meal into the water, and the fish jump high to catch it, a great living pyramid, of which those which jump the highest form the pinnacle. The tradition is that Abraham as a child fished in the tank; hence the fish were considered sacred. No single one has been caught or killed to this day. Indeed, death would overtake the man who transgressed this law."

Protection From Lightning.

Sir Oliver Lodge stated that the problem of securing protection from lightning consisted in finding the best method of dissipating the enormous energy of the flash, but that it was not wise to get rid of the energy too quickly. A thin iron wire is considered the best lightning conductor from the electrical point of view, but it is almost impossible to protect a building from lightning unless it is completely enveloped in a metal cage. It is by no means true that a building is safe when provided with a conductor reaching up to the highest part of the building.

JUNGLE TERRORS HAD TAILS TWISTED IN TO-DAY'S BIG FINAL GAME AT HAMILTON FINISHED STRONG BUT RALLY WAS LATE

Varsity Led at Half Time by 11-0 but Tigers Out Played Them 7 to 5 in the Final Period—A Grand Game Replete With Thrilling Plays.

MAYNARD STARRED

Special Wire to the Examiner.

HAMILTON, ONT., NOV 26—From the appearance of the city this morning all the ancient rivalry between Toronto and Hamilton is to be climaxed this afternoon in the game between Varsity of Toronto and the Hamilton Tigers for the football championship of the Dominion. Everything this morning is subjected to rugby enthusiasties. Business, the process of justice, all are practically suspended. The only people working strenuously are the poor Hamilton policemen, who surely have their hands full and generally get the worst of it on a day like this. Crowds from Toronto and other places began arriving last night. Two score regular and special trains poured their passengers into stations last night and this morning. Many clothed in coonskin coats and other articles of winter apparel bravely stood the chilly atmosphere of Lake Ontario and came up in boats. There are thousands more visitors that can never hope to see the game and what's to become of the surplus is the problem for the police to attend to. The students arrived in force early and began ructions. Barber poles and other signs were carried off as trophies. It didn't take long for Hamilton to realize that a championship rugby game in their midst was no unmixed blessing.

A slight frost last night put a coating on the muddy field and slightly helped Varsity's chances. Nevertheless, independent observers are betting on Tigers, although they find lots of Toronto money against them.

HAMILTON, NOV. 26—With the greatest crowd that ever gathered in Hamilton to see the football game, with cheering, singing, hooting rooters within, and thousands on the streets who couldn't get near the Cricket Field, where the game was being played, Toronto Varsity and Hamilton Tigers at 2.45 today opened up the great battle for rugby championship and honours of Canada. When the game opened the Tigers were favourites in the betting at eight to seven.

Simpson kicked to Maynard, who recovered. An attempted outside pass was fozzled and Tigers got the ball in Varsity territory.

An offside advanced Tigers to Varsity's 30 yard line. Varsity got the ball. Gall pushed through for 30 yards, taking it to midfield. Gall punted to Simpson at Tigers' 25 yard line and the return went into touch. Varsity kicked for 5 yards. Gall kicking into touch at Tigers' 5 yard line Simpson kicked into touch at the 45 yard line. Maynard hit the line for 5 yards. The next Varsity buck failed, and Gall punted to Simpson who was downed 25 yards out. Varsity's line is holding its ball with the famous Tiger wings. Varsity got the ball at Tigers' quarter for an offside and smashed through for the second time of quarter. On next buck Foulds tried to buck but failed and dropped it. Maynard picked it up and started around for an easy try. He landed it between goal posts, but it was not converted. Score, Varsity 5 Tigers 0.

Gall kicked over to Simpson, who caught and returned to Maynard. Gall again punted to Simpson who faked a kick and ran it out 15 yards. Tigers punted to Maynard, who punted it to midfield. Gall punted to Moore at Tigers' line and Moore made a grand run to midfield. Varsity started a run the next down and Gall carried it to midfield. Gall punted over the line to Simpson who passed to Smith, who carried it safely outside. Tigers bucked for 5 yards and then passed to Moore, who gained three more. Simpson kicked into touch at midfield. Murray Thompson's ankle was hurt and Kennedy replaced him. On an exchange of punts between Gall and Simpson, Gage got the ball for a 15 yard gain. Glassford was fenced for a scrag. Gall failed with an onside kick. Burton getting the ball at Tiger quarter way. Simpson punted to Maynard at midfield, who ran it back 25 yards. Gall passed out to Dixon, but Gallenby intercepted. He knocked it forward and picked it up, but was called back Gall rounded the left end, passed to Maynard, who again crossed the Tiger line for a touch down. It was a shame to take the money, he went over so easy. Maynard converted the try. Varsity 11, Tigers 0.

Gage lost ten yards on a ten yard run. Gall kicked to Simpson who returned to Maynard at Varsity quarter after an exchange of punts. Simpson fumbled, Varsity recovered the ball at Tigers' 25 yard line. Gallenby hurt his boubles and was replaced by "Punk" Thompson. Kennedy lost 5 yards on an end run just at half time. Score, Varsity 11, Tigers 0.

Third Quarter.

In the first play after the half Gage took a look and was downed by Isbister and Barron, injuring his bad shoulder. Play stopped. He resumed play amid the cheers of varsity crowd. Tigers got the ball on offside, tried to buck over, but were thrown back twice. Simpson then punted to Maynard who was downed for a rouge. Varsity 11, Tigers 1.

Tigers bucked through for 5 yards more and Simpson punted to Dixon, who was downed for another rouge. Varsity 11, Tigers 2

On the kick off Maynard ran the ball to midfield, Tigers are now playing like fiends. Varsity kicked to Burton, who was downed at Tigers' quarter. Gall tried to run, but Awrey stole the ball at Varsity 35 yard. On a Tiger fumble Kennedy broke through, dribbled the ball 10 yards, picked it up and carried it to the Tigers' 30 yard line, relieving a tough situation. On the next down, the Tigers kicked to Maynard, who was chased to his own quarters and downed. Dixon took Simpson's punt at his own line and made a grand 40 yard run. Gall punted to Simpson and he was downed at Tigers' 40 yard line. Burton failed to round the end. Smith made a bad kick and Varsity got the ball at midfield. Gall kicked to Moore, who was nailed Smith kicked into touch at midfield. The crowd is now encroaching on the field and play has stopped until the field is cleared. The mounted police are racing up and down trying to clear the grounds. Gibson ran a punt into Varsity territory. Maynard fumbled, but recovered. Gall's punt was blocked. Gall punted to midfield, where Burton was downed. Burton plunged through for a 5 yard gain. Simpson kicked to Gall in touch at his own line Three quarter time score Varsity 11, Tigers 2.

Fourth Quarter.

The final quarter opened with Varsity in possession five yards from their own line. They failed to buck and Gall punted to Simpson, who returned to Gall at Varsity's five yard line. Tigers got the ball for off-side. A buck failed. Moore tried to round the end and gained three yards. Tigers bucked the third time and failed, losing the ball. This shows Varsity's grand defence. Gall punted out to Moore, who ran it to Varsity's quarter. Isbister bucked successfully for the first time to-day. Smith failed in an attempted field goal, but the ball went to the dead line for a single point. Varsity 11, Tigers 3.

The Tigers lost ten yards on a pass from Moore to Burton. Simpson kicked into touch in goal for a single. Varsity 11, Tigers 4.

A beautiful bit of passing between Maynard, Gall and Dixon carried the ball out to Varsity's 40 yard line. Gall fumbled, but recovered it and kicked it out of a muss to Moore, who was downed in Tiger territory. Maynard took the punt and made a bad pass to Gall, who lost it into touch. Moore, on a long pass, gained 2 yards around the right end. The Tigers are now coming strong and have the edge on Varsity. Kid Smith dropped a goal from the field. Varsity 11, Tigers 7. The Tiger crowd is going wild. Another buck yielded 3 yards. Gall kicked to Moore who was downed for a rouge. Varsity 12, Tigers 7.

On the kick out Varsity got the ball on Isbister's foul. Isbister was fenced. Barron broke through and threw Gall low for a 15 yard loss, just as he was preparing for a field goal. Varsity got the ball at midfield and Gall punted into touch at Tigers' 20 yard line. Simpson punted to Dixon who made a double pass with Gall and carried it to Tigers' 40 yard line, a pretty piece of work. Dixon was hurt in the tackle, but resumed very dizzy. Gall kicked to Simpson who was downed 5 yards out. Simpson kicked to Dixon who punted to Smith, who was downed by Kennedy and Bell. Tigers 7, Varsity 13

The crowd is now yelling for Varsity to double the score. A kick gave the ball to Varsity in midfield. Gall punting to Simpson who was downed for a rouge. Varsity 14, Tigers 7.

On the kick off, Gall returned to Simpson, who was flopped ten yards out. A return into touch gave Varsity the ball. Gall's punt was blocked, but he recovered. An exchange of punts placed the ball in midfield. Gall punted over the line to Simpson who dodged the tackler, passed to Smith who ran it out. Simpson punted to Dixon, who returned for a rouge. Varsity 15, Tigers 7.

Varsity are now attacking very strongly again, but are playing safe all the way. On the kick out behind line to midfield, Maynard ripped off a tick to the dead line for another point. Varsity 16, Tigers 7.

The game is over. Crowds swarm the field, and everything is in confusion.

IMPERIALS WON IN A WARM POLITICAL DEBATE

MONTREAL, NOV. 25.—In a debate between the students of Laval and McGill to-night on Nationalism v. Imperialism, which was largely attended by both sides, the imperialists won by 65 to 15. Although nominally non-partisan, the debate became a heated discussion on the respective merits of the policies of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Henri Bourassa.

Three representatives of Laval, speaking in French, argued for the Bourassa side, while as many for McGill, in English, supported the Canadian naval programme. The discussion became very lively, and both languages became a good deal mixed before it closed with a vote, which left no doubt as to the sentiments of the meeting which was equally divided between French and English.

ELEVATOR FALLS FROM THIRD TO FIRST STOREY AND THE ENGINEER IS INJURED

Bert Hunt Had His Leg Broken at the Geo. Matthews and Company's Plant Last Evening in an Accident—Another Man Had a Narrow Escape.

ELEVATOR JAMMED

Bert Hunt, Westcot street, engineer at the George Matthews Company plant had his leg broken and John Feelie, his assistant, had a very narrow escape from serious injury at the company's plant last evening when an elevator fell from the third storey to the first floor carrying the two men down in its fall. The accident occurred at five minutes to six o'clock. The elevator became jammed at the third storey and Hunt and Feelie went up to release it, thinking that the safety clutches would work. They apparently failed to do so and the elevator crashed down at great speed to the first floor with the two men, unable to do anything to check its speed. When assistance reached them it was found that Hunt had his leg broken between the hip and knee and sustained other minor injuries. Feelie escaped unhurt. Hunt was taken to Nicholls Hospital, where his injuries were attended to by Dr. McCulloch.

OVER FIVE HUNDRED IMMIGRANTS PLACED BY LOCAL OFFICER THIS YEAR

"Couldn't Get Along if it Wasn't For the Help From the Old Country" Remarked Farmer This Morning—Most of Newcomers Have Been Successful.

Over five hundred immigrants have been placed from the local immigration office during this present year. Mr. G. H. Howson informed the Examiner this morning. Since the office was opened here, four years ago, fifteen hundred have been supplied places. "I don't know what we would do without them" remarked a farmer to-day who had called on Mr Howson in an endeavour to get a man to work for him. Most of the immigrants that have come through Mr. Howson's department have been sent to farmers. Some have been failures but by far the greater majority has been successes. A great many, after spending a year or so on the farms in this part of the country, go to Western Canada, where greater opportunities await them. There are constantly demands upon the immigration office for men and Mr. Howson is kept busy endeavouring to meet all the requests.

Turner, Roy Fuller, George Wesley, George Clark and Holly Sheppard on the ends they will be something doing all the time. Fun, fast and furious is the watchword.

A POPULAR POLICY

Mr. Jas. T. Anderson Enthusiastic Over the Travellers' Life

Mr. Jas. T. Anderson, district manager for the Travellers' Life Insurance Company of Canada is very enthusiastic over the business the company is doing in this district, which he attributes to the popular policy the company is issuing. Attention may be drawn particularly to one of the clauses of their policy, which Mr. Anderson states is not a feature of any policy issued by any other company. The clause referred to is this:

Y. M. C. A. SCOUTS

Friday night the Y. Scouts had their usual drill at the Armouries, which was most successful. A number of new recruits were sworn in, and then the boys made their way back to the Association, where a very pleasant hour was spent. This being their first Social. While they were at drill the social committee of the Boys' Department got busy, and as a result a most tempting spread was awaiting their return. Some boys were heard to remark, Gee drilling makes a fellow hungry, and then proceeded to prove same. While the boys were enjoying themselves in this way their Scout master added to the evening's entertainment by telling a story that was most suitable for the occasion. This story was followed by one from the Secretary. Then a few words of advice was given the boys by Mr. Strickland of Toronto who is interested in the Boy Scouts. After which "God Save Our King" was sung and a most enjoyable evening brought to a close.

Sunday morning, boy's Bible Class meets as usual at 10 o'clock.

"FOLLOW MY LEADER."

"Leader" is a good name for the first ratepayer to take an interest in civic government by putting his opinions on paper. It is to be hoped his example will be followed, for the ratepayers themselves must be behind any movement for improvement in civic conditions. The Examiner invites them to express their views. Hundreds of ratepayers complain of high taxation. What do they think is the cause? What is the opinion of ratepayers as to what we have to show for our high taxation? One ratepayer may point to our sewers, sidewalks, bridges, purchase of waterworks, etc. Another can reply that these do not explain the high taxation. They are paid for by debentures, and only the interest and sinking fund are burdens on the tax roll. Then other ratepayers might ask what besides these we have to show. Others might give their opinion as to what is the trouble, and others might suggest a remedy. If we are well governed and if there is nothing to be improved there is no necessity of letters from the ratepayers. If, however, it is felt that things are not done as well as they could be done, then the ratepayers who have the matter in their hands, might show some interest by giving their opinion of what should be done. Other Ontario cities are considering government by Commission as a remedy. Let the ratepayers tell us what they think about it. The Examiner's columns are open to correspondents; though if many write, their letters should be brief, so that as many as possible may be heard from.

ASSESSMENT.

Complaints are made of the unjust inequality of assessment. This is a matter that the city fathers may remedy. This injustice is helped on by the law itself. The law requires that if a ratepayer is unjustly assessed he must file his complaint, before a certain date, that he is unjustly treated, or feels he is, and he must take the steps to protect himself from the action of the authorities, by filing notice of his complaint, when everything conspires to make it difficult for him to know whether he is unjustly assessed or not. He is forced to defend himself against the acts of the persons he has elected to protect his interests. The law or the practice should be changed so as to protect the ratepayer. A man that is assessed higher than his neighbour does not relish the idea of turning informer and making an enemy of his neighbour; besides, he doesn't always know how he is assessed relatively to others without going to the city hall and digging through the roll. One partial remedy would be to print the assessment roll so that what concerns everybody should be known to everybody. As it is, according to complaints made, one man is assessed higher than another and on property of apparently identical value. This is rank injustice, and a remedy should be provided. At any rate the law should be changed so that the duty of acting, and the burden of proof, should be removed from the ratepayer. The assessment law is contrary to the spirit of British justice, which holds a man innocent till he is proved guilty. The assessement law is exactly opposite; it holds the ratepayer guilty and requires him to prove his "innocence"—of being unjustly treated.

LAME LOGIC.

The Orange Sentinel devotes the whole of the front page of its last issue to an article purporting to reveal "the true inwardness of the Nationist movement in Quebec," to impress the conclusion arrived at, that the object is to establish a French republic on the banks of the St. Lawrence. "They will probably," says the Sentinel, "deny that they aim to separate from confederation. Such a denial would be at variance with the political history of Quebec for the past two decades. The Laurier navy has been presented to them as the first step towards Canadina "independence." The idea of separation from the empire "has been presented" to them through the navy, but it has been done by such agencies as the Sentinel and the Mail and Empire. Isn't it beautiful logic to argue that the "Laurier navy" commends itself to the Nationalists as a medium of "separation and independence" when the "Laurier navy" is the object of the most bitter Nationalist attack. The whole campaign in Drummond and Arthabaska, was directed against Laurier on the head of the navy; any misrepresentations of the Mother country, as charged by the Sentinel, were merely incidental—as means of influencing the minds of the electors against Laurier and the navy. The most bitter abuse of the Mother country was made by members of the Conservative party, yet and now, sitting at the right hand of Mr. Borden; "members in good standing" of the party, which the Orange Sentinel supports as the only true blue repository of loyalty! Pshaw! The Orange Sentinel's motherly solicitude for Canada and Protestantism, is never more in evidence than when it is a question of helping along the "Tory" party.

THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

While the new Public Library building, well adapted to its purposes, with conspicuous conveniences, is ready *almost, for occupancy, and the inter*ests of the reading public, pass under a new regime, a new Librarian and Assistant, a new Library Board and new surroundings, it is expected to justify congratulations. However much these are justified, the people should not forget that they owe a good deal to the retiring officials of the old library who have, from time to time, under never the most favourable conditions, faithfully and efficiently served the public. They never had a surplus of means; never such a commodious and specially arranged home like the new Public Library building. Yet they have maintained the library in excellent running condition; they have brought together a library of 9,000 or 10,000 books and nearly always, up to the present year, have been able to pay their way. This year there will be a shortage of some $300. This is not to be attributed to lack of good management, but to circumstances. The new Public Library is partly to blame. The prospect of soon having free books available in the the new library, resulted in a greatly decreased sale of membership tickets, largely depended upon to meet current expenditure. The old board has done well and deserve well of the public in respect to the services they have given. The new board with their fine new building, structurally adapted to its specific purposes, spacious, commodious, well lighted and well furnished, can never know by experience the handicaps the old board had to run under, nor the difficulties they had to keep things moving smoothly, to keep order under conditions that invited chaos. The old library board have made excellent bricks, and without straw. As they pass away under the impulse of the new order of things, we should remember their good services and weight our gratitude with the commendation, "well done good and faithful servants."

"NO ALLIANCE."

Mr. Borden, leader of the Conservative party, says there is no alliance between the Conservatives and Nationalists. This suggests a parable—a certain thief took his stolen goods to a man who made it a business to dispose of stolen goods, for the benefit of thieves. This man denied that he was in alliance with thieves, though he was willing to gain profit from them dishonestly. Now the Nationalists and the Conservatives have a common aim, the destruction of a common enemy, the Laurier government. The Nationalists expressed this hostility in the Drummond-Arthabaska election and fighting in their ranks were prominent members of the Conservative party, who in Parliament declare that they are still members of the Conservative party. The Nationalists fight was headed by the leader of the Conservative party in Quebec, Mr. Monk, who is still working in harmony with Mr. Borden. Mr. Monk, as the Conservative spokesman of the Nationalists, declares for submitting the naval question to the people, and moved an amendment to the address in reply to that effect. Mr. Borden, to save appearances and justify his assertion that "there is no alliance" between Conservatives and Nationalists, moves an amendment to Mr. Monk's amendment, having precisely the same meaning, but ornamented with a little "Cold flag" frill.

Mr. Monk, Conservative leader of the Nationalists, and Mr. Borden, the other leader, have the same policy in regard to the navy; they are in alliance so far; they have a common aim as expressed in another feature of common policy—"anything to beat Laurier"; they are in alliance that much further. Mr. Borden expressed no dissent from the disloyal campaign of the Nationalists in the bye-election though their hands were held up by his own party followers; he has had no reproof for the members of his party, who spouted rank treason in the Nationalist interest; he has had no reproof for other members of his party who have shown their sympathy by congratulating the Nationalists over their victory; further negative evidence of alliance. He is prepared to appropriate the fruits of pNationalist "victory" to his party advantage; practical evidence of an alliance. He has allowed his followers to fight under the banner of the Nationalists with tacit approval—without disapproval, and yet he declares there is no alliance. There may be no written agreement, but there is as much an effective alliance between the Conservatives and Nationalists as there is an unwritten understanding between the thief and the "fence" of the purable.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.

Reference was made to the letter of Mr. George Leader, published in yesterday's Examiner, and its tone and spirit warmly commended. Mr. Leader does not think that the present unsatisfactory city government is due to the system, which would be all right if the faults that militate against the successful working of the system were removed. These he specifies as (1) annual election of the council; (2) apathy of the electors; (3) the difficulty of getting good men, and (4) leaving the council to themselves. These things are the backbone, if it has a backbone, of the system—its direct fruits.

Under our system we have annual elections; and it is easily possible that there should be a new council every year. This of itself suggests hopeless inefficiency—absolutely forbids the adoption of anything like a continuous and well considered policy—absolutely prevents effective administration. Any manufacturing industry that changed its managing heads every year, with every year a new style of management, would soon become familiar with the bailiff and the scrap heap.

Mr. Leader's second hindrance to the good working of the system is the "apathy of the electors." This is the kernel of the trouble; the root of the evil. If the people want good government they can do much to get it. They can do what they do not now do, and never have done—make careful selection of members of the council. As things are now candidates are not selected; they select themselves, and the people vote for them, utterly indifferent, in most cases, as to their qualifications—"they are good fellows"; "they belong to our church, or our lodge"; "they are as good as any of the others, etc."

The system permits of Mr. Leader's third obstacle to the smooth working of the system: "The difficulty of getting strong, efficient men". There's the rub. Strong, efficient men are generally good business men, who are too busy to "canvass," too little anxious for honour to resort to the means the average candidate employs to advance his success. "Strong efficient men" would not carry the favour of cliques, or special interests and in the slang of the day, would "get left"—suffer the humiliation of being beaten by a man perhaps inferior in every way, except the employment of every means great and small, especially small to get elected. Under the system, getting a good council is a matter of luck.

The fourth obstacle to the success of the "system," is cited—"leaving the council to themselves when elected". This is a sad truth. Under popular carelessness as to what sort of man is elected the ratepayers who fail to watch the election of members, cannot be expected to and as a matter of fact, do not, outside of half a dozen or so, take the slightest interest in the work of the council. The people grumble at their high taxes, but take no interest in discovering the cause—to find out where the shoe pinches. They accept taxes, like death, as something inevitable; something that must be endured, but cannot be avoided. As a matter of fact the people have the matter in their own hands. They can provide good or bad city government at will. No ratepayer would buy even a hat or pair of boots without looking well at what he was buying. But he will elect a man to manage his civic business without thought or consideration. He marks his ballot as carelessly as he would brush a fly off his face.

Ontario has tried the present system of town and city government for nearly seventy years and in that time millions of dollars have been spent in municipal government that have been largely wasted. Wasted because the expenditure has been makeshift, without system and founded on no matured, thought-out policy. Continuous changes in councils, carelessly elected by the people, have made the application of plan or system impossible. Municipal government by commission has given good results, where it has been tried. We are not getting as good results as we might get from the present system. Is it not time we tried something else?

A TELLTALE SHADOW

It Warns a Man That He Is In Danger

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Sorrento, in southern Italy, is a colony of villas and hotels, many of which are surrounded by orange groves. The place is built on a crescent shaped rock at the foot of which is the margin of the Mediterranean. A part of this margin laps a beach, and on this beach are fishermen's boats, and there also the women do the family washing.

One morning Seymour Wilcox, a young American traveler, was looking down over a low stone wall built for the protection of persons on the cliff above, when he saw a young girl washing clothes in the sea. Being some 200 feet above her, he could not see what she was like, but "distance lends enchantment to the view," and he could, even from that distance, detect a certain grace in her movements. He went down on to the beach for a nearer view.

He found a girl of fifteen, though at that age and even much younger an Italian girl is a woman. She possessed the dark hair and eyes of her people and a good figure. Her arms, from exposure, were brown, but they were shapely. Wilcox watched her for a little, then walked past her and smiled at her. He not only smiled, but spoke to her, for he knew something of the Italian language. He learned that her name was Marie and her father was a fisherman. After a brief chat he returned to the town above.

But the next morning he looked down again over the wall, and, although he knew he would be playing with edged tools, seeing Marie below, he yielded to a temptation to go down again and have a few words with her. This time the girl met him with a smile indicating that she was very much pleased that he had come again. On this visit he talked to her longer than before.

Wilcox continued these visits. He found a wineshop down among these fishermen's quarters and would go in there for a liter of wine and to smoke. Sometimes he would take Marie in to have a glass with him. There was nothing unusual in this in Italy. The Italian wines have very little alcohol in them and are drunk by the women and children the same as the men. Besides, a wineshop in Italy is a very different affair from a saloon in America.

The landlord of the hotel where Wilcox was stopping knew nothing of his visits to the fishermen's quarters or he would have warned him against going there. The young man mentioned the matter to no one. He knew he was taking a risk, but not how much of a risk. Besides, he was a fearless fellow and at an age when a man of courage is more apt to court than avoid danger. Nevertheless he did not sufficiently realize the position in which he was placing himself to go on.

One night Wilcox went down to the beach and, calling for Marie at her father's cottage, invited her to go for a ride out on the water in her father's boat, the father to sail it. Maria communicated the request to her father, who agreed to the plan. Indeed, no one had thought of a desire to interfere with Wilcox's attentions to the girl. Neighbor fishermen standing near were evidently glad to get quickly out of the American's way whenever they were permitting one to take him into a position where they could rob him didn't matter to him, bent as he was on enjoying her society.

After a couple of hours' sail the party returned to the shore, and Wilcox asked the father and daughter to go into the wineshop for refreshment. The father declined for both himself and his daughter, saying it was late and he must be up early in the morning to begin his day's fishing. Wilcox bade them good night, and, as it was early for him, went into the wineshop alone for his tipple and his smoke.

There was no one in the place except the woman, who set the wine before the American and left him. There was a fireplace in the room, and, the nights being chilly in Italy, Wilcox recalled her and asked her to bring in a few fagots and build a fire. She was surprised at the request, for fuel is enormously expensive in Italy; but, knowing him to be an American, which to these people means having plenty of money, she acceded to his request. Wilcox sat down before the fire with the wine beside him and drank and smoked and, without intending it, fell asleep.

He awoke with a start. What caused him to feel that he was in danger he did not know. It might have been a blow that was threatening him or it might have been the fact of a sudden realization that he had been ever since he first saw Marie taking a frightful risk. In any event he was conscious that death was in the room. The fagots had burned out. There was a bright light near the entrance, which shone on Wilcox's back and which cast a shadow on the wall directly over the fireplace. The shadow was that of a figure with the right arm raised above the head. The shadow cast by the end of this arm was difficult for Wilcox to make out. It seemed to be a pointed stick held by a fist. The mind works quickly in the presence of danger, real or fancied, and in a fraction of a second he had determined that a man was behind him with his right hand raised and holding a dagger.

"Senora!" cried the American sharply, calling to the woman who had served the wine.

The shadow flickered and disappeared.

There was no reply to the summons, and the young man called again:

"Senora!"

Presently the woman, yawning, came slowly into the room.

"I find myself, senora," said Wilcox, "with not even money enough about me to pay you for the wine I have ordered. Have you any one here who will go up to my hotel with a check, get it cashed by the landlord and bring me the money?"

"Yes, senor, but you can as well pay for the wine when you come for more."

"No, senora; I go away early in the morning to Naples. Besides, there are other payments I wish to make down here among you good people. I intended to bring money, but forgot it."

"Very well, senor. If you desire it I will send my son. He is in bed, but I can awaken him."

Wilcox took a blank check from his portmanteau and filled a check for 500 lira ($100) and wrote on the back of it a request to the landlord of his hotel to send him the money it called for by bearer. Then he gave it to the landlady, and, ordering another litre of wine and lighting a cigarette, he made it appear that he would await the return of his messenger.

But he had no idea of waiting for the money. He knew the man who was about to kill him when he awoke from slumber would waylay the boy who had gone for it. Possibly others who knew of the fact that 500 lira was to be carried at midnight from the town down to the fishers' village would also make an attempt to appropriate it. There was still another possibility. The landlord might surmise that his guest had been cornered and required the money for a ransom. In this event he might have the messenger shadowed on his return by a policeman.

Wilcox realized the fact that he was at the fishers' village near 12 o'clock at night where it was as dangerous to remain as to climb to the top of the cliff. He kept his eye on the wall for awhile, but, seeing no reappearance of the shadow, finally arose from his chair and paced the floor, casting glances at the entrances of the room. Presently he walked out the door through which the landlady had gone and made his way into a kitchen. There, among other things, lay a carving knife with a long, thin blade and a sharp point. He grasped it and for the first time since he had seen the shadow drew a breath of relief. So far as he knew, no one saw him take the knife, and, concealing it under his coat, he went back into the room he had left.

Wilcox was uncertain what to do. Should he remain where he was till day, or should he risk going up to the town with no other defense than a carving knife? If beset, it might be by several persons. If he remained where he was, in case of attack he might put his back against a corner of the room and stand off a number of assailants. Every vestige of recklessness had deserted him. He was mad, fighting mad, but in that state a man's faculties are often the sharpest. He resolved to stay where he was.

Sufficient time for a messenger to go to the hotel and return had elapsed. Wilcox had no idea that the messenger would come back or, if he did come, that he would have the money with him. He was not thinking of his 500 lira, which he would be glad to pay for his life. He was wondering if the man whose shadow he had seen or some one else had appropriated it. This occupied his thoughts when suddenly the outer door was opened and in stepped two persons.

They were a boy of fourteen and—Marie!

Marie, approaching Wilcox, handed him an envelope containing the money he had sent for. He looked at her, plainly asking with his eyes an explanation.

"I knew, signor," said Marie, "that there is one who since you first spoke to me is jealous of you. I found tonight that he would attack you and watched the place. I saw him come in here and followed him. I heard you call for a messenger to go for money. I did not believe Giovanni would rob, but I thought it best to go with the boy. Giovanni disappointed me. He waylaid us and demanded the money, but when he knew I had it he upbraided me and went away."

"So you are disappointed in your lover, Marie—that he should rob, but not that he should murder?"

"The one was for money and the other for love."

"I see. There is a great difference."

The matter being explained, Wilcox lost his apprehension. Since there appeared to be but one man concerned, he resolved, armed with the carving knife he had captured, to go up to his hotel. Having paid his record, he set out in the darkness and arrived without being molested.

The next day Wilcox sent a note to the father of Marie that he would furnish the means to send the girl to school. The offer was accepted, and she went for three years to a convent, at the end of which time she married and emigrated to America.

Wilcox at the request of the girl who had saved him did not report the matter to the police.

Dreams and the Awakening.

It was a custom among Canadian Indians, says a contributor to The Canadian Magazine, when they dreamed of receiving a favor from another to apply to him for it fulfillment, and whenever possible the conditions of the dream were complied with.

A chief one morning came to Sir William Johnson, then governor, and told him that he had dreamed that His Excellency had made him a present of the suit of regimentals which he wore.

The governor immediately agreed to make the present asked for, but as the chief was about to leave told him that he also had had a dream to the effect that the chief had given him a certain large tract of land of his.

The chief was silent a moment.

"Well, you shall have it," he then said, "but, if you please, Sir William, we will not dream any more."

Might Have Been Worse.

A sad-faced editor, with fringes on the bottom of his trousers, and the wind singing mournfully through his whiskers, sat in his sanctum thinking—thinking. Presently a shadow fell across the room and a shrill voice demanded to know if he was the editor. "Yes, sir," said he, with a look of alarm. The owner of the voice mopped the floor with the editor, and went his way. "Thank heaven!" exclaimed the editor, after he had gathered together the wreck of his former self and had straightened up the furniture. "Life is still worth living. I expected he would tell me to stop his paper."—Sault Star.

Too Big For Him Then.

A man who was afraid of thunder crawled into a hollow log as a place of safety during a thunderstorm. The thunder rolled and the rain poured down in torrents and the old log began to swell up till the poor fellow was wedged in so tight that he could not get out. All of his past sins began passing before him. Suddenly he remembered he hadn't paid his newspaper subscription, and he felt so small that he was able to back right out.—Blind River Gazette.

Keeps Him Busy.

The Skeptical Aunt—What does he do, Dolly, for a living? Dolly (greatly surprised)—Why, auntie, he does not have time to earn a living while we are engaged!

Made Him Think.

Sapleigh—Ah, speaking of electricity, that makes me think— Miss Keen—Really, Mr. Sapleigh! Isn't it remarkable what electricity can do?—Boston Transcript.

The Lions and the Roses.

"An admirer in my younger days," said a woman lion tamer, "once sent me a bouquet of red roses, and I wore them in the ring to do my act. They came near doing for me. I had got my eight lions arranged in their pyramid when the lion at the top saw the red roses in my corsage. He mistook them for meat—lions have poor sight—and down he leaped. He came for me open mouthed. Though I fired a blank cartridge in his face, he made with his paw a sweep at the roses that ripped me open from chin to waist. The other lions bounded forward. They weren't angry. They were hungry. I had intelligence enough to perceive that, and just as they were leaping on me I tore off my roses and threw them across the ring. The big brutes left me at once, and while they sniffed the roses with disappointed growls I staggered out of the iron door. I was young at the time, young and light headed, or I'd have known better than to wear anything red among hungry and nearsighted lions."—Buffalo Express.

A Coin in the Sea.

A coin dropped into the sea will sink to the bottom, however deep it is, owing to the fact that the metal is heavier than the volume of water it displaces. It is a common but mistaken notion that the density of the sea increases with its depth and consequent pressure, as does the density of the atmosphere, which we all know is greatest at the earth's surface. The air, however, like all gases, is elastic and when under pressure (as with its own weight) shrinks in volume and gains in density. Water, on the other hand, is absolutely incompressible, and, although the pressure in the sea increases at the rate of one pound for every two feet we descend, the density of the water remains the same; consequently the penny continues to outweigh the water it displaces, and the coin sinks until it finds a solid resting place. The pressure of the water has no influence at all on the coin, acting as it does on all sides equally.

Helping Her Out.

"Have you a young chicken? I am rather green at cooking."

"Such being the case, madam, don't you think you'd better have an old, experienced fowl?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Mirth.

Harmless mirth is the best cordial against the consumption of the spirit. Wherefore jesting is not unlawful, if it trespasseth not in quantity, quality or season.—Fuller.

Ignorance when it is voluntary is criminal.—Johnson.

Sensitive to Art.

Said the art gallery guide, "Just watch the crowd awhile and see which of their antics impresses you most."

Presently the visitor said, "I think it is the queer attitudes so many of them strike."

"Exactly," said the guide. "They are imitating the poses of the figures in the portraits. Anybody who sits for a portrait is supposed to strike a graceful attitude. All these people who have never been painted realize the grace there is in the poise of the head, the turn of the wrist, the slope of the shoulders. They wish they could look like that, and unconsciously they try it. The men are as bad as the women. They straighten up; they droop; they tilt their heads; they arrange their hands and feet in imitation of the figures they admire most. Sometimes their attempts are very clever; again they are simply ridiculous."—New York Times.

GROWTH OF JOHANNESBURG.

South African Town Has Grown a Hundredfold.

Twenty-two years ago Johannesburg was an isolated town of not more than 5,000 inhabitants. To-day it is a city with an estimated population of more than 100,000 and a colored population of upward of 200,000, while the immediate surrounding mining within a radius of 30 miles of the city has fully as many more people within its boundaries.

Here we have gathered within a few miles a total of 600,000 persons, where a quarter of a century ago, there was not one per cent. of that number.

Here we have established, within that brief period, well in the interior of Africa, a community that sends to the outside world each year, $150,000,000 in new gold, to vivify, stimulate and sustain the financial and commercial operations of every continent.

One third of the entire sum of gold produced annually from the earth comes from the 60 miles of gold reef formation which encircles Johannesburg.

This suddenly created city supplies London every Monday with an average of $3,000,000 value in new gold, and the keenest money changers of Paris, Berlin, New York and London itself note with intense interest the arrival and distribution of this contribution from what was but a few years ago the African wilds.

Fifty years, it is predicted, will not curtail, much less exhaust, this great stream of gold from Johannesburg, and while that city is doing so much for the business of itself and every other portion, rural and urban, of the earth, through its gold production, it is doing very much through its development of the region in which it is situated.

Theatres, hotels, stores, public and private buildings of the latest designs and the finest types are being constructed at Johannesburg, and no place on earth has so much ready cash to pay for what is desired or needed.

Europe and America have been called upon to furnish them more than 1,000 automobiles, which traverse the city streets and run through the mining district.

Gas companies and electric light companies are doing their full share in lighting up the dark continent, and the orders for mining machinery to Great Britain, to Germany and the United States have amounted to millions of dollars to each country, and its construction has given work to thousands of mechanics in each of the nations named.

Here is a community, a metropolitan city, which is largely dependent upon Europe and America for all it uses in the way of merchandise, and which consumes millions of dollars' worth every year of the manufactured articles of those two continents.

Twenty years from now Africa will have a score of commercial centres as great as Johannesburg in their distribution of the outputs of the mills and shops and factories, for Johannesburg, in Africa, is but one frontier city of the civilization that is sure to reach the very heart of that continent.

The Garter on Both Legs.

German lithographers recently reproduced a historical English picture in which King Edward wears the Order of the Garter. They dispatched a telegram after their proof had left them to send it back, as they found they had made a great mistake—they had given the king only one garter. The production went forth with the order on both legs!—London Strand Magazine.

Britain Needs a "Cent."

Why should we not add to the existing coins "a British cent," a coin value one hundredth part of a florin? Then we should have at once for any one who cared to use it a decimal system of money. The pound sterling is 10 florins; the shilling is half a florin, or fifty British cents. The British cents would seldom circulate, but they would be useful coins of account.—London Spectator.

MR. MOORE'S IDEAS ON MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT LIKES THREE YEAR TERM

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—I was pleased to read Mr. George Leader's letter in last evening's Examiner. Correspondence of this character will help on the advocacy of an improved form of municipal government. He seeks a three-year term for aldermen, without, however, a reduction of their number, and appears to disapprove of any compensation being provided for their services. Finally, he favours the "formation of a good live ratepayers' association" to advise and direct the Council. There is nothing very novel in these suggestions for ameliorating existing complaints, nor do I believe relief will be found, that will be satisfactory to citizens, from his propositions as a whole. A three-year term is unquestionably better than one or two, but little would come of the ratepayers' association. We have had a Board of Trade of sixty or seventy members for a number of years, which again represents representative men of the city. This Board has criticized the City Council, and offered advice on occasions, but the Board's actions and opinions have never, to my knowledge, been regarded by the Council, and a "ratepayers' association" would in its efforts most probably meet a like fate.

What I contend for is, (1) A three years' term; (2) the Council reduced to a Mayor and four aldermen, elected by the city at large; (3) members paid reasonable compensation for their services; (4) a paid commission created by the Council, (or by the people) for operation of the duties of one of the most important departments of the City's work, namely the Board of Works, for a term of not less than three years, or longer, with a reserved power of recall, and which commission, except in the matter of the amount of annual expenditure and general outline of action, to be separate from and altogether independent of the Council. Other departments could be dealt with in the same way if thought well of. Mr. Leader says properly that the Waterworks Commission only operates a department of city work. He approves of the conduct and work of the members of the Commission. I have named another department almost of equal importance. Why not deal with it likewise? Is there such a contrast between them that similar results would not occur? If so, what is it? I consider this vital, and look for a reply. That the members of our public city bodies should not be indemnified for sacrifice of time while County and Township Councils and the larger City Councils are, is an absurdity, and beyond explanation, except as a remnant of a former false notion in economy that must be removed. So long as this discrimination remains there will be little improvement no matter what form our City Government takes. The time of the proper men to fill the duties required is now-a-days too precious to be given to the public for nothing. If selected and not paid very superficial attention will, as in the past, be given. When the individual is paid for his time, in return for his labour, he is just placed on an equality with others who make no sacrifice. The sooner we recognize this view of the matter, the earlier will the people cease to complain of the shortcomings of those who serve us.

WONDERFUL ALASKA.

Looking For a Place to Fix Her Star in the Flag.

Nothing less than the dissolution of the nation will prevent the organization of the state of Alaska. In 1850, when California was admitted into the Union, she had no lines of railway, telegraph, trades or business connecting her with the other states and was thought to be only valuable for placer gold. Her agriculture and trade, her railroads and present grandeur have grown since her admission. Alaska is a greater country and richer in all its natural resources than California was in 1850. Alaska has more gold than California and Colorado, more copper than Montana and Arizona, more coal than Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio and more fish than all other American waters combined. Her output of gold and fish for last year amounted to nearly $32,000,000 and had increased from $15,000,000 in 1900. Her total cash trade with the rest of the United States for 1909 amounted to more than $52,000,000, while that between China and the United States amounted to only $48,000,000. She is a better customer to the merchants of the United States than Hawaii, Porto Rico or the Philippines. The trade value of every white man, woman and child in Alaska with the United States for 1909 amounted to $1,902.75, while that of every inhabitant in Hawaii amounted to only $277.66, Porto Rico to $48.51 and the Philippines to $3.30.

Alaska has a better climate and greater agricultural capacity than Norway, Sweden and Finland combined. Her rich and fertile valleys are capable of supporting a much larger population than that of the three countries named, without mentioning the population which will be supported by her mines and other natural resources. —James Wickersham in Collier's.

YOUNG OLD FOLKS.

The Change That Has Come in Men and Women in a Century.

There is no fact more striking than the way modern life is pushing back the period of old age. Less than a century ago a man was old at forty. You have only to pick up Jane Austen's novels to find gentlemen of thirty-five described as middle aged. At sixty they were gabbling in their dotage. And there is Mr. Pickwick—that dear, delightful, benevolent old gentleman of forty-five.

Fifty years ago when a man reached the age of forty-five he grew a beard under his chin, bought himself a pair of drab gaiters and a white neckcloth and spoke with anxious concern of the rising generation, whose manners were so different from those he had known as a "young man." In our generation thirty-two is outwardly indistinguishable from fifty-two, save in that the former has a slightly more youthful tint in its cheek and its waistcoat.

As for the fair sex, the genus old lady is all but extinct. The pretty, vivacious matron you admire at a garden party may have seen twenty-five or seventy summers. As Queen Alexandra not long since said to Mme. Adelina Patti, "We two are two of the youngest women in England." The illustrious royal example has been so sedulously followed that the ladies—always young, always active, always in the height of fashion—may be said to laugh in the very face of Father Time.—London Strand Magazine.

China's First Guillotine.

China has just received from France its first guillotine. It will be set up inside the new prison, as, according to recent regulations, executions will no longer be public. The penalty of death as laid down in the old code had six degrees—death by torture, immediate decapitation and exhibition of the head, immediate decapitation without exhibition of the head, decapitation after some months, immediate hanging and hanging after some months. According to the new code the death penalty is in four degrees—immediate decapitation, deferred decapitation, immediate hanging and deferred hanging.

HOW SHE PLAYED HIM.

A Story, the Moral of Which Is, Be Sure of Your Girl.

Young Jenkins took off the vest he had been wearing all day behind the neckwear counter, replaced it with one that looked as if it had been made out of a steamer rug and then went out to call on the little party with the taffy colored coiffure.

They sat on the divan and discussed various things, from Camembert cheese to musical comedy. Then they looked through her book of Gibson pictures again. They could hear the rumble and rattle of traffic on the silent street below.

The girl looked at Jenkins unblinkingly for several moments, at the same time picking up a wilted looking sofa cushion and stroking it carelessly. "It's nice to be able to talk as frankly with each other as we do sometimes," she murmured.

"Yes, indeed," Jenkins agreed in a noncommittal voice.

"I feel that I could tell you anything or say anything to you," she declared, still looking at him intently.

Jenkins squirmed in his seat as he told her, "I'm mighty glad that you feel just that way."

"Yes," says she, "and I think it's foolish for people to stand too much on convention when they have something on their minds and in their hearts that they think should be spoken."

"That's the way I've always sized it up," returned Jenkins.

"Well, then," she pursued, "what would you say if I were to assume that it is leap year just for tonight, and inasmuch as it is within woman's province during leap year to speak to a man—oh, you know—I mean what would you say if I just played this was leap year and"—

"I'd accept you!" exclaimed Jenkins, jumping to his feet. "You bet your sweet life I would! I'd never thought of having such a thing come from your own sweet lips, but I'd accept you, that's what I'd do!"

"And then," chuckled she as she flicked a moth miller off the divan, "I'd come right back, and just as I played it was leap year I'd play it was the 1st of April, and you would be the fool. No; I don't accept where I have to propose."—Fred C. Kelly in Puck.

"I hope you will accept my condolences," began Mr. Somber.

"Thank you," replied the widow of Mr. Gayrake.

"Yes," continued Mr. Somber, "we must remember that we must all go that way some day, and that"—

GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING

CLIMBING MOUNT ROBSON.

English Mountaineer and Swiss Guide Admits It Is Too Much For Him.

The mountain climber—the only one real aerial artists. Your aviator is not an artist—he doesn't work. The lank-haired chap who occasionally deluges editorial desks with beribboned manuscripts only imagines that his cranium is in the clouds. Really, the rustling femme charmante who strives for the high notes in the social scale approaches more to the climber.

Mr. A. L. Mumm, an Englishman, lately has been trying some high performing in the West at Yellowhead Pass out Rocky Mountain way. He has attempted to foot it up Mount Robson, whose peak pokes its head into the misty vapors seventeen thousand, five hundred feet above terra firma. That's somewhat harder than picking your way upstairs at two a.m. plus. The mountain climber has no engine to pump him up. He just digs his heels in the mud and climbs every step of the way. And when he gets there, and looks down at the ants and their mole hills! Monarch of all he surveys is your mountain climber in hackneyed phraseology. With head on the dome of heaven, he is statesman and poet rolled into one.

Mr. Mumm did not conquer Robson. He started out there in July, and for two months has been waiting for the snow to melt on the side of the monster. The slides on Robson frightened even his Swiss guide. Mumm has just returned to Edmonton and says that Robson is too much for him. He has given the project considerable of his time. Last year he and L. M. Amery, Earl Grey's journalistic friend, went out to Robson in August. They got into a snow storm and slide reminiscent of the glacial epoch. Messrs. Mumm and Amery climbed into their winter underwear and went home. Says Mumm:

"I think that Robson is a peak that will never be climbed very often." Robson has been captured once. A mild, retired clergyman, Rev. A. Kinney, and packer Phillips of the G.T.P. got to the top—nearly dropping their lives. The jaunt up and back took them two whole days.

Climber Mumm has done some tall work in the Alps. In the Rockies, his altitude record is eleven thousand feet made this summer on a neighboring hill of Robson's.

A Remedy Suggested.

The two things which struck the people who came in contact with Father Vaughan while he stayed in Canada were his vigor at the very practical nature of everything he said. He seemed to be a man who could not possibly deal in abstracts, which characteristic will doubtless keep him in the public eye. When he speaks he may always be counted upon to "say something," and he has the courage of his convictions, even when they do not prove very popular. One little anecdote about him indicates that he is equally practical in his actions, and does not believe in spending his time upon futile trips or in unproductive effort.

His schedule did not allow him to stay in Toronto as long as he would have liked, and his friends wished him to make some changes so as to see more of that city. He consulted Father Burke, who informed him that if he stayed in Toronto it would be necessary to curtail his visit to Niagara Falls.

"Well, I would not mind that," said Father Vaughan, "is there anything to see there except water?"

There is a sequel to this little incident, which shows that the now famous remarks about Protestantism displeased even some members of his own faith. They may have agreed with his views, but experience of living in a community of mixed religions had taught them to use a little tact in voicing some of their convictions. One of these priests, who doubtless feared a little hard feeling in his own parish, heard the remark of the practical English orator concerning Niagara Falls, but he did not seem at all amused by it. He may have resented the reflection upon Ontario's chief side-show, or the Montreal speech may have been worrying him. "He should have been told that it is an excellent place for some persons to soak their heads," was his only comment.

Kathleen Parlow's Success.

Kathleen Parlow, the brilliant Canadian violinist, has been having tremendous success on the continent says Musical Courier. At her recent appearance at the Kurhaus at Scheveningen, she met with extraordinary appreciation. The demand for admittance was so great that the prices for seats had to be extended far beyond the regular rates, but the place was crowded and the audience wildly enthusiastic. Miss Parlow is now in Norway and the press there has acclaimed her to be one of the greatest artists to visit that country. After the termination of her Norwegian tour she will return to Holland to fill some fifteen engagements, after which she will leave for the United States and Canada on a short tour.

Poor Boys' Academy.

J. J. Kelso, who looks after neglected children in Ontario, has an idea. He is advertising for $50,000 to carry it out. Mr. Kelso wishes to build a poor boys' academy. At present the poor boy takes a chance at the rich boys' school. That is the good poor boy. The bad poor boys are committed to the Industrial School, where they wear a uniform, and, as Mr. Kelso remarks, are placed under the stigma of the criminal. Mr. Kelso's suggestion is open to discussion. Would he mix good and bad poor boys at his academy?—Canadian Courier.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION AS IT IS OPERATED IN DES MOINES

"We can say after three years that municipal government by commission has been a great success as far as Des Moines has been concerned," remarked Mr. Chas. F. Leonard, the newly-appointed American Consular agent for Peterborough, in an interesting interview an Examiner reporter had with him the other day in regard to what is known as the Des Moines plan of municipal government. Mr. Leonard was a citizen of Des Moines for many years, knows the situation there thoroughly and is, therefore, able to speak with authority upon the subject. From him the Examiner was enabled to learn many interesting things about the plan that has proved so successful in the Iowa city.

"Our citizens became dissatisfied with the old method of doing municipal business," remarked Mr. Leonard. "The aldermen were elected by wards, politics crept into municipal matters and the business of the city was being not properly looked after. Several citizens happening to be in Galveston, Texas, on business, became interested in the form of government adopted by that city. They took their cue from Galveston and laid before the people of Des Moines the advantages that would be gained by a government by commission. The subject was widely discussed, more and more people became interested until finally it was decided to adopt the plan. Modifications and changes were made in the Galveston system and the measure finally adopted is now known all over the country as the Des Moines plan. The change was a beneficial one for municipal reform. The voting by wards was done away and the Commissioners, or rather, the Mayor and four commissioners were elected by the vote of the people of the whole city. The candidates were permitted to announce themselves through the press. Then the primary was held and the two obtaining the highest vote for mayor, and the eight the highest for Commissioners went before the people in the final election at which the Mayor and four commissoners were decided upon. The Commissioners of course, devote themselves entirely to the service of the city."

"What salaries are paid?" asked the reporter.

"The Mayor receives $3,500 and the Commissioners $3,000 each," was the reply.

"As I have said," continued Mr. Leonard, "the Commissioners give their whole attention to the city's affairs. From 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., you will find them hard at work in the city's welfare. Each has his own department to look after. One Commissioner is in charge of the Board of Works. It may be mentioned that the Commissioner who looks after this important department is a Canadian, Mr. John MacVicar, who was born in Guelph, Ont., and who is a man of wide experience and a most capable servant of the city. Another Commissioner has charge of the finances of the city, the assessment, etc., a third looks after public safety, and controls the fire department, and the police force. The fourth commissioner has in his charge the care of the parks and similar work. The Mayor acts as chairman of the Board and has the deciding vote in the case of a tie."

"As far as we have been able to see so far," remarked Mr. Leonard, "the result of the Des Moines plan has been a great success. The taxes are less, the city is better governed and there is no graft. Incidentally, our city has got a very considerable amount of advertizing as a result of the adoption of this form of government."

The Examiner is indebted also to Industrial Commissioner Duggan for permission to quote from a very interesting pamphlet entitled "A Year Under the Des Moines plan," extracts from which should be read with interest.

The booklet in question, in referring to the birth of the Des Moines plan says: "The committee appointed found the old form of city government unfitted to administer the public affairs of a commerce centre, and at once set about to draft a new system better adapted to perform the functions and duties of a municipality. They introduced new and common-sense business methods, included provisions for an effective expression of popular will and withal presented a system unique in character and representing the most advanced thought in local and self-government. By its provisions the entire responsibility of administering the public affairs of the city is placed upon a small governing board of five men, who are elected at large, without regard to wards, sectional lines of party politics. To this governing body is given large and important powers, including the authority to pass ordinances, to determine the duties and fix the salaries of city employees, to create or discontinue offices, remove subordinates and transfer employees from one office to another; in fact, they have all the authority, power and duties formerly held by the various boards, committees and officials of the old system. In order to secure simplicity and increased efficiency the work of the city has been divided into five departments and each of these departments is assigned that member of the board best fitted for the place, and he is made responsible for all matters coming within his jurisdiction. Thus is secured one of the principal features of the plan—centralization of power with a definite and fixed responsibility.

The introduction of business methods into the conduct of the city's affairs has been one of the things which has thus far characterized the administration of the Des Moines plan. Its business-like management has been in striking contrast with the unsatisfactory administration of public affairs under the old system, and has resulted in a saving of thousands of dollars to the tax-payers. The commissioners are devoting their entire time, thought and energy to the one great question of how to use the public funds entrusted to their care in the manner certain to provide the greatest possible good to the largest number and at the least expense to each individual tax payer.

The pamphlet concludes with the statement that after a careful investigation of the year's work the most conservative would not hesitate to say that the city of Des Moines has been economically managed in every way and that better results have been attained in every department under the Des Moines plan than was ever before obtained."

PLACE OF TRANSCONTINENTAL IN SCHEME OF TRANSPORTATION

The following is an excerpt from an address given by Senator Casgrave, C. E., before the Empire Club, Toronto, on Nov. 10th.

Now, as to the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Transcontinental. I will refer to a little later on. I tell you right now, that the Grand Trunk Pacific is being built on a higher standard than any road of the same length that ever has been built in the world. That is a big expression, but according to the reports of the best engineers it is an absolute fact. No road of this length has been built with such easy gradients or flat curves. * *

I spoke of the C.P.R. a few minutes ago, and I would like to remind you that this is no longer a modern road. It was 35 years ago since the first sod was turned on the banks of the Kaministiquia River. I know it well, for I was there as one of the engineers. In those days the engineers did not locate railways, as they do today. The idea then was to follow the surface and avoid as much as possible cuts and deep fills, and there was little consideration for the cost of operation. The C.P.R. have rebuilt from Port Arthur to Winnipeg, and from Winnipeg to Calgary. You can see the old roads as you go along in the train sometimes on the one side and sometimes on the other. But they cannot rebuild their line in the Rockies and the Selkirks or along the north shore of Lake Superior, or after you pass North Bay to Lake Superior. The C.P.R. cannot compete with a modern road. Near Field, B.C., there was a grade of 4 feet and four-tenths, or 200 feet to the mile, and it took several locomotives to push up a small freight train, and three or four for an ordinary passenger train. A very clever piece of engineering has been accomplished to reduce this grade, and it has been cut down to 2 feet and two tenths, or 116 feet to the mile, by means of a double spiral tunnel. A considerable grade still, you will say, but there was no object in having a smoother grade as the grade in the Selkirks is equally steep. You must remember that the C. P. R. in the Rockies has to ascend to a summit of 5,20 feet, and after climbing to this height it goes down again across the Columbia River to 2,500 feet, and then rises again to go over the Selkirks to 4,361 feet.

If you leave Quebec on the Transcontinental and go to Winnipeg, you have travelled only 1,350 miles, but if you leave Montreal by C.P.R., you have travelled 1,422 miles—72 miles more. It seems very strange to think that the people in Quebec will be 70 miles nearer Winnipeg than the people in the city of Montreal. Or, if you leave by C. P. R. from Quebec for Winnipeg, you have got to travel 1,585 miles—and by the Transcontinental line only 1350 miles — 235 miles less. If anyone will take the trouble to look up the map he can verify this very easily.

From Cochrane Junction—where the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway joins the Transcontinental Ry., the distance to Toronto or Quebec is practically the same. Therefore the mileage, via the Transcontinental to Winnipeg from Quebec or Toronto, will be about the same.

Cochrane Junction, as you probably know, is situated on a magnificent tableland or plateau, extending some 400 miles in the Province of Ontario and 200 miles in Quebec, almost level, over which the Transcontinental line is to pass—there is hardly any grade whatever. This plateau has an elevation of 1,100 to 1,200 feet and descends gradually to 800 feet at Winnipeg.

The soil in this tableland is rich clay, 15 to 20 feet in depth, and fertile like Manitoba, and anyone will admit that good wheat can be grown in Manitoba. From Winnipeg to Edmonton there is a beautiful road, of easy grades and a very few curves — 783 miles and from Edmonton to Wolfe River, a distance of 125 miles where the prairie ends. After that it is called the Mountain Section, but is not really so, for the grade is only 0-10 of one per cent., or 32 feet per mile. The elevation on the G. T. Pacific summit is only 3,708 feet, or 280 feet higher than the city of Calgary, which is today on the prairie. The grade to the summit is only 32 feet per mile enabling one locomotive to pull the heaviest train up to the top. I may say that the best of coal is being mined on both sides of the line for miles, which will be of great advantage in furnishing fuel.

Here you have splendid water power, which could be utilized at very little expense to electrify this part of the road. From the Fraser River to Fort George there is excellent farming land, practically all taken up before the advent of the railway. From Hazelton, 180 miles from Prince Rupert, the road is practically level. I rode through there last August for some 50 miles, and there is rich farming land along the banks of the Skenna River.

You can start at Yellowhead Pass and go to tidewater at Quebec without finding any adverse grades of more than 4-10 of one per cent., or 21 feet to the mile — something which people would not have believed possible some years ago. When the late John Charlton in a speech in Parliament said that railways in the future would be built with such grades, we thought he was a dreamer — that he was visionary—people said it could not be done. He has gone to his reward, but what he foresaw, and predicted for the future has actually taken place to-day. He said then that it would be possible for one locomotive to take 2,200 tons to tide water. Now if you take 2,200 tons and take off 1-3 which is a liberal allowance for weight of the cars, there remains a net load of 1,466 tons at 3 bushels to the ton you will have nearly 50,000 bushels of grain, in one train, pulled by one locomotive over any part of the whole system. You cannot equal this in any other part of the world. On the New York Central and the Pennsylvania Road, they have no such grades for any like distance—they have on some sections, but not for the entire system.

The total ascent attained and the adverse grades added together on the Grand Trunk Pacific from tidewater on the Pacific to tide-water on the Atlantic is only 7,000 feet, while on the Canadian Pacific between the same points the total ascent is 23,000 feet. (Question by President: How about the Canadian Northern?) I suppose it would go about 14,000 feet.

Now let me enunciate a truism; material wealth is but the transformation of the raw material of nature into useful commodities, and their transportation from the place they are produced to the place they are wanted. Therefore you see that an indispensable requirement of material wealth is easy transportation. It is the very foundation of all prosperity.

MR. JOSEPH FELS TO GIVE TWO LECTURES IN CITY

Wealthy English Soap Manufacturer Will Speak on His Favourite Subject of Tax Reform.

A NOTABLE CHARACTER

One of the most unique figures before the world today is Mr. Joseph Fels, the Naptha Soap millionaire, who is to address two meetings in Peterborough, in December. On Tuesday evening, Dec. 13, Mr. Fels will address the Board of Trade, and on Wednesday evening, Dec. 14, a public meeting is being arranged by the members of the Brotherhood of St Pauls, of St Paul's church. Mr. Fels is said to be giving in the neighbourhood of $100,000 a year to movements for Tax Reform throughout the world.

"Fels has made money," writes Lincoln Steffens in the October American"; soap, too, but mainly money, very much money.

"It was some twenty years ago that Joseph Fels began making money fast. For years before that he had been in the soap business, but in 1890 he struck the naptha compound that is now known in households wherever the English language is spoken.

"Then Fels has made money out of land, too, buying land and holding it for a rise.

"It's so easy," he laughs; "Just as easy as stealing."

"Unlike many other rich men who have repented, Fels gives nothing to charity. Charity, he says, merely creates a demand for more charity. Fels deals with causes.

"The trouble with those men, he says, is that they don't know how they get their money. They think they earn it. I know how I got it. I want to make men like me impossible.

"For Fels realizes that the same causes that make millionaires make paupers, and he is endeavouring to remove those causes.

"Chief among those causes he sees is our tax system. Fels is a Single Taxer, a follower of Henry George. He believes that the value given to land by the presence of the community, whether the land is used or not, should be made the basis of taxation.

"And this is what makes Fels unique among the wealthy class of today, for he gives both his time and his money to removing the causes.

"While in Canada, Mr. Fels will address public meetings in Toronto, Berlin, Peterborough and Montreal, and also the Canadian Club at London.

"And to accomplish this great purpose, Mr. Fels challenges the people everywhere to match him dollar for dollar, as he puts it, to the extent of his sway."

PROF. CHANT TELLS OF THE SOLAR UNION CONVENTION

Interesting Address Last Evening Before the Peterborough Centre of the Royal Astronomical Society.

ENJOYABLE EVENING

The regular meeting of the Royal Astronomical Society was held in the Lecture room of the Collegiate Institute last night. A comparatively large audience prevailed. Prof. C A. Chant gave a very interesting account of his trips to California to the convention of the Solar Union held there last summer. Slides, showing pictures of the numerous places where he and his party called were shown, and he gave a very interesting description of each. He textured one place in particular, the observatory on Mount Wilson. This has 5,000 feet elevation and was established in 1904. It is known as the Carnegie Institution of Washington, as that gentleman supplied funds to the amount of $12,000,000 toward constructing it. To use the speaker's own words in referring to this observatory, he said: "It is not like a regular observatory at all. It has instruments especially adapted to making observations of the sun. The instruments installed are of enormous proportions. One telescope, in particular, used especially for looking at the sun, has a sixty inch mirror, and the instrument itself weighs about six tons. This whole instrument, is supported on a float in mercury. It is adjusted, all by motors, having about fourteen motors in all. To bring this enormous instrument to its elevated perch, it was necessary to make a road, just for this purpose, up the mountain. This road is only eight feet wide and will not allow two vehicles to pass. As a consequence, any person going up or coming down must first telephone to see "if the road is clear."

A number of lantern slides showing the inside of the observatory and the telescopes, were shown, and were much appreciated by the audience. He also showed a picture of the vertical telescope observatory. This is an enormous structure 150 feet high and with a shaft 80 feet deep sunk at its base, the mirror is placed at the bottom of this shaft and the sun is mirrored in it from a large reflector at the crest of the structure. Prof. Chant gave a full description of how this tower is constructed and the reasons for its being constructed in such a peculiar manner. He also gave an account of many other visits he had paid to observatories and concluding by wishing the local Society every success. He said that the people of Toronto were glad to know that the Peterborough centre was growing and many other congratulatory remarks. orw congratulatory remarks were made.

It was regretted that Rev. Dr. Marsh was unable to be present. The chairman stated that two new members had been admitted to the Society. Rev. Dr. Langfeldt was one and the name of the other member was not available. The meeting was a very successful one, and future prospects are bright for the Society.

DANDRUFF DON'T WASH OUT.

The Germ That Causes It Has to Be Destroyed, to Cure Dandruff.

Many a woman spends an hour twice a week scouring her scalp, thinking that by scrubbing off the scurf she will cure dandruff. Two hours a week, at the age of 40 years, she has spent 260 days of 12 hours each, or two-thirds of a year of her life, in that vain hope; vain because you can't cure dandruff without killing the dandruff germ, and the only hair preparation on earth that will do that is Newbro's "Herpicide"—also a delightful hair dressing, and thorough antiseptic against all contagion from use of other's hair brushes. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c. in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

For sale by McDermid and Jury, druggists; also Payne's drug store. 50 bottles guaranteed.

Decline of the Mustache.

Permission to wear a mustache was eagerly sought after in the middle of the last century. But now the virile decoration is discarded. Why? In those old days the Bank of England would not allow its employees to wear it and issued an order which might have come more appropriately from a bank of Ireland. It was to the effect that the mustache was not to be worn in business hours! A large drapery firm in London objected not only to the mustache, but to hair parted down the middle. There is more tolerance now. Men look younger when clean shaved. They are also more readable without the protection given by the mustache to the upper lip. If hearts can be worn on sleeves thoughts can be read on upper lips. But is it always wise to leave the legend unbidden? Men seldom like to be divined, as La Rochefoucauld remarked once and for all time.—London Express.

An Old Alarm Clock.

At Schramberg, in the Black Forest, there is a respectable alarm clock that warned sleepers it was time to get up when Charles I. was king of England. This was made in 1630, and it is deemed a remarkable piece of workmanship. In form it resembles a lantern wherein is a lighted candle, the wick of which is automatically clipped every minute by a pair of scissors. The candle is slowly pushed upward by a spring, which also controls the mechanism of the clock, and at the required hour of waking an alarm is sounded, and at the same time the movable sides of the lantern fall, and the room is flooded with light.

A Spurned Gift.

A charity expert was discussing promiscuous almsgiving.

"Promiscuous giving," he said, "is money thrown away. Nothing should be given to beggars except work. A friend of mine said the other day to a beggar:

"'I can't give you any money, my poor fellow, but if you call at my house I'll give you plenty of work.'

"'Thanks,' the beggar answered. 'I've got plenty of that at home.'"

Work of the Beavers.

The formation of the plateau on which Dubois is built is a matter of great curiosity. Beavers are responsible for it. Long before the white men saw that section of Pennsylvania beavers built a huge dam in a well set valley. Year by year the stream washed rich mud into the dam, and when the body of water was destroyed 640 acres of land flat as a table top were left. On this stands Dubois.—Altoona Tribune.

His Hardships.

"I suppose," said the kind lady as she handed the husky hobo a generous wedge of apple pie, "that your lot is full of hardships?"

"Dat's de proper word fer it, ma'am," replied the h. h. "In de winter w'en de farmers ain't doin' nothin' but eatin' apples an' drinkin' hard cider it's too cold fer me to be trampin' aroun', an' in de summer people's allers offerin' me work."—Chicago News.

MAN'S WILL POWER.

Bismarck's Comment on Schopenhauer and His Theory.

In an entertaining account of a dinner party at Prince Bismarck's Berlin residence which is given in the recollections of the Livonian journalist Eckhardt the following, which was a part of the table talk, shows the host in a new light: The conversation had turned on Bismarck's early days at Frankfort, and Eckhardt asked whether at the table d'hote of the Hotel d'Angleterre his host had ever met Schopenhauer. "No," said Bismarck; "he had no use for me nor I for him. Moreover, I have never had time or desire to occupy myself with philosophy. While I was a student Schopenhauer was still unknown. I know absolutely nothing about his system."

Another guest, an admirer of Schopenhauer, then joined enthusiastically in the conversation and explained that the philosopher's great merit consisted in the discovery of the fact that will power was the indestructible essence of the mind of man and that intelligence was only of secondary importance. "That may very well be true," said Prince Bismarck, "at least as far as I am concerned, for I have often noticed that my will had already come to a decision while my mind had not yet finished thinking about the same subject."

VENETIAN WOMEN.

The Whims of Fashion Hold No Terrors For Them.

The women of Venice are absolutely free from the rule which Dame Fashion exercises over their sisters elsewhere. They care nothing for modes. With them the length of the skirt remains always the same, neither short nor long, and they always wear plainly made dark dresses, black stockings and the heelless slippers of the east. Hats are unknown.

The universal outdoor wrap for all ages and all sizes is the black shawl, with a deep silken fringe. It is folded with a short point above and a long one below, and sometimes it envelopes the figure from head to foot. It is never fastened at the throat, and when it slips off it is gathered up with one outstretched arm, which makes the spectator think of a big bird stretching its wing.

In their attire the women of Venice are independent, only wearing local clothing, but with feminine inconsistency they are thoroughly up to date in the matter of hairdressing, the style of their coiffures changing from time to time, according to the vogue of the moment in London and Paris.

Identified.

William M. Chase, the artist, was a picturesque figure, dressing in clothes that had a certain originality, though they conformed more or less to the prevailing fashions. On one occasion Chase on his way home stepped into a little wine shop and ordered a jug of claret of a special brand sent to his house. The lad who brought it came to the front door an hour afterward, when the artist had already arrived. "Some wine," he said curtly. The maid, knowing there was yet plenty in the cellar and believing the lad had made a mistake, said she was sure it was not for that house and did the boy remember the name of the man who ordered it. The boy didn't. "Then," said the servant, "you're come to the wrong place; we never ordered wine!" At this moment the boy spied Chase's famous hat on the hall table. "Say," he asked, "does that hat live here?" "Yes," said the amused maid. "Then," said the boy triumphantly, "here's where the wine belongs!"—Argonaut.

Not For Fashion's Sake.

The criminal law of England was formerly marked by indiscriminating severity. Theft of an article valued above 10 shillings was punished with death. In writing about "Sweet Hampstead and Its Associations" Mrs. White records a pleasant thing of Lord Mansfield, who, as a rule, leaned to the side of mercy. It was Lord Mansfield who directed a jury to find a stolen trinket less in value than 10 shillings in order that the thief might escape capital punishment. To this the jeweler who prosecuted demurred, asserting that the fashion of the thing had cost him twice that money.

"Gentlemen," replied the judge, with grave solemnity, "we ourselves stand in need of mercy. Let us not hang a man for the fashion's sake!"

MacMahon's Epigram.

When Marshal MacMahon in the Crimean campaign took the Malakoff by storm and wrote his celebrated dispatch, "J'y suis; j'y reste" ("Here I am; here I stay"), these words made him famous all over the world. Yet his friends said that the worthy soldier had written them in the most matter of fact manner, with no thought of phrase making. The most surprised person over the success of this epigram was MacMahon himself.

Her Observation.

"Did you know," said the scientific boarder, "that a clock ticks faster in winter than in summer?"

"No; I wasn't aware that a clock does," answered the landlady, "but I know a gas meter does."—Chicago News.

The Oldest Lieutenant.

The Earl of Ducie, now that Lord Spencer is no more, becomes the oldest living lord-lieutenant, having served in that capacity for Gloucestershire since 1869. He is also the doyen of the Privy Councillors, joining their honored ranks in 1869; thus serving under three sovereigns. It is curious to contemplate the fact that Lord Ducie was appointed lord-lieutenant by Palmerston and to run over the list of premiers who have come and gone since that remote time.

The Dulcies trace their descent to Robert Dulcie, one time Sheriff of London, who was given a baronetcy in 1629, and who, two years after, was Lord Mayor of London. He was the favorite banker of King Charles I., to whom he had the honor of lending $400,000, which, it is said to record, he had to wipe out as a bad debt, for he never got a penny of it.

Nevertheless, he succeeded in leaving $2,000,000 to the son who followed him in the baronetcy. This son became Viscount Downe at the coronation of Charles II., but, as he died without issue, his wealth went to a niece, who married a Moreton of Moreton, and whose son was the first Baron Ducie.

Lord Ducie spends most of his time at his beautiful Gloucester-shire place Totworth Court. It is a modern house built by his father, but stands in a great park, which contains an imposing Spanish chestnut tree with a trunk of twelve feet in diameter. It was considered a venerable tree in the days when Stephen, the usurper was King of England.

The Doctor's Bad Memory.

This story is told of Dr. Parrie, the great Scottish surgeon, in "Recollections of Fifty Years":

"Once when a lady patient entered his consulting room he received her with effusion, crying:

"'My dear madam, I have done nothing else but think over your case. I could not get a wink of sleep all last night for thinking of you.'

"The lady accepted it all as 'gospel truth,' and after some professional questions and answers she innocently remarked:

"'Was it not a dreadful thunderstorm last night, Dr. Parrie?'

"'So I am told,' he naively answered, 'but I'm such a sound sleeper that I didna hear a clap o't.'"

Governed by Ancestors.

The Gauchos of South Africa believe that their ancestors, whose wishes are interpreted by the sorcerers, direct and govern every act of the people. They find auguries, too, in the flight of birds, particularly in the night hawk and the eagle, the writhing of the serpents, the timidity of the mole, the changing colors of the chameleon, the barking or actions of dogs and foxes and even the circumstance of a pest of flies. If a native shudders involuntarily the act is regarded as a sign that some misfortune is about to befall him.

Would Make a Big City.

Were Berlin and Waterloo to unite now, the new city thus formed would jump ahead of the smaller cities, right on the heels of Kingston and Brantford. Waterloo's returns show an increase for the year of 106, and the present population is 4,620, which, with Berlin's 14,600, leaves less than 400 necessary to pass the 20,000 mark. In ten years the increase of Berlin alone was 4,914, so that it is now considerably larger than were the two towns together a decade ago.

Divorce Shows Great Increase In Canada

The applications for divorce at the coming session of Parliament number twenty-seven, a record number, it is said. Last year there were twenty-five applications of which twenty were granted. The average for the past ten years has been about ten a year.

The Woodstock Sentinel Review says that no doubt the time will come when the divorce question of the country will force itself upon both the people and the politicians. The present method of applying for a private bill can scarcely be said to be satisfactory, even in its results. Common sense would seem to suggest a properly constituted court with a carefully defined and closely restricted list of cases.

A glance at a recent issue of the Canada Gazette show the following applications for divorce:

Pauline Verina Meyer, of the city of Toronto, from her husband, Henry Meyer, of the township of Uxbridge, county of Ontario, farmer.

Mary Gertrude Grantham, of the city of Toronto, from her husband, Arthur Myles Grantham, of the same place, contractor.

Walter Harvey Kirkland, of the town of St. John, Quebec, commercial traveller, from his wife, Eva Ida Browning, of the city of Montreal.

Hugh Samuel Bell, of Waskada, Manitoba, farmer, from his wife, Emma Morrison Webber, of the same place.

Maggie Florence Saddler, of Toronto, from her husband, Walter A. Saddler, barrister, of Toronto.

Matilda Emo, of the city of Montreal, from her husband, Peter Henry Hill and of Quebec, machinist.

James Hatton Glen Turnbull, of Calgary, yard master, from his wife, Gladys Lily Turnbull, now of 20 Throgmorton street, London, England.

Jane Bishop, bank manager, formerly of Swift Current, but now of London, is mentioned as co-respondent.

Zenon St. Aubin, of the city of Montreal, master plumber, from his wife, Dame Marie Anysie Trudeau, of Montreal.

Georgina McLean, of Gilbert Plains, Manitoba, clerk from her husband, Thomas McLean, of Vancouver, hotelkeeper.

THE DESTRUCTIVE CARP COMING DOWN CANAL

(By Deckhand.)

To those who have given the matter any degree of thought, it is quite evident that the fish commonly called carp are about to play havoc with the various lakes and rivers that comprise the Trent waterway, in so far as this district being looked upon as the sportsman's paradise is concerned.

Some few years ago carp were unknown to most people along the line of the Trent Canal. To-day one can find this fish in any of the streams from Kirkfield to Rice Lake. Their destroying effect on other fish will soon be felt, and the various lakes and rivers adjacent to Peterborough will be seriously affected.

These carp have come down from Lake Simcoe. As to how they came to that lake in the first place, the writer does not know. It may be that they were placed there intentionally, with the idea that they were a good fish for that body of water. The fact remains, however, that with the opening of the Trent Canal, from Lake Simcoe to Balsam Lake, these fish travelled over to Kirkfield, slowly but gradually got locked over the height of land and were soon down in to Balsam Lake. From Balsam Lake they have travelled on down the canal and can now be found in all of the lakes and rivers to Hastings.

The carp is a most destructive fish and is bound to kill off the huge bass and other fish that afford such good sport to the anglers of this district.

The destructive nature of carp is not confined to the killing of fish alone. The rice beds of our lakes and rivers are beginning to suffer. In the section of the canal that stretches from Balsam Lake to Lake Simcoe, are hundreds of acres of flooded land. Some years ago the government very wisely sowed wild rice in these areas. The rice came up splendidly and the indications for a time were that the flooded reaches below Kirkfield would prove to be a splendid duck shooting district. But the destructive nature of the carp became evident in this respect as well, and to-day there is scarcely a stalk of wild rice to be seen along this stretch. It has all been rooted out and eaten by these gluttonous fish. The frogs, too, are disappearing. One can now scarcely hear the croak of a frog between Gamebridge and Kirkfield, where a few years ago there were thousands. The Lake Simcoe-Balsam Lake section is being depleted of every living thing excepting carp.

The same destruction that has come over the other fish, the frogs and the rice above Kirkfield, will soon be in evidence between Balsam Lake and Trenton. The carp is gradually taking possession of our waters and a serious state of affairs confronts us.

SHALL HOLLOW LAKE WATERS COME THIS WAY?

Shall the waters of Hollow Lake flow into the Gull River, and come down the Trent Waterway, or shall they continue as at present, to flow into the east branch of the Muskoka River, then into the Lake of Bays, and finally into the Muskoka Lakes and Georgian Bay? This is a question which has just recently been raised and one which will undoubtedly command a great deal of discussion.

Hollow Lake is a fair sized body of water, having an area as large, if not larger, than Sturgeon Lake, and there is no doubt that the water that flows therefrom, if diverted this way, would prove an important factor in its relation to the power and navigation interests on the Trent Canal. A glance at the map shows that this lake is located in the County of Haliburton. To be precise it might be stated that it is surrounded by the Townships of McClintock and Livingston.

It is separated from the other lakes of Haliburton County by a ridge of land that divides the rainfall of that back country, sending some of the water down the Gull River into the Trent Canal, and sending the remainder thereof by way of Hollow Lake, the east branch of the Muskoka River, the Lake of Bays, Muskoka Lakes, Georgian Bay, and after passing through Lake Huron, Lake St. Clair, Lake Erie, Niagara River, joins its old neighbouring waters at Trenton on Lake Ontario. Yet the points at which these waters start their respective journeys to the Atlantic—perhaps not more than a mile apart.

It is not the purpose of this article to deal with the merits of the contention that the natural outlet of Hollow Lake is by way of the Gull River. It is merely for the purpose of reciting the arguments as made by those who allege that such is the case. There is no question, however, as to great benefits that would accrue to the various interests on the Trent Canal if the waters were diverted this way.

It is claimed, and it might be stated, claimed in no uncertain manner by Col. Hughes, of Lindsay, that the natural outlet for the waters of Hollow Lake, and the adjoining height of land plateau, was through Minden Bay, at the south west corner of that lake, into Trout Lake, Sonoras Lake and the Gull River. The waters of these two last mentioned lakes do, of course, at the present time, flow into the Gull River. It is alleged that for many years the waters of Hollow Lake found their outlet in this direction, and that no water flowed from Hollow Lake into the east branch of the Muskoka River, although the head of that stream must have been very close to Hollow Lake. It is claimed that in the early days, when the lumbermen were practically the administrators of the north country, the flow of water was diverted to suit the requirements of certain lumbering interests. The lumbering interests on the Gull River waters were not then very extensive, a great portion of the lumbering at that time having been carried on on the Black River, which has its source close to the Gull river watershed, and flows down into Lake Simcoe. The natural channel from Hollow Lake to Trout Lake on the Gull River was blocked, it is alleged, by being filled in with mud, brush and rock. Therefore, for a number of years the waters of Hollow Lake flowed down the Black River into Lake Simcoe, instead of by way of the Gull River and the Trent Canal.

Then came another move. The same interests that were lumbering on the Black River were some years later operating on the Muskoka district and they required more water. They struck upon a plan—a further juggling with the Hollow Lake watershed. A channel was cut across a narrow strip of land that separated the Muskoka River from Hollow Lake and still another outlet was found for the Hollow Lake waters. From that time until the present, the waters of Hollow Lake have flowed incessantly into the Lake of Bays, the Muskoka Lakes and on down over Niagara. The channel of the Black River met with the same fate as the natural channel to the Gull River.

In later years this proved a very serious handicap to the Gilmour Company, who had limits on the Lake of Bays, but whose mills were at Trenton. Had the Hollow Lake waters then been flowing out of their natural channel to the Gull River, the Gilmour Company would have been saved many thousands of dollars. In order to get their logs into the Gull River waters, they were obliged to build at a great expense, a transhide, by which they only partially succeeded in bringing their logs over the ridge. The Gilmour people made an attempt at the time to have the waters of Hollow Lake restored to their natural channel but the Muskoka interests were dominant.

It is contended now, that with the disappearance of the timber, other important interests have arisen, namely, navigation and electrical power along the Trent Canal, and the waters of Hollow Lake should be restored to their natural channel. The matter has been drawn to the attention of the Ontario Government, under whose jurisdiction the matter largely rests, and the outcome of the agitation will be awaited with interest. The question is an important one to the people of this district, who would, of course, be glad to have the advantage of the increased flow of water. At the same time there is, no doubt, that the question as to whether the waters of Hollow Lake did flow this way, will have have to be clearly established.

The "old timers" in Haliburton County, and the Muskoka district will now come into prominence. Their memories will have to be brushed up. No doubt, some one will come forward and declare that he remembers when a boy, his father telling him about going on square timber from Hollow Lake to Quebec, by way of the Gull River and Balsam Lake. There will be a battle of memories against memories. In the meantime, the waters of Hollow Lake will flow into Georgian Bay and assist in turning the big turbine wheels of the power plants at Niagara, contributing its little share in the building up Welland, when it should be adding to the development of electrical energy on the Trent Canal, and doing its little share in building towns of this district.

There is no doubt that there are many people who assert that the waters of Hollow Lake did originally come by way of the Gull River, and that they were wrongfully diverted to Muskoka. If such is the case, the people of the Trent Canal Districts will insist that the original channel be restored. The fight is now on.

My eyes had dark circles under them and were puffed and swollen. I was so ill I could hardly drag myself around to do my housework.

"A neighbour advised me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills, and I found relief in the first box. Six boxes made me perfectly well."

Some Trent Canal Items Of Interest

The Hastings Star contains the following items in connection with canal construction work at that point:

The Maple Leaf on Monday, met with a mishap which will likely end her career, as she ran into the ice on near Oake's Rock and pulled most of her caulking out along the water line. She started to fill and was beached and now lies on the bottom.

The river below is frozen so that the government bunch could not get down to Trent Bridge and things look very much like navigation being soon closed up for the season.

The Rainbow managed to free herself from the ice in Birdsall Bay on Monday afternoon and bucked her way down to the bridge by Tuesday morning and assisted in getting the Maple Leaf up. The Maple Leaf will be taken down to the shipyard and her machinery and boilers pulled out of her for use in the new tug, which the R. M. Co. will build this winter.

The dredge has finished her season's operations and now has a cut in the channel finished almost to the lower buoys.

A second concrete mixer is being put up near the lock house and a gravel dump started where it will be handiest for the construction of the new dam in the spring.

The concrete wall is now almost complete from above the bridge to the lower end of the coffer dam, and this will be used in the spring as a coffer dam for the completion of the wall on the north east end of the lock which will run some distance east of the foundry.

The cribs for the coffer dam across the head of the race have been sunk and loaded with stone, ready for piling, and when this is done, the last section of the approach wall to the lock can be built.

HIS MAJESTY HAS NO KINGLY ENTANGLEMENTS

King George has been provoked at last into replying, through his secretary, to an oft-repeated tale that years ago his Majesty contracted a morganatic marriage. "This outrageous lie," says the London correspondent of the Liverpool Courier, "has obtained a long start, and it is difficult to overtake, but it is to be hoped that we have heard the last of it now that Sir Arthur Biggs has denied it in terms which admit of no possible misapprehension."

"You have my authority for stating," Sir Arthur says, "in whatever manner you may thing fit, that King George was never married, morganatically or otherwise, until July 6, 1893, when, as Duke of York, he married Princess Victoria Mary of Teck, his present Majesty. Moreover, nothing in his Majesty's life could give the slightest ground for the conception of such a cruel and wicked lie."

In view of this definite statement, the action of a Sunday paper in offering a reward of £1,000 "to any person who can afford any proof whatever of this abominable charge" will probably be withdrawn.

The offer is somewhat open to misconstruction, and when the editor made it he does not appear to have been in possession of Sir Arthur Biggs's indignant refutation. It seems that Socialistic scandalmongers have been spreading the slander in the parks, and the journalistic reward was offered in order to prevent further discreetful aspersions in public places.

This is not the first time that the King's integrity has been openly defended. A few months ago the Archbishop of York described King George as "a man of regular, disciplined, and abstemious life, and an example to every man," while Dr. Moule, Bishop of Durham, denounced as "absolute fiction" the rumours that his Majesty was not strictly temperate, and that he had been morganatically married.

At The Sign Of The Wooden Leg

By "SILAS WEGG"

On the Soul and Such Things.

It is charged against Ella Wheeler Wilcox that she wrote a poem beginning,

My soul is a lighthouse keeper.

The evidence is circumstantial, since the poem as published began with the line,

My soul is a light housekeeper.

The glory of this second version may belong to Ella or to the printer. Let the hired critics fight it out. For my own part I would grudge the eminent lady poetess (I wish both these words retained in this sentence, Mr. Printer), I would grudge her no fame that might come by accident through a printer's error. Too seldom do they mete the Wilcoxes and the Weggs such measure. Many a time and oft, on the contrary, have I beheld an epoch-marking epigram of my invention translated by some printer into an epoch-ending epitaph on my intelligence. No table of errata, addenda or corrigenda can redeem a thought once sullied through the printer's negligence. Tables of errata, forsooth! It is at such tables that we eat our humble pi warmed over for a second meal.

But I must be calm and talk on the subject chosen for this fortnight's sermon. Let me repeat the text:

My soul is a light housekeeper.

It is a "nail on which I would hang a few thoughts," as the Rev. Obadiah was wont to say. You are all invited to the execution.

In the first place, what is the difference, Mr. Johnsing, between a lighthouse keeper and a light housekeeper? The difference between a lighthouse keeper and a light housekeeper, Mr. Bones, is that one would guard the mariner and the other would marry the gardener, only she is already married and he refuses to supply carrots by the cents worth and to split a cabbage in two when a whole head lasts a week.

Light housekeeping, my friends, I may say, forsaking the vulgar mannerisms of the cadman, is the apotheosis of the hand-to-mouth system of existence, the simple life without the bother of simplicity. It consists mainly in sleeping in a bookcase and cooking sausages over a kerosene lamp or a broiler made of hairpins. For unmarried girls, such as those in the civil service, this is like rehearsing the marriage ceremony, a pretty drama that may give place to reality at any time; but for wedded folks it is like stage life behind the scenes where the meagreness of the presentation is apparent in contrast to the life that is denied the actors.

So much for the thing taken literally. Let us seek its spiritual analogues. And here we find two classes of souls trying to solve or circle the problem of existence on a light housekeeping basis. One class chooses light housekeeping, the other has it chosen for them.

Had I not been so prodigal of my scanty store of Shakespeare on a former occasion, I would hold you up now to inform you that some souls are born light housekeepers, some achieve light housekeeping, and some have light housekeeping thrust upon them. Leaving the idiot and the poet, nascitur, non fit, you know) to represent the first of these latter groups, I shall still give a Shakesperian touch to my classification, Le us then consider, first, those who choose, or achieve, light housekeeping; second, those who have light housekeeping chosen for or thrust upon them.

Featherwaite is representative of the first class. You know him by name if not by sight. His name outweighs his appearance. Yet he makes a fair usher at a wedding, as ushers go, and "joined to two he fails not to make three." His life has been devoted entirely to light housekeeping and to improvements therein. Speaking in terms of the soul, he now gets on without even a chafing dish, once considered the sine qua non of the cult. He obtains his thoughts and opinions, so far as his humming-bird soul needs such, ready to eat and in small parcels. It horrifies hi m to see a man take a square meal. "Bah Jove," exclaims Featherwaite, "what a liver he must have."

Men who tackle solid problems are grouped by Featherwaite all under the one term of Socialist. This damning epithet is applied alike to the man who aspires to be a school trustee and the man who wishes to nationalize the telegraphs. They think too much, such men are dangerous, would Featherwaite say if he knew the classics as well as he knows his Town Topics. And the danger is greater, in his eyes, to the thinker than to the community. "I have a little work to do to-night," said a friend of mine to Featherwaite one day. "Be careful, urged Featherwaite, "you shouldn't burn the candle at both ends."

There you have it. That is the light housekeeping philosophy in its most popular form. So studious is Featherwaite and his compeers in seeing that the two ends of the candle are not alight at the same time that they never put match to either end, never know in fact that green mould is eating out the wax and the wick is returning to its antidiluvian primeval atoms.

"The game is not worth the candle," says Featherwaite, if you are not in the duplex-illuminating business, but only working the statutory eight hours. A bird in the hand is always worth two in the bush to Featherwaite, and the activity of the rolling stone is entirely disproportionate, in his judgment, to the quantity of moss accumulated in its circumvolutions.

Add to these articles of faith one other, viz., that a live dog is better than a dead lion, and I need hardly say more about Featherwaite. He has lived thirty years. Grant him a score or so more and he will have solved the one problem to which he has devoted himself, the problem of living undisturbed by thought. The Nirvana of second childhood will at last receive him into its ether of oblivion. He will lie down for an aeon or two till the Master of all light housekeepers shall set him at work anew with his single fork and a can of sardines. This labour will consume another aeon. Sic semper tinearmis, and we come to the second division of our theme.

Who, now, are those that have light housekeeping thrust upon them? Many of them are night watchmen who cannot appreciate a home, since there is no home without lamp light, and many are fellows like Muggins whose plans are those of their wives. I am still speaking in terms of the soul.

Muggins is the son of a Methodist minister and had a year at the University. He entered the civil service because Pa was the spiritual adviser of Spouter, M. P. That was long before the days of Adam. He used to read Carlyle and Gunter, mostly Gunter, when he first came to Ottawa. Then he married. He does not even read The Civilian now. His wife reads the front pages of the newspapers to him and such sections of the inside sheets as are edited by Murphy-Poulin Ltd.

Muggins is not a stranded wreck; he is rather a floating derelict that may drift into some friendly current and be borne homeward in time. This is as chance will have it. With some repairs and a better crew he might pass muster at Lloyd's once more.

But into what a state of vacuity has Muggins come, all because Mrs. Muggins is a light housekeeper! (The printer must be careful here among my shifting metaphors and not be writing "lighthouse keeper" as Mrs. Muggins' title, for she is neither a beacon set on a hilltop nor yet a candle under a bushel, but merely Mrs. N. O. Muggins.) She detests a man who "has his nose stuck in a book; you can never get a word out of him." By the same token she never gets a word out of Muggins, mainly because she does not want words from him. What she expects of him is his pay cheque properly endorsed and a due carefulness about bringing, or not bringing, mud on his boots into the 4x6 entry.

Has Muggins any opinions at all about things? Muggins, dear friends, has none. He gave up opinions along with Gunter. Yet he respects yours and wishes that he had room in his flat for some like them. Secretly he abhors the two-cups and two-chairs existence ordained by his bigger half. He has some remembrance left of that old home of his with its spare bed and extension table. Mrs. (Rev.) Muggins always had a clean napkin in reserve for the unexpected guest, and our Muggins has not entirely relinquished the dreams of entertaining angels unawares, although he has long since given up the practice of erecting altars to the Unknown God.

Mr. Featherwaite prides himself on his mode of life. It is his "achievement" as we found out. Muggins is apologetic. "Well, now, sun that be so?" he askes, or rather says, when you make some trifling remark to him. "I never thought of it in that way before. One must live and learn. I haven't the time you know, to look these things up." Neither he has. He has time only to adjust the rear hooks in Mrs. Muggins' dress and to rinse the tumblers in the wash bowl.

I met Muggins walking alone by the canal one night. I was surprised. He told me his wife's mother was spending a few days with his wife and he was out for a stroll while they made up his bed in the bathroom. That hour by the canal was Muggins' holiday. He looked at the stars and said there were more of them than he thought. His intellect expanded in the open air and he ventured a guess at the number of the planets. He named Mars and felt ashamed at his temerity. The next time I met him he was back in his shell. Mrs. Muggins had triumphed over the starlight.

This theme offers many sides for treatment, but the upper half of my hour-glass is empty I will add but one observation. Light housekeeping, after all, is better than sponging on the old folks, and it can't be worse than having your dinner served on the overgrown arm of a quick-lunch chair.

Observations In General

A manufacturing concern which has a half-million-dollar plant in Pittsburg, Pa., and has taken out letters of incorporation in this province, may locate its new works in Orillia. The Council of that town has offered a free site and other terms of a favourable character, and the principals of the Company, who were there several days this week, were much impressed with the town and what they saw. A decision will probably be arrived at before the end of the week.

News reached here on Monday evening over the wires that a sad accident happened at Ballyduff, Township of Manvers. Mr. Hilton Beggs was cleaning out his well and was some distance down in it when it caved in, the report says he was not smothered instantly, as he gave the men on the top directions how to dig for him, but it is said by the men his feet were held and he could not free himself in any way, and the sand kept coming in until it covered him. He leaves a wife and two children to mourn his loss which is very sad.—Millbrook Reporter.

Notice to Fat Women

Presumably you know, ladies, that the proper caper nowadays is lines. Curves are passe. You have got to take off your fat. This must be done in one of three ways. By dieting, by exercise, or by means of Marmola Prescription Tablets. The two former will keep you busy for months and punish you pretty severely, the latter will cost you 75 cents at the druggist's. The tablets will not make any alteration in your diet necessary, and yet in all probability, before you have used up one case, you will be losing from 12 to 16 ounces of fat a day. Which method do you like the best?

If you fancy this pleasant method of getting off the fat, see your druggist instantly, or else write the Marmola Co., 833 Farmer Bldg., Detroit, Mich., to send you a case by mail. These cases contain so generous a quanity of tablets that the treatment is very economical. It is, also, quite harmless, for the tablets are made exactly in accordance with the famous Marmola Prescription.

POST CARD COLUMN

Peterborough, Nov. 21,

Editor Peterborough Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Don't you think it about time the progressive city of Peterborough passed a by-law preventing the merchants distributing hand bills to houses. This method is decidedly ancient beyond God speed style of doing business. The majority of householders subscribe for the daily papers, (at least one, the Examiner), which we think covers the ground to a large extent, and think we can readily dispense with the bill peddling nuisance, as well as the bill peddlers' tracks, which cause an endless amount of worry and work to the housekeeper, as they are in the habit of cutting across the street anywhere, tracking mud and other street filth right to one's front door. If there is no other remedy the bill peddlers might ask the Examiner for a mailing list and distribute only to non subscribers. Now that the dog question is dead, if Aldermen Turner and Morgan want the ladies' votes, here is a chance for them to get busy.

MARK TWAIN ONCE SAID

"It is Spring Fever that causes the general unrest, lack of ambition and run-down condition which pervades the human system in the Spring of the year."

The sudden change from frigid to torrid weather occurs within a few weeks, especially in our northern states.

No wonder pulmonary troubles — pneumonia, spring fever, and all such ailments are almost universal.

If people in this vicinity only knew the value of Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic (without oil) at this season of the year, we would not be able to get enough to supply the demand.

Vinol tones up the digestive organs, purifies and enriches the blood, promotes healthful sleep and a normal appetite.

Old people, delicate children, run-down, overworked and tired women, those suffering from bronchitis, chronic coughs and colds, all derive great benefit from its use.

Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you. McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

THE FOOL OF THE FAMILY

A Short Story.

It was a beautiful July evening in the very heart of the country, and Mrs. Watts, after the labours of the day—(she was a cottager who took in lodgers)—sallied forth bare-armed to her garden gate, attracted by the animated signals of a neighbour, Mrs. Dale, (the most voluble, daring, and interesting scandal monger in the village of Silverstream). Surely it would be hard if these two poor industrious women, could not enjoy half an hour's relaxation—after their tedious exertions—and nothing refreshed them so completely or raised their flagging spirits to the same pitch as a thoroughly good gossip.

"Well, what is it?" enquired Mrs. Watts, in response to her neighbour's jerks of the chin and head—sure portents of some mighty intelligence.

"What do you think?" she answered in a low voice—"I never was so took aback!"

"Go on," urged the other, "I'm waiting here to be took back—too."

"Them Lavenders are leaving!"

"The Lavenders—of Rosedale?"

"What else—yes, and going to London—"

"And them in the parish this four hundred years—it's not true woman—is it?"

"Well I had it from Susan Baker, who deals with Anne Lavender for eggs and honey—they have given notice to quit—and are off. A party is going to take the lease, and fowls, and bees, and furniture off their hands and they are away to London in a fortnight—"

"Get along? What is the reason?"

"Aye—that's what everyone will be asking? but no one will get the right answer. Them Lavenders, though only working people, and making a living out of their bit of land and hens, never mix with other village folk—and never forgot that they were once the La Venders of Vender Hall."

"Once—a hundred years ago" sneered Mrs. Watts, "it's not what folks were—but what they are themselves, and they are just no better nor you or me now—Ann Lavender doing her own washing and baking, selling the bees and chickens and honey. Dan doing the digging."

"'Tis all he is fit for!—he is half a fool, and I never myself see reason in the talk of Letty being a great beauty. She's too thin for one thing."

"Yes, that's true," assented Mrs. Deal, who weighed fifteen stone—"but some does admire her—Thompson—and Gellings—and—"

"Young Stephen Squire of Vender Hall," supplemented her listener.

"But his people will never allow it—old John Squire has made his way up from nothing—Oh he is a hard chap, and he is not one to allow his son to pull down, what he has piled up. Young Steve is to marry money—they had Miss Bulger the brewer's daughter, out from Winchester, staying there—and making much of her."

"They can never make Stephen make love to her. She's too ugly."

"I'm not sure of that—anyhow they can make mischief between Steve and Letty—that's easy—he being jealous—and she touchy. At the Park flower show I noticed the Squire's sisters, with the rich visitor walking between them, pass by Letty Lavender with a great stare—as if they were strangers. I give you my word, if they had been real duchesses they couldn't have done it grander—"

"—And the Lavenders of the Vender were gentry when the Squires were scraping the roads!" ejaculated Mrs. Deal.

"That's true," assented Mrs. Watts, "and though she is so stand off, Susan is a nice, quiet, well spoken woman—it was great nonsense her sending Letty to school—and I said so—and all she has got by it, is that the girl is ruler in the house and leads her mother by the nose—"

"And is leading her to London—this time! I hope they may never regret it—but don't I know they will—Why here's Letty herself," cried Mrs. Deal—and then (sotto voce) "I'll pick it all out of her."

Letty Lavender was a tall, slight girl with a clear complexion—delicate features and a pair of pretty dark eyes. She walked with a certain air, and carried herself with grace—the sole legacy of the ancient family of La Vender. Letty would have passed the two gossips with a civil good-evening, but Mrs. Deal extended a fat arm and held her fast.

"What's this I'm hearing, Letty?"

She stopped, and coloured brilliantly. "I'm sure I don't know—you hear so much, Mrs. Deal."

"Is it true you are leaving Rosedale—and going up to London?"

"Yes—we think we shall like the change."

"'Tis a sudden notion ye took!" put in Mrs. Watts.

"Oh, my mother feels the damp in winter—she has bronchitis you know—and it will be livlier up there—and there is nothing to keep us here—"

"Only that you were born and reared in the place!—There is your home—very healthy too—and everyone your well-wisher," argued Mrs. Deal—"Does the Rector know?"

"Yes, and everything 's settled—a Mr. Tonk answered our advertisement—a retired tradesman—he is taking the lease—and stock and furniture—and coming in next month."

"And paying well?" said Mrs Deal briskly.

"Oh, yes—our own terms."

"But surely to goodness you are not leaving him your old clock, and oak chairs, and chest?"

"No, Mr. Dawes will keep them till we are settled as well as Mop, here," indicating her companion, a bob tailed sheep dog—"we are taking the cat with us."

"'Tis said to be very unlucky to move a cat!" remarked Mrs. Watts in an impressive tone.

At this instant a dogcart was seen approaching—easily recognised as the Squires's turnout, by the fine grey stepper in the shafts. Stephen in a smart summer suit, was driving Miss Bulger, gorgeous in chains and feather, and giggling with overpowering satisfaction—the two Squire's sisters occupied the back seat—enacting the part of twin gooseberries. As soon as Letty Lavender realised the party, she turned her back pointedly on the quartette—and was proudly unconscious of Stephen's doffed hat, as he and her rival swept by in a cloud of chalky dust.

"So that's settled!" exclaimed Mrs. Deal, with a significant nod at her neighbour—"I hear she has six thousand pounds to her fortune—and she'd want it all—but old Squire is mad for the match!"

"She's frightful ugly!" said Mrs. Watts. "What dost say, Letty, girl?"

"Say? I must be going on, Mrs. Watts—I have ever so many errands."

"This move will be a great change for you all, I'm thinking, after such nice work as bee-keeping and poultry and selling cut flowers and vegetables—"

"Oh, we shall like London—mother and me—I'm sure—"

"And Dan—?"

"Dan does not care one way or another—he is a little sorry to leave—the bees. Well, good evening!" and with a nod and a smile, Letty moved off—closely attended by "Mop."

As she walked away the matrons followed her with eyes as effective as two searchlights—then as she disappeared, they gravely confronted one another, and Mrs. Deal exclaimed:

"There's more than one fool at Rosedale!"

Letty's statement respecting her mother's bronchitis—and the attractions of London—was not strictly veracious—her own proud, sore heart was the real, true, and only reason for the sudden uprooting of the Lavender family. For years—she and Stephen Squire had been—playmates—friends—and latterly underlaured sweethearts. Stephen had been learning farming—he now managed his father's land—he was a smart, good-looking young yeoman—and his family looked to him to marry well. He would never fulfil their wishes, by loitering in the lanes with Letty Lavender, the daughter of a widow in humble circumstances. His sisters could not forgive her for her pretty face his father could not overlook her empty pockets, but nothing could be said against her family—for it was known that a hundred years ago the Lavenders were great people—and gentlefolk. Gambling and the bottle had brought them down to the rank of cottagers in less than three generations; and all that remained to Letty was her beauty, her self-will, and her pride. She was aware that Stephen, her old playmate, was "warned off" from her society. His sisters had insulted her in public—whilst his father had sought out and brought home an acceptable future daughter-in-law. But still Stephen was staunch—with eager eloquence he suggested to Letty that they should marry, and go out to New Zealand, and make their home there, but she refused. She would not leave her mother and brother, and make a sort of runaway match. Then she and Stephen had sharp words. He was, he said, ready to sacrifice his family, and all his prospects, but Letty would not even meet him quarter way—and she was so cold and distant, he believed she did not care a straw about him. At this crisis, Miss Bulger appeared on the scene—Stephen was seen in her company—at church—and flower show—and the breach was complete.

Letty felt that she could not endure to remain in Silverstream—receiving the compassion of the villagers. After a final scene with Stephen, when she was proud and jealous—and he was hot and hasty, she made up her mind to escape from her old life—make a fresh start elsewhere. As a dress*maker in London, for instance?* Her mother would not listen to the word "separation." If Letty went, they would all go. Dan—the lanky, shock-haired boy, was of no importance in family councils. Letty's imagination was active—she planned the move entirely. When the place was duly advertised and a purchaser found—she decided that they would take a nice little flat in London (where marketting was cheap, and everything was so convenient). She would go into the dressmaking business—with a little premium, or work at home—with her machine; her mother could help her, and Dan might get some nice light job. On fine days they would all go into the beautiful parks, and hear the bands. On wet days there were picture galleries and free libraries—and on Sundays Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's. It would be a new and delightful existence—every hour filled with enjoyment and occupation—occupation that would employ her mind, and act as an anodyne. In London she would forget Stephen.

* * * * *

Mrs. Lavender—a thin, fair woman—Dan, her shock-haired, half-witted son of sixteen, and Letty, her pretty, enterprising daughter, came to London in the month of August, accompanied by Muff, the cat. They took two furnished rooms in a house near the Vauxhall Road, and prepared to enter on their new kingdom.

London was hot and airless—all the "world" was out of town, and every kind of business was slack. The letter of introduction given by the Rector was not delivered—the lady who might be useful to Letty, and find her employment, was abroad. She must therefore wait.

The two rooms were fusty and stuffy after the fine air and spacious accommodation at Rosedale—here Dan slept in the sitting-room, and though he carried water, went errands, and cleaned boots, the rent was eight shillings a week. The family resolved to move into better rooms, as soon as Letty had secured "a connection" and Mr. Tonk had paid the balance of the purchase money. Meanwhile they made the best of circumstances—they walked round St. James's Park, and admired the ducks and penguins—they explored Trafalgar Square, the National Gallery, and made one great expedition to Hampton Court. This was their holiday they assured one another, and soon they would be settled in a comfortable little flat of their own—working!

October came—with news of the war in South Africa—London filled, but trade was still slack, and faces were long and gloomy. Christmas arrived—and found the Lavender family still in the two squalid rooms, still unemployed, and one and all secretly yearning to be back in Rosedale. Bad news had arrived with the New Year. Mr. Tonk, who was insensible to letters or even telegrams, had suddenly bolted, having quietly disposed of all the effects at Rosedale. He owed two hundred and thirty pounds—he had only paid twenty on account. This disaster, so entirely unexpected, was a terrible blow to Mrs. Lavender, whose meagre savings were rapidly diminishing in London. And the money was gone—Tonk had secretly made away with all the stock and furniture, sent the key to the landlord by post, and vanished. His references had been supplied by a rascally solicitor—his confederate—and he had enjoyed three months' residence in the country gratis—and carried off substantial booty.

Another grave piece of intelligence—Steve Squire having refused to fall in with his father's wishes and marry Miss Bulger and six thousand pounds—had suddenly enlisted in the Yeomanry and departed to South Africa.

Poor Letty—misfortunes never come singly! Stephen wrote to her before he sailed, and bade her a dramatic farewell:

"I blame myself, Letty, for my hot temper—and—hot words—forgive one you may never see again—but who, with his last breath, will ever be—true and loyal to you. Letty, you did wrong to go to London—your pride—(London pride)—took you there; if you had stayed here—all would have come round in time, you might have trusted me—I was barely civil to Miss Bulger—and no more—I am off to the front now."

Meanwhile Letty had sufficient trouble on her hands at home. Her mother's health was indifferent—she suffered more than ever from bronchitis, and funds were low. Dan had taken to the London streets—as a fish to water, and became the pal and friend of sandwich men and newsboys—finally a newsboy himself—not being such a fool as he looked! With his square stature, large shock head, keen blue eyes, short legs, long arms, Dan was a curious specimen of humanity, but he and the cat found themselves perfectly at home in the Metropolis. The cat attended concerts and operas on the roofs of Hanki*n Gardens, and the youth found* much to amuse him on the pavement. Mrs. Lavender and Letty had never taken Dan into much account—he was dull, he could barely read; his writing was that of an average boy of seven. He never opened, of his own free will, a book—he wore home-made clothes and a continuous and irritating grin, but he was slavishly devoted to his pretty sister Letty, and—not a bad sort.

The year 1900 was a black one for many families—including the Lavenders. They had no near kin abroad—no one fighting and fainting on the South African veldt—but they had ample anxiety near home. It was now a question of keeping the wolf from the door, and Dan's was the hand that beat him off. Dan took round the "Evening Scream," and his voice outhawled that of the most leather-lunged in the district, but his earnings were scanty—enough for one—but a pitiful supply for three.

Summer came with sunshine and gay parasols, and the usual London "season," but to Letty and her mother it brought nothing but agonizing memories of the pretty rose clad "Rosedale"—the luxuriant crop of old-fashioned flowers, the beds of green lettuces and asparagus, the coops of chickens, the hives of bees—the singing of the river at the foot of the garden, and the tick of the old clock. Oh, she had been a mad, bad girl to tear her mother and brother from that happy home in order to gratify her own pride!—and all to show the Squire folk she was above and beyond their insolence! Why was she not patient? Why could she not wait? Their friend the Rector was dead—the lady to whom he had recommended her had gone to India, and she—instead of being a well employed, fashionable, daily dressmaker—was sitting with idle hands—meanwhile her mother was fading before her very eyes, and Dan, the bread winner, looked gaunt with hunger. Letty had made brave attempts to procure work, but what had pleased the country vicarage, was not good enough for the great city. She had interviewed one "Court" dressmaker, who said, "Yes, I will employ you, and you may come at 8 o'clock and leave at 7—I will give you lunch—there is no salary for the first year—and the fee is two hundred pounds—you see, I am to teach you your trade!"

When Christmas came round again, it found Letty doing "slop" work with her machine—assisted by her mother—flannelette shirts, threepence a dozen.

They were always thinking of Rosedale at Christmas—of Letty decorating the church, of the "waits" to whom they invariably gave half a crown. Oh, if they had that donation now, it would buy their Christmas dinner—yes, and a little coal! They never wrote "home" as they called it, for they had their pride. Letty was devoured by remorse as

Cause and Cure of Headache

The cause of headache as you know, is the stoppage of the circulation resulting in pressure on the delicate nerves of the head. In time nature will start the blood going again, but meanwhile we suffer and are unfit for duty.

Assisted by two ZUTOO Tablets, which by the way are as harmless as the soda they contain, nature will remove the pressure, and stop the headache in twenty minutes. Why continue to suffer? Why be unfit?

It is really remarkable how many people now use ZUTOO to cure their headaches. Do you? If not, why not?

THE FOOL OF THE FAMILY

she looked at her invalid mother—now a mere skeleton, wrapped in an old plaid shawl, with a hot brick at her feet. But so uncomplainingly and patient—whatever Letty said was right—whatever Letty did was right. There was no Christmas dinner—nothing but bread and dripping and tea—such bad tea, although it cost one and ninepence a pound. Any stuff seems good enough for the very poor! Letty who sat opposite her mother as she poured it out was crying—her tears fell with unusual facility.

"Mother!" she exclaimed, "you and Dan ought to hate me, though this is the season of goodwill. I had a quarrel with Stephen—all because his sisters were rude to me, and I resolved to come to London, and be a success—look at me! Do I look like a success? And I have dragged you and Dan from your comfortable home—simply worked on your affection, and you left Rosedale with me—left comfort—for—for starvation. Oh! oh!" and she bent her head upon her hands and sobbed aloud.

"What's this?" enquired Dan—"'Ere is a nice Christmas dinner, Sis! and I have brought you a Christmas box!" And in his (I am sorry to say) grimy finger, he held up a little brown paper parcel. This he opened, and proudly displayed what looked like a diamond spray—and oh, how it glittered and shone—red, white and blue, and how it coquetted with the one dirty gas-burner!

"Oh, Dan!" gasped his sister—"did you? when?—how—did you get it? It's surely real!"

"I was looking on at one of them Salvation Army auctions last night—people send in things—for other folks to buy, for charity you see—and some one held this up from a basket of rubbish—for bidding, and one fellow said: "Us don't want mock jewels, but bread," and the thing shook and sparkled, and looked at me so straight—and said, 'Dan, you buy me for your sister!—she loves pretty things—and it's Christmas.' And so I did! and here it is, money wasted, fourpence—but mighty pretty, ain't it? When I bought it, they all said I was a real softy."

"It is real, Dan! How could they sell it for fourpence?"

"How do I know? May be some wicked rich woman sent it as a payment for her sins—a—a what you call it?"

"Penance?"

"Yes, and to-morrow we take it to old Levi, and value it—this morning I showed it to a man, and he offered me five pounds!"

"Oh, Dan, dear, you should have taken it," cried his mother.

"No, no, Mammy, if it is worth five pounds—it is worth more. I know I'm a silly, but I tell you it is worth a fortune—a fortune to you and Sis."

Dan's words came true; on examination the ornament proved to be blue diamonds of the purest water, and was valued at two thousand pounds; it had no history—most fortunate fact—and no claimant, so it belonged to Letty Lavender, who needless to say sold it—and with the proceeds in her hand suggested to her mother that they should return instantly to Rosedale. Fortunately, the house was still empty; the family arrived exactly eighteen months after their departure, and lost no time in collecting their old belongings (dog included) and settling down into their former groove. Although they all looked pale and thin and worn, there was, their neighbors agreed, no doubt that they had "done well in London." They had now, not only bees and fowls, but cows and a pony, and were consequently received with open arms. Mrs. Watts and Mrs. Deal were puzzled—they had heard a whisper of poverty. "How had the Lavenders come by their fortune? Tonk had, as was well known, run off with all their money." Stephen Squire had recently returned home, with three wounds, two medals, and a heart still loyal to Letty Lavender, and old John, his father, who was greatly broken in health, despatched a brace of partridges to Rosedale—as a flag of truce—and all was peace—and goodwill, thanks to the folly of the fool of the family.

PRODUCTION OF ONTARIO FARMS

From Farm and Dairy.

"In the Province of Ontario we have 175,000 farms, the annual production of which totals about $250,000,000. If by some magic process of regeneration we could turn all the indifferent farmers into wide-awake progressive, up-to-date farmers, the total production would easily be doubled and it is not beyond the reach of possibility to treble our output."

These were the words of Mr. C. C. James, Deputy Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, in an address before the Annual Meeting of the International Association of Farmers' Institute Workers, held in Washington, D.C., last week. Other prominent Canadians at the meeting were: G. A. Putnam, Superintendent of Institutes for Ontario, who has been president of the International Association for the past year; Dr. C. C. Creelman, President of the O.A.C., and W. J. Black, President of the Manitoba Agricultural College.

Mr. James' speech was an eloquent effort to bring home especially to the resident of the city and the town, to the banker and the business and professional man, the fact that whatever helps the farmer to larger production and larger life necessarily contributes to the prosperity and uplift of the whole community.

A GREAT PROBLEM

"The possibility," said Mr. James, "of adding two or three hundred million dollars yearly to our rural income surely makes this a big problem. Let me ask right here: 'Is there any other problem on the American continent that comes into the same class with it?' You gentlemen who are engaged in this field know how it is to be worked out. You know the foundation courses upon which this great wealth may be built. These courses are plain and simple: (1) Drain the soil; (2) sow only the best seed; (3) carefully protect and store the products of your fields or orchards; (4) feed these products only to profitable stock; (5) put the finished product on the market in the best form.

"If we could in some way bring the indifferent farmer to the knowledge of those five plain, convincing lines of work, we would have solved the problem—all else would come easily as a natural sequence. And what a solving of other problems there would be! A man in our Province who has been a farmer for many years said to me the other day: 'Push the drainage of land; spend money on it. If you can get all the farmers to drain their land you will solve the problem of good roads, for they will have money enough to build them for themselves. Increase the incomes of the individual farmers and we will have the means at our disposal to develop the rural public school system along rational lines. And so we might enlarge upon this question along many lines.

EASIER TO BUILD DREADNOUGHTS

"All this line of development looks to be so simple, and therein is one of the greatest difficulties—it is its simplicity that makes it so difficult. It is easier to build a Dreadnought than an agricultural college. We can arouse the interest of two continents in solving the problem of aerial navigation, but it is difficult to get the people to support the proposition of spending money freely in teaching the indifferent farmer how to drain his land, why he should use only the best seeds, why he should test his dairy cows, why and how we should spray his apple trees, and how, in short he can increase his income by $1,000 a year.

"Now we are to solve the problem of the indifferent public. If the development of our agriculture means the greatest wealth creation within the nation and if the stirring of the indifferent farmer to better things is the key to the situation, why do not our people—manufacturers, bankers, professional men, business men, and intelligent farmers—rise in a mass and demand that this work be undertaken and carried through? There are at least two reasons: In the first place, there is a too prevalent opinion that work done among and for the farmers is a charitable contribution to a class that should be able to take care of themselves. What a woeful misconception of this movement! Helping the farmers to larger production and to larger life can be justified only on the ground that thereby we are contributing to the prosperity and uplift of the whole community.

A town of 5,000 people is surrounded by a farming community. Through the agricultural uplift $1,000,000 could easily be added to the annual production of the surrounding and contributing country. It is conceivable that such an addition could be made without touching or affecting every banker, every manufacturer, every storekeeper, every doctor, every lawyer, every newspaper owner in the town?"

What was needed, Mr. James continued was that the subject should be taken out of the country and discussed in the city, by Boards of Trade, Bankers' Associations, Retail Merchants' Associations, Teachers' Conventions. People should be brought to realize that it was not local, but national; not charity, but an investment of public funds that would yield big returns to the whole people. It should have the attention of men who have built big industries, planned great enterprises.

REARING PIGS

From Farm and Dairy.

Skilful feeding has much to do in rearing the best pigs. No other animal on the farm shows neglect quicker than a pig.

Be sure that the breeding sows are not getting too fat, or too thin.

The pig is so sensitive to the cold that it will completely bury itself in the bedding to keep warm if the shelter is inadequate.

No other farm animal is given such poor quarters as the pig. Still none will give better returns for good care and treatment than this same pig.

Keep the pigs growing constantly. The best results will be obtained by feeding a little under their capacity, rather than all they can consume.

Sows may be kept from eating their pigs by giving them a great variety of food for two months or more before the pigs come along. It should include some animal food and plenty of salt.

The secret of feeding pigs is to know how to feed enough without feeding too much.

To fatten pigs profitably, the individuals selected for feeding should be good ones. There is a vast difference in pigs in respect to easy fattening proportion of bone, weight, and so forth. There are several good breeds of pigs having similar degrees of aptitude for fattening. These breeds have been so disturbed over the country that any farmer who is willing to make the effort may have only improved animals in his pens. Not to do so is exceedingly stupid.

The man whose pigs receive nothing but kicks and blows will never succeed in the pig-raising business. The man who is not on the best of terms with his sows will lose many litters of pigs, if not the sows themselves, that he might have saved had the animal not been afraid of him. And if she distrusts him, it will bring out all the viciousness of her nature whenever he comes near to feed or care for her and in her trampling and worrying some of the little fellows will be sure to get hurt. Sows with pigs too young to get out of the way should be kept as quiet as possible. This can never be if she distrusts her attendant.

KILLING, PLUCKING AND PACKING POULTRY

From Farm and Dairy.

The care which is taken in killing, plucking and packing poultry, if the poultry are well fleshed in the first place, decides the grading which they will get on the market. The little extra time and trouble spent in properly killing and packing the birds will be well repaid by the fancy prices paid for poultry of first quality. Poultry intended for shipment to our larger cities in particular should be well dressed as the best class of buyers on these markets are very discriminating and a few small points may make a big difference in the price. Gunns' Limited, Toronto, give the following pointers on dressing poultry which all poultrymen would do well to consider carefully.

1. Starve the birds 24 hours before killing to empty the crops.

2. If possible, kill by bleeding in the mouth.

3. Pluck while still warm, removing all feathers on turkeys, geese, ducks fowls and chickens.

4. Birds should hang at least 9 to 12 hours before packing, if possible over night, so that the animal heat may have an opportunity to escape from the body.

5. Pack neatly in suitable crates, boxes or barrels.

7. If possible have the birds in each package of uniform weight, quality and appearance.

8. Pack inferior birds in separate packages.

9. Mark on each package your name and address, also number of birds contained therein, kind, and net weights.

10. Never scald poultry to remove the feathers. If scalded birds are offered for sale, buy them at the same figure you would pay for inferior or number two stock.

HE WAS PARALYZED

Mr. William J. Brennan, Western Hill, St Catharines, Ont., tells what it feels like to be paralyzed. He lost power of speech, face was drawn out of shape, lost flesh, could not sleep. Five doctors failed to help him. Electricity proved ineffective. He used Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food until his former good health was restored. Face was restored to shape, power of speech returned and he gained in weight. Says he would not return to former condition for all the gold in the country.

CORONATION YEAR COURTS ✱ SOCIETY ✱ ENGLAND'S SOCIAL PROBLEM

BRILLIANT COURTS PLANNED BY KING

First Two Will Be Held in February and Two More in May and June.

STATE CONCERTS AGAIN

Following Desire of Queen Mary, the British Ruler Is to Revive Functions Which Were Abandoned.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

The Court having now gone into half mourning, King George has begun making arrangements for the forthcoming season, so that his people may know as early as possible what arrangements they should make for themselves. It is only in the Court itself that half mourning will be observed up to May 7 next and within that circle women are expected to dress themselves in black, with colored ribbons, flowers, feathers or gray and white dresses, with black ribbons, flowers, feathers and ornaments. Men, however, will have to go on wearing the same mourning clothes right to the end.

It has come as a surprise to a good many that there probably will be as many as five courts during the season. Nothing official has been issued yet as to whether they will be held by day or at night, but there will be two toward the end of February. That is assured. They will, of course, be "half mourning" courts, and the first will be confined exclusively to the official and diplomatic circles, with the addition of a few of the more intimate friends of the King and Queen.

The other courts will be held in May and June and will be very brilliant, as there will be so many presentations held over from last season in addition to those which will come along in their usual course. The fifth, which will be called officially an "extra" court, will probably be the most brilliant of the whole series and will be held virtually on the eve of the coronation. By that time the whole, or nearly all, of the official representatives sent from foreign courts and States to the coronation will have arrived in England, and it is expected that the function will be remembered on account of the number of heirs apparent to other thrones that will be present.

Among the Crown Princes expected are those of Germany, Greece, Sweden, Italy, Austria-Hungary, Turkey, Japan and Egypt, while two reigning monarchs are also likely to attend in the persons of the Kings of Spain and Norway.

The King has also under consideration the revival of the State concerts which were abandoned during the reign of King Edward. It is Queen Mary's desire that these concerts should occupy a place in the list of Court ceremonies, and two of these are likely to be given at Buckingham Palace in May. There is also likely to be a very large garden party at Windsor Castle a few days before the coronation, and during the coronation week there is to be a gala performance at the opera. Their Majesties, by the way, are continuing their subscription for the royal box at Covent Garden for the opera season, which means that it will be occupied by a royal party every evening.

CROWN JEWELS MAKE A DAZZLING SHOW

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

A wonderful transformation has been wrought in the display of the Crown jewels and regalia, which have now been restored to the Wakefield Chamber in the Tower of London. The old idea seemed to be to keep the crowns and jewels as much in the shade as possible. Now they make a magnificently dazzling show. Against a rich background of velvet, and with an artificial arrangement of mirrors and electric lights, the crowns and sceptres, the gold plate and state swords, flash with almost blinding brilliancy as one passes round the big, grill protected plate glass case.

At the summit is the King's crown, which was originally made for Queen Victoria's coronation in 1838, when the chief jewels were taken from older crowns and the royal collection. Among them is the great ruby given to the Black Prince by Peter the Cruel after the battle of Navarre in 1367, and worn by Henry V. in the crown encircling his helmet at the battle of Agincourt.

The crown was enlarged and brightened for the coronation of the late King Edward, and then contained 3,311 diamonds, 277 pearls and many other jewels, the whole weighing thirty-nine ounces five pennyweights.

The Cullinan diamonds, which out of compliment to United South Africa, where first Parliament was recently opened by the Duke of Connaught, King George ordered to be renamed the "Stars of Africa," have a prominent place in the regalia which will be used in Westminster Abbey next June. The mount has been altered to allow the large oblong "Star of Africa," weighing 516 carats, to be placed in front. For this new arrangement two new diamonds, fifty-six brilliants and fifty-two table diamonds have been added. The smaller "drop," or "Star of Africa," cut from the original stone, is now at the head of the royal sceptre.

These royal emblems are, of course, very carefully guarded. To the burglar the jewels seem in an impregnable fortress. It is a strong room, which it is impossible to penetrate without passing guard after guard, and even then the cage enclosing the jewels would defy the efforts and most cunning artifice of the cleverest burglar. At the touch of a button a steel grid comes over the case if any part of it is touched during the hours the Tower is not open to visitors. Even when it is open people are not allowed to approach the jewels at closer quarters than a distance of several yards.

Society Events in London Numerous for This Season

MISS MAY VAN ALEN. [illegible]

American Hostesses Plan Quiet Entertainments—Miss May Van Alen and Her Father Will Spend the Winter in Northamptonshire.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

THERE are just now in London many more social events and more entertaining than are usual at this time of the year. The semi-mourning prevents anything yet being done on a very elaborate scale, but the younger members of society have little to complain about, because plenty of dances are being organized for their sake. There seems more and more inclination to follow the lead of the American winter hostesses by giving dances for the very young girls who are not as yet quite emancipated from the schoolroom, and these dances, running on close toward Christmas, seem likely to merge into the children's parties which, during the holidays, are so plentiful both in town and country. At any rate it helps to keep the ball rolling until the new year and the preliminaries of the coronation season.

The American and Anglo-American colony will be well represented, many American hostesses already opening their doors for quiet entertaining, headed by Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, at Dorchester House. Mrs. John Jacob Astor will be in residence all the winter at the house she has rented from Lord Sackville in Hill street, and she is bringing her little daughter, Miss Muriel, with her. Mrs. Bonynge is staying at her house in Prince's Gate during Mr. Bonynge's and Lady Maxwell's absence in America, and others expected here in the course of the winter are Mr. and Mrs. George Vanderbilt.

A well known American hostess who has been passing through London is Mrs. Wade Chance, on her return to England after a year's absence. She is now in Paris, where she will make her headquarters for the next year or two, paying frequent visits to London; but, though fond of English life, she will eventually make her home in America. Mrs. Chance has been travelling a good deal and has been on a visit to the Duchesse d'Uzès, at St. Hubert, and has also been the guest of Mr. Astor at the Sorrento villa. Since then her travels have taken her as far afield as Biskra, whence she returned to France on a visit to the Vicomte and Vicomtesse Vercelli de Ranzi and to other friends in the château country of the Loire.

Miss May Van Alen has returned to England and is putting Rushton Hall in order for her father's arrival. Mr. Van Alen was to have returned to England earlier had it not been for the unfortunate accident which laid him up for a couple of weeks. Now that he is returning, he and his daughter intend to spend most of the winter in Northamptonshire.

Two weddings of much interest to the Anglo-American colony are to take place shortly. One is that of Miss Ethel Robeson to an Englishman, Mr. William Stirling. Miss Robeson, who is an accomplished musician and whose home in Washington testifies to her artistic tastes, is in mourning, and, therefore, her wedding will be of the quietest.

The other wedding which is attracting much interest is that between Captain Stewart, the popular naval attaché at Rome, and Miss Gwendolen Story, whose father, Mr. Waldo Story, is well known as a connoisseur and sculptor. There is a good deal of gossip about some difficulties the Italian authorities are raising on points of law, but it is expected that they will be overruled, as it is the great wish of the bride herself to celebrate her wedding in Rome, which has always been her home.

Wants $3,000 to See Coronation

King Lewanika of Barotseland Will Visit London if His Travelling Expenses Are Paid.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

KING LEWANIKA of Barotseland again has expressed his willingness to attend the coming coronation on condition that his expenses, to the amount of $3,000, are paid by the British government. These terms are the same as laid down by him when he attended the coronation of the late King Edward. Evidently he was aware of the necessity for taking such precaution, for although the coronation of King Edward took place the second week in August it was not until the 25th of the following November that this potentate reached the Zambesi River on his return to his African realm, his royal party having taken no less than five weeks to perform the journey from Buluwayo by ox wagon. Even when the Zambesi was reached this august personage was still three hundred miles from his capital, and he did not reach his own fireside until well into the ensuing year.

Throughout this arduous journey King Lewanika was accompanied by Colonel Colin Harding, the commandant of the Barotseland police, who is held to be probably the only living man wearing the distinction of having successfully encountered nine lions at one and at the same time. It was Lord Salborne who, during his period of office in South Africa, had an interview with this King at which thousands of the latter's subjects were present. On that occasion the High Commissioner was formally presented by His Majesty with the somewhat embarrassing gift of a tame hippopotamus. It is probable that King Lewanika, as a result of his evident business capacity, will get the expense guarantee demanded and appear in full state at the coronation of King George V.

MARVELLOUS DOLLS GIFT OF QUEEN MARY

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

Dozens of society women of prominence attended the private view of the annual doll show of the Children's Happy Evenings Association, which recently was held for the fifteenth year by Lady Werther, at Bath House, Piccadilly. This organization, of which the Countess of Jersey is president, has celebrated its twenty-first anniversary this year, and at the present time is providing healthy evenings of play for 25,000 poor boys and girls in various districts of London. The girls look eagerly forward to the annual distribution of dolls. In the larger provincial towns affiliated associations have taken up a similar work.

This year's display of dolls was marked by the evidence of Queen Mary's whole hearted interest in the association, of which she is patron. Among the exhibits was a group of a dozen dolls, representing a wedding party, sent by the Queen. The group included not only the bride and bridegroom in conventional attire, but four bridesmaids dressed in lavender silk, and six guests, the picture being complete in every way, even including an iced wedding cake. A wonderful Japanese doll was contributed by Mme. Kato, the wife of the Japanese Ambassador, while Lady Warather and her household alone were responsible for the appearance of no less than one hundred dolls, and a South African friend added seventy by presenting a group of Zulu warriors.

Seymour Hicks as Richard III.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

After several years of preparation and a great deal of talk Mr. Seymour Hicks has made an elaborate and handsome production of "Richard III." at the Coliseum. The play is condensed into forty minutes' duration, in which seven scenes are given, two of them being only stage pictures in which no words are spoken. These pictures show the murder of the princes in the Tower. The final scene is, of course, the duel between Richard and Richmond on Bosworth Field.

Mr. Hicks is by occupation generally a farcical comedian. As Richard he is not nearly so famous as he usually is. Still, he made several people in the audience

SEE FIERCE FIGHT IN HUMAN BODY

Battle of Phagocytes and Spirochaeta, Defenders of Life and Their Foes, Shown in Cinematograph.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

ONE of the most interesting and instructive cinematograph shows ever witnessed, in the shape of a fierce battle between an army of phagocytes and several million spirochaeta, was given in London the other evening by Dr. C. Levaditi, of the Pasteur Institute, Paris, before the Royal Institute of Public Health.

The phagocytes, which are the defenders of the human body, were seen in the living pictures fighting against the spirochaeta, which are the bacteria of a malignant disease. These cinematograph films, which are said to be among the most marvellous ever shown, illustrated the bacterial warfare which takes place inside the human body. And excitement was added to the contest owing to the fact that the audience knew that victory for the spirochaeta meant death to the human victim.

In the first few pictures the phagocytes had rather a bad time of it in their battle with the invaders, and, like a general commanding his forces, Dr. Levaditi cried, "See! They weaken!" following with his pointer the combatants appearing on the screen, like weird creatures conjured up in a nightmare. Again, still more tragically as a phagocyte fell outnumbered before a force of horrid shaped bacteria, he cried, "See! It is dead!"

The defenders, however, put up a great fight. Dead spirochaeta lay all round them, but still the phagocytes were being gradually outnumbered and crushed, till there were signs of reinforcements. The doctor had come to their aid. In the moment of victory the spirochaeta received a check. With their vast numbers and the variety of their attack—such as sharp, fang-like teeth, pincers and pointed, dagger-shaped tongues—they were too much for the phagocytes alone, but with the arrival of medical aid to stimulate the guardians of the patient's body they were demolished slowly at first, the wriggling things wriggled less. They grew tired, they weakened, they strove in vain to release themselves from the grip of the reviving phagocytes, they died.

This is the sort of fight which is going on daily, explained Dr. Levaditi, in the bodies of human beings, the fierceness of the fight depending on the malignity of the opposing bacteria. From a cold in the head upward the various human ailments enlist a fight by the phagocytes in defence of their home, and the problem of the doctor is to discover the best food for the health soldier, according to the nature of the battle it has to wage.

NEW SOVEREIGNS DEFECTIVE

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

Those who have been looking forward to the issue of the new gold sovereigns with King George's head on the obverse, must possess their souls in patience for a little while longer, because the trial coins which have been struck have proved a failure, the trouble being exactly the same as happened with the new American five dollar gold piece last year.

The King's head has been made in such high relief that it is impossible to pile the coins, which, left to themselves, would immediately come down with a run. So new dies are to be cut in less bold relief, and until they have been tested there is to be no issue of new coinage.

Day of Great Estates Is Passing in England

LADY HENRY SOMERSET

Lady Henry Somerset Says That Radical Change Is About to Come Over Country Life Owing to New Land Taxes.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET is among the prominent English publicists who have most recently undertaken to deal with the altering social problems of the United Kingdom. On all sides there have been contentions that British country life is about to undergo a radical change, the chief basis for this argument being grounded on the numbers of large estates that are to be broken up and disposed of at public auction, ostensibly because of the budget, with its new land taxes.

In the latest issue of the Windsor Magazine Lady Henry Somerset has discussed the possible future relations between the great county houses and the English villages, which usually have been created through their influences.

"In considering the relations of the village to the great house," she writes, "we come again to the burning question, 'What is wealth?' and over and over again we realize that our ideas have to be revised. There is the wealth of those whom we call rich—their money, their leisure, their houses, their gardens, their motors, clothes and jewels—all the material possessions which go to make up what we call a fortune; but, on the other hand, when we come to true standards there is the wealth of those whom we call the poor—their simplicity of life, their peace, their knowledge of life and death, their strength, their courage, their endurance. All these are spiritual possessions, and, just as material possessions are purchased by so-called riches, so these spiritual possessions are often only to be purchased by so-called poverty.

"Neither will probably know, now and here, the exact extent of their fortune but when the true values are sorted from the false and life is shorn of its superficial adornment and stands out in clear and simple lines we shall understand better the real relations between those who have and those who have not.

"They tell us that the time for great estates is past, and I believe it is. The congestion in our cities must be relieved by the people's ownership in the land. The fortune from the rent of the farms will no longer maintain great houses. The present system is bound to die. Here and there great families have taken a new lease of financial life by uniting their fortunes to those who possess money made in new countries or in other channels, but the great bulk of the English landowners are unable now to maintain their estates.

"The old houses are let to men who have made their money in commerce; the traditions which bound them to the people who lived upon the soil are gone, the raison d'être of the English country house is at an end, for it is no longer anybody's home, but merely a pleasure resort wherein to spend a few idle weeks or give a few brilliant parties. There are still exceptions, but this is mainly the rule, and we who live in this present age must watch with anxiety and interest what will be the future development of the English village."

WOMAN CHOSEN AS MAYOR OF OLDHAM

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

One woman who will attract attention during the coronation year is Mrs. Charles E. Lees, who has just been selected as Mayor of Oldham. A couple of very small boroughs have vested this executive honor in women, but Oldham takes the lead among the big towns of England.

Mrs. Lees has been a generous benefactor to her home town for many years. She has been a member of the Council for three years, and took an active part in civic affairs for a much longer period. She is the only citizen upon whom the freedom of that borough has been conferred. Possessed of considerable wealth, she is actively associated with the firms of Lees & Co., machinists, and Eli Lees & Co., cotton spinners, these houses furnishing employment to thousands of workers.

TORPEDO NETS USELESS NOW?

British Engineer Has Device Which He Says Can Cut Through War Ship's Protector.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

SOME interesting experiments have just been concluded in the Great Float at the Mersey docks with a new torpedo net cutter which its inventor, Mr. George Hazelhurst, a West Kirby engineer, believes will deprive war ships of the protection they have hitherto enjoyed in a large measure from the steel torpedo nets. In fact he asserts that what he calls his Dreadnought destroyer can always be depended upon to strike the ship against which it is directed in spite of the steel protecting net.

Mr. Hazelhurst got little encouragement when he took his invention to the Admiralty, but that did not trouble him. "The model was seen by an expert in London," says he, "and without any qualification he pronounced it quite feasible. An expert in Liverpool said the same thing, and then the Dock Board allowed me the use of the Great Float, where I carried out a successful experiment, though I was warned not to explode more than two pounds of gelignite at one time. I fired only one-third of a pound of gelignite at a depth of twenty-five feet, but the explosion was a loud one, a column of water leaping from four to five feet in the air on the fatal side of the net, so that it is now conclusively proved torpedo nets are no longer a defence to an ironclad."

Mr. Hazelhurst does not know what his next move will be, but he declares that in case of his invention it would be madness to spend more millions in building Dreadnoughts until the Admiralty has thoroughly investigated

SEE PROMISE OF A GREATER CHINA

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

Comment has been occasioned by a striking editorial in the Daily News which has not reflected the usual feeling of British jealousy over the growing friendship between China and the United States, but which takes Great Britain to task for her position toward this Chinese Empire by reason of her playing "second fiddle" in her "understanding" with Russia and her alliance with Japan. Referring most optimistically to China's decision to open the National Parliament within three years, this editorial continues:—

"The new China that is coming and the transition to the new China must set all the Powers considering their Chinese policy. The United States government has made up its mind what is to be its course. It means to do its best to help China on the road to liberty and reform. Only a few days ago the announcement was made that American financiers had agreed to give China a $50,000,000 loan for industrial and monetary reform. And this is the beginning, not the end.

"One need hardly emphasize the fact that the United States is the only great Power whose regard toward China will bear looking at. We should like to think that this country took the same line as the United States. It would be good for China and it would be good for our relations with the United States. Unfortunately, we are sadly placed for a liberal Chinese policy. We are allied with Japan and we have an understanding with Russia. Russia and Japan within the last few months have agreed to work together so far as China is concerned, and China's statesmen and every independent observer believe that this common Russo-Japanese policy aims at weakening China.

"Russia and Japan do not want a strong or reformed China. They want a corrupt and dying China. The mere fact of our association with Russia and Japan must make any divergence from them in China difficult; but it is plain beyond controversy that, however a weak China may profit our industries, our interests commercial and political, are bound up in the regeneration of China. If we persist in backing Russia and Japan against China we shall in the Far East, as in the Middle and the Near East, be paying heavily for no perceptible gain, and in this instance the loss will be multiplied by the fact that we shall be brought into conflict with the United States, a country with which it is our interest and our desire to cultivate

ZULU ASSERTS HE SAVED LADYSMITH

Malinga Wants Reward of $200 and Eighty Head of Cattle for Planning Rout of Boers.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

IT was only on the sixth attempt, as every one knows, that the late General Sir Redvers Buller succeeded in relieving Ladysmith during the last Boer war. But if a story which has just come to hand after these twelve years be substantiated, Ladysmith might have fallen eventually into the hands of the Boers had it not been for the strategy of a Zulu chief who, at the last moment, came to the relief of the harassed British General.

The story, which comes from Durban, is to the effect that the Zulu chief Malinga is claiming through the court a reward of $200 and eighty head of cattle for the services rendered on the occasion referred to. Malinga declares that it was through him that the final attack on the Boers at Tugela Heights proved successful, he having originated the plan of operations after five previous efforts had been made without success.

The Natal Mercury, which chronicles the details of Malinga's claim, offers no opinion on its merits, but states that many of the points of the chief's story coincide with what actually occurred.

Briefly, Malinga says that during the siege of Ladysmith he was practising in the district as a medicine man. He had commanded an impi of warriors during the Zulu war, and when the natives were called together by General Buller he was asked if he could still handle an impi.

To this Malinga replied that what he had done before he could do again, and he was thereupon invited to assist General Buller's forces, being promised the reward he now claimed if he was successful. The Boers at that time occupied a position on the Makala Hill, and the adoption of Malinga's plan of attack ended in their complete rout. After the relief of Ladysmith Malinga returned to Nkandhla, to learn that General Buller had "crossed the seas." Having been later thrown into prison for his part in a native rebellion, he has been unable to make any claim for

DENY SPAIN'S KING INTENDS TO MAKE VISIT TO QUIRINAL

Being Catholic Ruler, Vatican Would Regard It as Affront to the Pope.

TO NAME HEAD OF EXTENSION SOCIETY.

With Advice of Cardinal Martinelli Pontiff Will Choose President for Organization Here.

(Special Dispatch.)
Rome, Saturday.—The Apostolic Delegate at Washington this week forwarded to the Holy See the results of the first election of officers of the Catholic Extension Society, which was carried out under the new regime.

Up to June the extension society was practically only an interdiocesan organization. Then it was taken under the special direction and approval of the Holy See. The Archbishop of Chicago, pro tempore, is, under the new constitution, chancellor of the society, but the president will be chosen every five years by the Holy See from a list of three names selected by the Executive Board.

It is this list that has now reached Rome. The appointment will be made within the next month. The Pope will make a selection on the advice of Cardinal Martinelli, who has been officially appointed Cardinal protector of the extension society.

Cardinal Vannutelli's Portrait.

Cardinal Vincenzo Vannutelli yesterday sent a large portrait of himself for the office of the society in Chicago with his autograph and words of praise and blessing for its work.

The Tribuna makes the announcement that arrangements are practically concluded for the visit of the King of Spain to Rome early next year. Other papers announce that negotiations on this subject are being carried on with the Vatican. Whatever may be said of the first item there is no truth whatever in the second.

The most reliable authorities here declare that no inkling has been conveyed to the Holy See of the intention of King Alfonso to visit the King of Italy, and in any case the subject is not one of those which are subject to negotiations, as the Holy See has made perfectly clear that under present conditions the visit of the Catholic sovereign as the chief of a state to Rome is an offence to the Pontiff.

Pope Leo Was Obdurate.

Efforts frequently were made to induce the late King Carlos of Portugal to visit his royal cousin at the Quirinal, but it came to nothing in view of the opposition of Leo XIII. King Humbert twenty years ago paid a visit to Emperor Francis Joseph in Vienna, but the call was not returned.

For the same reason, when President Loubet, in spite of the prohibition, came to Rome in 1904, the Vatican sent an official private note to all Catholic sovereigns protesting against his action. This document was communicated surreptitiously to the French government by the Prince of Monaco and was used as the chief pretext for a rupture of diplomatic negotiations between France and the Holy See. Last year the protest was renewed when the Prince of Monaco himself came to Rome, although he professed to come as a lecturer on oceanography and not as a reigning Prince.

Italy, Too, Has Objection.

A few months ago it was the Italian government which raised an objection to the visit of a Bavarian Prince who came to the Vatican with a German pilgrimage, and who, of course, could not have visited the Quirinal.

Certain it is, anyway, that a visit by the King of Spain to the Quirinal would be construed as a deliberate affront to the Pontiff, and King Alfonso is not at all likely to go so far as that.

The appeal of Comte Boni de Castellane to the ecclesiastical court of the Rota is not likely to be tried for at least six months. The ten judges already are overburdened with work. According to L'Italie, he bases his action for a declaration of the nullity of his marriage with Miss Anna Gould, who is now the wife of the Duc de Talleyrand, on the ground that he declared before the ceremony that he intended to contract marriage only in so far as it might be held legitimate by her own church.

A prominent canonist and theologian assures your Rome correspondent that if there is no better plea than this it is a mistake to introduce the case, because, even if true and thoroughly proved, it would not constitute a reason for declaring the marriage null.

Complicated Marriage Cases.

The Rota is likely to be occupied shortly with a much more interesting and more complicated batch of matrimonial cases. In Italy a case is now being brought before the civil tribunals here to declare null the marriage of an Italian countess who contracted marriage before Signor Ernesto Pacelli, one of the Municipal Councillors.

It is asserted that though he had at one time received the necessary delegation from the preceding Mayor of Rome, this had not been renewed at the proper time, and therefore all marriages celebrated before him are invalid. Nor is the Pacelli case the only one. It is believed that no fewer than seven thousand civil marriages celebrated in Rome are invalid in the eyes of the civil law. The Rota being purely an ecclesiastical court, it will not be called on to pronounce formally in such cases, but it is possible that the ten judges may be asked to study the situa-

Commenting with light irony on the pretensions of a certain nouveau riche, a contributor to Paris Figaro questions whether men of this type are any nlller than those of a past generation who belonged to well known families of long descent.

"There was one of the family of Croy," this contributor writes, "who was fond of showing an old painting of Noah entering the ark and crying out:

The National Flag.

The first display of the national flag at a military post was at Fort Schuyler, on the site of the present city of Rome, N. Y. The fort was besieged early in August, 1777. The garrison was without a flag, so one was made according to the prescription of congress by cutting up sheets to form the white stripes, bits of scarlet cloth for the red stripes, and the blue ground for the stars was made from a piece of the blue cloak belonging to Captain Abraham Swartwout of Dutchess county, N. Y. This flag was unfurled over the fort on Aug. 3, 1777.

The national flag was first unfurled in battle on the banks of the Brandywine Sept. 11, 1777. The flag was first hoisted over a foreign stronghold June 28, 1778, when Captain Rathbone of the American sloop of war Providence captured Fort Nassau, on the Bahama islands. Captain Paul Jones was the first man to display the American flag on an American vessel. This flag was made by the women of Portsmouth, N. H., for the Ranger, which was fitted out at that port for Captain Jones. The Ranger sailed from Portsmouth on Nov. 1, 1777.

APACHES OF PARIS

Night Prowlers Whose Trade Is Murder and Robbery.

THE TERROR OF THE POLICE.

These Desperadoes Rarely Use a Gun, but Work With the Knife, the Bludgeon or by "Tolling"—They Have a Short and Bloody Career.

There are very few nights in the year when Paris policemen on their rounds do not stumble upon a body lying in a gory pool. Sometimes the handle of a long, slender knife protrudes between the shoulder blades; sometimes an ugly gash bleeds from ear to ear; not seldom blood oozes from mouth, nose and ears, as though the dead had not sustained any apparent wound, or three little starlike bruises may dot the temple, or a bluish line an inch wide may mar the back of the neck, just above the collar line. "Les Apaches," the "cops" whisper to each other (for Parisian police officers always go two by two), and they call for an ambulance, much relieved not to have witnessed the incident.

The steel blade, the blackjack, the brass knuckles, will serve the purpose of the Apache, according to his victim's size and presumable strength. For a prey of small stature, however, the Apache reserves what in his slang he calls "tolling." A sharp blow dazes the victim and throws him down; the Apache's knees bore themselves into the chest, while his hands seize the ears, lift the head and slam it a couple of times on the pavement until a duller thud tells of a fractured skull.

Until an Apache is an adept at "sticking" his man in very much the same way in which a Spanish torero dispatches a bull, with a single thrust between the shoulders, or at cracking a skull bone at one slam, he is held in little esteem and never allowed to tackle "big jobs" in a dangerous neighborhood, for Paris is a well policed city. The night hawk must strike like lightning, empty the dead man's pockets in a wink and slink away into the dark. Therefore Apaches very seldom carry guns; the knife is silent. Tolling, too, is safe—so many people are known to have slipped and fractured their skulls! Unless the victim is especially well dressed there is not much of an inquiry.

When it is all over the gang, which scatters like a flock of frightened sparrows, meets again at some wineshop where no one is welcome who is not "in the business."

Apaches never try to conceal their social status. Their very clothes are a sort of warning to the public. They even affect a peculiar walk, the body bent from the loins, shoulders hunched and hands plunging deep into the trousers pockets. But who would dare to molest them?

The Apache is a marked man. He joins a gang at three or four and twenty, and by thirty or thirty-five he has gone. The maws of a jail hold him for the balance of his earthly existence. He knows that. He expects it. Therefore while his freedom lasts there is no desperate chance he will not take to get at the gold that alone could save him.

Apaches are not born; they are made—made by the peculiar laws of France. Every citizen of the republic, without distinction of rank or class, must serve under his country's flag for two years. Only the physically unfit escape that servitude. At the end of his term in the ranks every Frenchman seeking employment must present as means of identification his certificate of honorable discharge.

Then it is that tragedy looms up for some unfortunates. Woe to the one whose certificate mentions the "African battalions!"

The African battalions, garrisoned at the edge of the Sahara desert, are made up of all the boys who had the misfortune of being arrested before they reached the age of twenty-one. Trivial as their offenses may have been, whether they were due or not to the indiscreet exuberance of youth or to some absurd entanglement, they are sent to the desert outposts, kept on convict fare, sleeping mostly in trenches which they dig, watched over by sentries that shoot to kill.

Under the broiling sun that lays them down fast with fever and cholera they build roads, crept over the next day by the sand. They are "the front" whenever Arabs or Moroccans threaten to shake off the French yoke. When they fall by the wayside they are tied to a horse's tail. When they protest spurs cause the horse to rear.

And when the creepy water of sand wells, bullets from the sentries or from the nomads and the hoofs of vicious horses have spared them they return to their native city with hatred in their hearts, with the loathsome memories left by association with the depraved and the morally diseased.

They return to their native city to find doors and hearts locked to them. Their military book, which they must produce, proclaims them jailbirds. Who wants to employ an ex-convict? During their two years in the African inferno they have atoned for their errors of the eighteenth or nineteenth year. For the second time they have settled their account with society. And now society refuses them a chance to show that they have (for some of them have) shed the old hide, to prove that a new heart is beating in their breasts.

The next time you don't feel just right, let us buy a 50-cent bottle of Psychine from your druggist to give you to cure your indisposition and prevent worse ailments.

This being ill is curious business.

It usually commences in a subtle fashion, almost unconsciously.

Yet if you do not check your illness, it grows and grows.

And one fine day you find you're sick.

The greatest scavengers of the body are the white corpuscles, or phagocytes in the blood.

These white corpuscles attack and eat up every germ of disease that invades the body.

That is when they are strong enough and in sufficient numbers.

If they're not strong enough, then they wage an unequal warfare until they are finally overcome by their more powerful enemies.

The body becomes steadily sicker and sicker until actual disease sets in.

Now, we have had all sorts of so-called cures.

And a great many people have seriously endangered their health experimenting with them.

But years ago—before even science was able to tell we had the right treatment for disease—viz., herbs, nature's own remedies.

Now that science can tell to an absolute certainty, we know why certain herbs cure disease.

Because they strengthen and increase the white corpuscles or phagocytes.

A third of a century ago Psychine made remarkable cures.

To-day it is making remarkable cures.

In the interim, millions of bottles of Psychine have been sold.

Hundreds of thousands of people made well and kept well.

Why?

Because Psychine is largely made up of those herbs that scientists now know increase and strengthen the white corpuscles, the phagocytes

That's why we have received hundreds of thousands of unsolicited testimonials, that's why we can afford to buy and give away hundreds of thousands of 50-cent bottles of Psychine, that's why Psychine benefits these diseases:

La Grippe	Bronchial Coughs
Bronchitis	Weak Lungs
Hemorrhages	Weak Voice
Sore Throat	Spring Weakness
Anaemia	Early Decline
Female Weakness	Catarrhal Affections
Indigestion	Catarrh of Stomach
Poor Appetite	Night Sweats
Chills and Fevers	Obstinate Coughs
Sleeplessness and	Laryngitis and
Nervous Troubles	Dyspepsia

After-effects of Pleurisy, Pneumonia and La Grippe.

Now we don't ask you to take our word for the tremendously beneficial effects of Psychine. Fill out the coupon below, mail it to us and we'll give your druggist an order (for which we pay him the regular retail price) for a 50-cent bottle of Psychine to be given you free of cost.

We will undoubtedly buy and distribute in this manner, hundreds of thousands of these 50-cent bottles of Psychine.

And we do that to show our entire confidence in this wonderful preparation.

A confidence that has been based on our 30 years' experience with this splendid preparation, with a full knowledge of the hundreds of thousands of cures it has made.

Whistler as a Horseman.

Boggs, a cadet cavalry officer at West Point academy, was an assistant in the riding hall. On one occasion he overheard Whistler, who thoroughly disliked to ride, objecting strenuously to the horse brought for his use. The horse, he argued, was too heavily built and much too large for a man of his size. Whistler, with much vehemence, urged the man next him to "swap." The man with whom he wished to exchange horses was of muscular build and a "pretty generous size" and his horse a lightweight animal, so it seemed to Whistler that it would be a "most fitting exchange."

"Oh, don't swap! Don't you swap, Mr. Whistler!" cried the dragoon. "Yours is a war horse, sir!"

"A war horse!" exclaimed Whistler. "That settles it. I certainly don't want him."

"Yes, you do, sir," reiterated the man. "He's a war horse, I tell you, for he'd rather die than run."—Boston Post.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

HERE is a letter that came to me the other day. I'm going to answer it privately. But first I want to publish it.

"Dear Miss Cameron

"I would like to offer my services gratuitously to some charitable organization (public or private, regardless of creed) for one or two evenings a week this Fall and Winter, but I am at a loss to know where to apply, or how to go about it all. So I am hoping you can aid me.

"Instead of wasting all my evenings I should like to help out somewhere, and it seems to me that there must be need in this city for something of the kind. I would be able to teach stenography, typewriting, etc., elementary music and sight reading, or could play the piano for the singing or dancing classes, I could also read aloud.

"The list of accomplishments (?), when shown in cold type, does seem rather limited, doesn't it? But, perhaps I can fit in some place, and, like Mr. Barkis, I am very willing."

Seems to me this world would be a pretty fine place if there were a bigger supply of folks like this young woman.

How often one hears people grandly and emptily wishing that they had wealth or some great talent with which to bless their fellow men

"Something grand and noble and good,
Won by simply wishing we could."

How comparatively seldom one sees anyone offering his humble and commonplace mite, in the hope that it will "help out somewhere," as simply and frankly and modestly as this girl does.

"If there were only something I could do," I sometimes hear girls say in this connection, "I'd love to do it, but you see I haven't any particular talent or accomplishment."

This girl had the courage and common sense to include reading aloud in her list of things she thought might help out somewhere.

You surely can read passably, can't you?

And if you don't think that's worth anything come with me some night to a certain settlement house that I know and see a young woman reading Bud Chirstmas Carol aloud to a group of tired-out mothers.

Watch their wrinkled, furrowed faces smooth out and brighten up and even break into smiles as they listen. Let the young woman tell you how eagerly they come night after night, no matter how tired they may be, and know it is almost the only pleasure in life to some of them, and then say, if you dare, that an ability to read aloud, even passably, isn't a power that can be used as a great happiness bringer.

There are many, many girls, I know, whose day's work leaves them too tired to be able to do anything but rest and relax in the evening.

But there are plenty of others who could easily give an evening or two a week, as this girl plans to do, to some work of this sort.

How about your evenings?

CONFESSES TO MURDER CLEARS HER PARENTS

Widow Admits She Killed Her Husband when Told Her Father and Mother are Accused

TELLS HER STORY

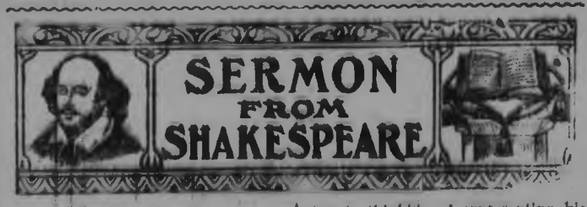
Examiner Special.

POINT PLEASANT, W. VA., NOV. 25.—Her nerve broken when informed that her father and mother had been placed under arrest at the old homestead in Jackson County, charged with complicity in the killing of her husband, Mrs. James Mulholland to-day confessed. Mrs. Mulholland and her brother had been brought to the Mason County jail here by Sheriff McCowan of Jackson County, after their arrest in Columbus, O., where they had gone to bury the body of Mulholland, the assertion having been made that he had committed suicide.

The arrest of the wife and her brother was made in a dramatic manner at the funeral last Thursday. Mrs. Mulholland protested her innocence until informed that her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Lockhart, of Silverton, Jackson County, had been taken into custody and were confined in the Jackson County jail at Ripley. The woman's confession was made to Sheriff McCowan, Detective Rupert Kesser and Jailer Ash Hughes and the jailer's wife.

The prisoner said her intentions were to commit suicide in Columbus immediately after the funeral of her husband, and that she now made the confession to clear her parents.

Mrs. Mulholland said that no one saw the shooting. She was running in the yard at her father's home and had a shotgun in her hand. It struck the corner of the house and was discharged, the load of No. 2 shot striking her husband in the face, causing instant death. She then laid the gun across his dead body and reported that he had shot himself.



All things that are,
Are with more spirit chased than enjoyed.
—Merchant of Venice, Act. II., Sc. 6

Enjoyed, as used in this passage, has reference to the pleasures of possession. Each man thinks if he had this position or that object he would be satisfied. The only creatures that are ever satisfied are the animals in the summer fields, the hog in its pen, or human beings whose chief good is "but to sleep and feed." Shakespeare in classifying the latter termed them beasts. They need not be considered.

All properly constituted men are working towards a goal. The politician is thinking of representing his state or province in congress or the commons, of winning the governorship; he may even have the prize of the Presidency or the Prime Minister's position before him. The young lawyer has in his mind's eye a judgeship. The manufacturer has his gaze fixed on a million. The midshipman or the lieutenant begins his naval or military career with the hope of some day being a commander-in-chief.

Many strive, few attain! The winners have a brief moment of exultation. The enjoyment of the strivers has been incessant. Unless those who have reached the goal seek other goals, their prize will turn out to be but dead sea fruit, dust and ashes.

Shakespeare has frequent allusions to the hunt. This is an excellent example. As he wrote he no doubt had in mind the fleeing fox and the pursuing hunters. Brutal sport! but the dash, the speed, the danger of it, made it a real pleasure. The fox is run to ground, the winner of the brush has in the prize but feeble enjoyment, compared with the enjoyment of the chase. It is the chase, not the game, that takes men to Africa and Alaska, to South America and to India.

The world is a big hunting ground, some men are engaged in the pursuit of arms, some in mercantile pursuits, all are after a goal, honours, or wealth. Position and decorations are won; they pall and weary. Wealth is gained; it does not give the satisfaction that was expected. Alexander wept when he had no more worlds to conquer. The restless spirit of Napoleon sought to bring the old and new world under his sway; had he won the whole round earth, he would still have been dissatisfied. Wellington conquered the "world conqueror." Did it satisfy? No! He sought other pursuits. In statesmanship he found an outlet for his energy.

Cecil Rhodes pursued wealth, diamonds and gold. It was all dust and ashes. He sought happiness in the greater good of the British Empire as he saw it. He strove to paint the whole of Africa red. He fortunately failed. Even in his death hour he was still seeking satisfaction. The Rhodes scholarship scheme bringing young men from all parts of the Anglo-Saxon world to a common centre in Great Britain no doubt gives his restless spirit more satisfaction than his wealth ever did. Though dead he is still pursuing a great object.

Andrew Carnegie may have imagined that in the enjoyment of his wealth he would find happiness. His millions proved a burden. Other and higher pursuits he took up. The betterment of the condition of mankind by education became his goal. In the establishment of universities and libraries he finds a pleasure he could never have found in his mere millions. As a money maker he could not but at times be conscious that his success meant the failure of some other producer; as a promoter of education, he has the consciousness of doing good to many without causing any possible suffering.

J. Pierpont Morgan is another striking example. His millions, in themselves, brought no satisfaction. A mere gold-heaper he could not be. He became a hunter after the rare art treasures of the world. His antiquarian collection, his old-world paintings bring him real pleasure. They are a part of his pursuit for the uplifting of the nation to which he belongs out of the material slough into which it has fallen to a higher plane of culture and refinement.

In every instance the pursuit of some object is the real source of enjoyment; the attainment of that object leaves a void in the heart. It is clear that man was made for work. If a man, having attained, decides to rest and selfishly enjoy what remains of life, what is the result? Querulous; complaining old age, or, if he be still young, too often, vice. Salvation comes only in work, the pursuit of high goals. Much of the unhappiness in the world is due to the weakness of resting in achievement. Keep up the hunt, seek higher goals, other game, and the spirit will never tire.

In work toward definite ends is the ultimate good. In the sowing there is greater pleasure than in the reaping, in the planting than in the digging. The hunter's highest enjoyment is in search and the pursuit. The loftier, the more unattainable the object, the better it is for the spirit. The man who reaches after the sun may win a star. It is still as true as it was in Shakespeare's day that "Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the doing."

Verses 59-60—How do you account for the fact that seventy reputed holy men, the members of the Sanhedrin should seek false witnesses to encompass the death of a righteous man like Jesus?

What has been the record, from that time until now, of ecclesiastical assemblies in their trial of reputed heresies?

Give a reasoned answer to the following: Will a truly good man will the mind of Jesus, be perturbed by or get angry at, or wish to injure another good man who also shows the spirit of Jesus, for teaching different views concerning the Bible, or religion, to what he holds himself?

Verse 61—What did Jesus say, that in anyway resembled their accusation that He was able to destroy the Jewish Temple and build it again in three days? (See John ii:19.)

Suppose Jesus, or any other man, had said that he could destroy the temple and build it up again in three days to what extent would it be blameworthy?

How much blame is due the man who wilfully misrepresents the statements of a religious teacher for the purpose of condemning him?

Give some examples of the saying of Jesus that could be perverted into a meaning that He did not intend and say why He left Himself open for such perversion?

Verse 62—Why did Jesus not answer, what this witness had said, and why did He make no answer to the high priest?

Can you give any examples where silence is the best policy, when confronted with a false accusation?

Verses 63-64—Jesus answered in the affirmative that He was the Christ the Son of God, but what would His answer have been if the high priest had asked him, "Art thou God?"

What did Jesus mean by "the Son of Man sitting at the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven?"

Verse 65—What did the rending of His garment by the high priest signify?

What is blasphemy?

In what words of Jesus did His blasphemy consist, from the point of view of the high priest?

Verses 66-68—Put yourself as nearly as possible, in the place of one of the members of this council and say how you would try to justify yourself for saying Jesus was worthy of death?

What are some of the evils of religious intolerance in this day? (This question must be answered in writing by members of the club.)

Why did Jesus bear all these cruel indignities without retaliating?

THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT IS FORMALLY DISSOLVED BY HIS MAJESTY THE KING

First Polling Will Take Place on Saturday and the Campaign Will be Short, Sharp and Decisive

MEMBERS AT WORK

Special Wire to The Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., NOV. 28.—His Majesty, King George V., at noon today formally dissolved the British Parliament, and turned over to the great electorate the question of veto powers of the House of Lords, which literally taps at the sound footings of the British constitution. His Majesty's speech was very brief and beyond regretting that the parties had failed to agree regarding the powers of the Upper Chamber, made no reference to the momentous question Officially thrust upon Britain this day. There was a feeling reference to the death of King Edward, who last February convened the Parliament so quickly dissolved. The King spoke gratefully of the fact that the long-standing fisheries dispute, involving Canada, Newfoundland and the United States had been admirably settled at the Hague. The formal dissolution of parliament to-day was attended only by those members of the Commons whose duties necessitated their presence. Most of the members are already in their constituencies conducting campaigns, which must be short and decisive. The first polling will take place on Saturday, but the elections will continue till well on to Christmas.

BARN AND CONTENTS DESTROYED BY FIRE

Mr. Barnes, of Douro, a Heavy Loser as Result of a Blaze on Saturday Evening---Fire Was a Spectacular One, the Sky Being Brilliantly Illuminated.

The barn on the property of Mr. Ed. Barnes, who lives in Douro township, near Nassau, was totally destroyed by fire about 7.30 o'clock on Saturday evening and the loss will be very heavy. The cause of the blaze could not be ascertained. The fire had obtained a good start before being discovered and the efforts of Mr. Barnes and neighbours who hastened to his assistance, were powerless to stay the progress of the flames. The barn burned fiercely, lighting up the sky to the north of the city brightly. Mr. Barnes hastened to the telephone and called up the fire hall, at the same time as Chief Howard, who had noticed the reflection of the fire was trying to locate the whereabouts of the blaze over the telephone. Although it was outside the city limits Chief Howard took two men and four chemicals and hastened to the scene of the fire in his rig. He was too late to be of any service, however, as the barn was almost destroyed. The roof of the dwelling house was singed with flying cinders, but no damage was done.

The barn, a fine structure with cement foundation was completely ruined and twenty-one pigs, 450 bushels of oats and a large quantity of straw were wiped out.

MELVILLE NAMED AFTER CHARLES MELVILE HAYS INTERESTING INFORMATION

Melville is on the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific, between Winnipeg and Edmonton, a distance of nearly 800 miles, traverses what is probably the most fertile farming district on the continent—a district that may well be designated as the granary of the world. The Dominion Government experts estimate that in the near future Canada will produce an annual wheat crop of over eight hundred million bushels, more than four times as much as is imported by Great Britain annually from all of the wheat producing countries of the world combined.

Successful, energetic farmers are hearkening to the cry "On to Canada." An idea as to the extent of this movement may be gained from the fact that there are twenty-five farmers coming to Canada for every one that moved to this country five years ago. Think of it—an increase of 2500 per cent. There is a reason for this increasing tide of immigration. Western Canada is the Land of Opportunity and Plenty. It is the Last Best West and contains the only large area of undeveloped land, suitable for agricultural purposes, on the North American continent.

The next few years will witness the growth of many new towns located along the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific, into large and important cities, just as the advent of the Canadian Pacific developed such well known cities as Brandon, Moose Jaw, Regina, Medicine Hat, Calgary, and Revelstoke. But the opportunity to reap the large profits that were made by those who purchased lots in these new towns at ground floor prices is gone forever.

The International Securities Co., are exclusive sales agents for all the Grand Trunk Pacific divisional point town-sites between Winnipeg and Edmonton. Our connection with this railroad enables us to offer to our clients the choicest lots in the several important towns located on the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and as our success depends upon making profitable investments for our clients, it is necessary that we exercise great care in discriminating between investments of substantial merit and investment of a doubtful character. Named after Charles Melville Hays, the energetic President of the Grand Trunk Pacific, this prosperous two year old town has evidently inherited the enterprising spirit of its namesake. It is significant that President Hays and members of his family have invested in Melville lots.

Melville is the first Saskatchewan divisional and junction point on the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the largest divisional point town on the main line between Winnipeg and Edmonton. Few cities, even in this land of wonders — Western Canada — have shown such remarkable growth. The assessed value of the real estate in Melville in 1909 was a little over one half million dollars. The assessed value of Melville's real estate in 1910 was $1,792,000, an increase in one year of 350 per cent. Three years ago Melville had one building. To-day it has over 500 buildings and a population of 2,000 energetic people. Such a rapid increase in population and such a phenomenal advance in real estate values gives an idea as to the profits that will be realized by investors in Melville lots when Melville has a population of 20,000, or even 10,000. That this increase is not only possible, but reasonably certain, will be recognized after a careful study of the map on the enclosed folder. We consider Melville's strategic position second to no city in Western Canada. As a manufacturing and distributing centre, Melville will have transportation facilities to all parts of the United States; to Halifax, N.S., on the Atlantic Ocean, to Prince Rupert, B.C., on the Pacific Ocean; to Fort Churchill, on Hudson Bay, and to Fort William, on Lake Superior. Being a divisional and junction point on the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Hudson Bay railways, it is difficult to imagine Melville other than as one of our coming important cities.

Court of Appeal Again Deals With the Vexed Problem

Examiner Special.

TORONTO, NOV. 28.—The much baffletted bread law was again before the Court of Appeal to-day, to determine what the Legislature meant by small bread. The case resolved itself into a lot of technical arguments. It affects the whole province, and one of the judges suggested it would be a good thing to refer the whole matter to Legislature again to see what they meant. There will be no decisions.

WIND AND DOING.

"The first Canadian-owned vessel built and equipped in Britain and sent out to defend our coasts would become the nucleus and the training ground of Canadian stokers, Canadian sailors, and Canadian officers, and by-and-bye perhaps of a Canadian Admiral on the Canadian coast.' From Laurier on the navy? Not a bit of it; from Hon. George E. Foster in the Commons on March 29, 1909. All that Sir Wilfrid did was to bring out two training ships. Foster talked. Laurier did it. Now Borden denounces it. Great game.—Globe.

MR. BORDEN'S AMENDMENT.

The sub-amendment presented to Mr. Monk's amendment presented to the House of Commons by Mr. Borden last night, is a cleverly designed plan to rally to his support all those who are opposed to the Government's naval policy, with the exception of the Quebec Nationalists, whom, he inferentially repudiated. Under the umbrella thus erected, both the man who is opposed to the navy altogether and he who does not believe that the Government is going far enough in the interests of the Empire can gather and take shelter.

But what guarantee is there that this umbrella will stand the next storm from the political sky? The Leader of the Opposition has had several policies on the naval question; he seems now to have determined upon the pro-Imperialist phase of the subject, and to entirely disregard those who believed that Canada should have something to say in the direction of her navy, just as she has in the direction of her militia. There are too many people in this Dominion who believe in the doctrine that a self-governing country, such as Canada shall have control of the expenditure of her own money to make Mr. Borden's Imperialistic attachments popular.

We are not all Imperialists of the Denison school; there are some people in Canada who still have a firm belief in the doctrine of autonomy; we believe they are in the majority, and they certainly will not accept such a doctrine as that set forth by Mr. Borden that Canada should do what the British Admiralty asks us without any regard to the conditions which exist in this country.

While Mr. Borden's speech, which was admittedly the best of his career, was loudly cheered by his party in Parliament, what proof is there that it is the policy of the party? It may be the policy of R. L. Borden; it may be the policy of Robert Rogers; but is it the policy of the party as a whole? Mr. Borden has presented policies before. He presented a policy once at Halifax which has since been relegated to the political lumber room. Will the same fate overtake this new policy? Time will tell.

Meanwhile, it might be noted that the Opposition leader completely ignored the very important fact, which is the basis of the naval policy, that Great Britain has withdrawn her ships form Canadian waters. He is willing to harness Canada to the Imperial chariot, but he is not ready to do his share towards the protection of the coasts of the Dominion, which, under his policy, would remain defenceless. That is not the sort of policy which will appeal to self-respecting people, as we believe our people are.—Ottawa Free Press.

PILES

INCONSISTENT CANADIANS.

It is stated that Mr. G. T. Blackstock, the well-known criminal lawyer, has been invited by the chief whip of the Unionist party in Great Britain to "come over and help us"—as counsel for the defence, we assume. It is also stated that Hon. Geo. E. Foster has received an invitation to come to the help of the Unionists, the Tory party, in the pending British elections. The Tories and the Lords must be pretty hard pressed in the fight, when they call out the reserves. We can easily spare these distinguished orators, but their visit on such a mission is hardly consistent. They are asked to help perpetuate the forces of retrogression, from which many of the people now in Canada came to Canada to escape. The House of Lords and the party that stands for it, are the relics of absolutism in government, which has, but for these, practically passed away. Canadians are false to the spirit that animates our Canadian political conditions, when they go across the water to help retain or restore the political fetters, to escape which a large portion of the people of this country came to this country.

LET US KEEP FAITH.

(Ottawa Free Press)

The discussion in the Commons of the racial appeals which were made to the electors of Drummond and Arthabaska and the other debate which we are promised by Col. Sam Hughes and Dr. Sproule upon the surroundings of the Eucharistic Congress are not pleasant, nor are they politically edifying. But somehow or other they seem to be inevitable under the political conditions of our country, and it must be admitted that both parties are blamable.

Meantime the Kingston Standard appeals to us to all remember that the English-speaking people of Canada must keep faith with the people of Quebec. Some of us may not disagree with their views as to the course which should be followed in political affairs, but even while disagreeing we must respect those opinions and combat them, not by abuse or insult, but by argument and conciliation.

The Standard is right. Canada must keep faith with Quebec, just as Quebec must keep faith with Ontario, and the way in which to keep faith is for each to co-operate in the business of nation-building not in the interest of Quebec alone or of Ontario alone, but from the standpoint of national unity.

And that, in brief, is the Laurier policy.

CONDEMNED BY HIS FRIENDS

Even the Toronto World, with its Conservative leanings, and affiliations, is disgusted with the shifting, vacillating, temporizing and impolitic attitude of Mr. Borden, leader of the Conservative Opposition, on the question of the navy. The World of Saturday says:

The Conservatives at Ottawa have had two cracks at defining their position in regard to the duty of Canada to herself and to the mother country in connection with naval defence. First of all they joined with the ruling Liberals in a unanimous declaration for a Canadian navy. This was at the opening of last session. Before the end of the session they withdrew from this position and substantially declared for an immediate vote for battleships and a reference of the question of a navy to the people. They are now declaring that nothing be done in the way of a navy until an appeal to the country has been made.

This switching of position and this declaration to do nothing but consult the people is an instance of misguided policy. Political parties must keep their faith as individuals must, although if you find yourself wrong there is nothing like confessing it.

But on the other point it is altogether contrary to the ideas of responsible government for a party to say that they can do nothing until the people have been consulted. The party in opposition can always say that they decline to propound any policy, and that they cannot express any opinion other than to negative the government one. But in a matter of supreme importance such as the defence of the country or the defence of the empire for a party to say that they desire to put the responsibility upon the people, is to our mind impolitic and an impossible proposal; because to our mind the defence of the country must always rest upon the country's best men and the ones who are trained to politics and who are supposed to know the situation better than the ordinary citizen. Parliament is for that purpose. The ordinary citizen is not competent in a general way to frame up a war policy or to declare war should it be in order.

We do not believe that any country could remain in existence, whose policy in regard to its defence was left to a vote of the people. If there are any cases in point we would like to see them stated. For a party that has the reputation of being Conservative and pro-British, and that assumed the responsibility of establishing a militia service for this country to say that it has not a policy in regard to its defence other than what the people of the country may decide on referendum, is a confession of weakness, or it may be the straining after the somewhat doubtful object of putting the other fellow in a hole. But it is not good politics for Conservatives or those who believe in responsible government.

The Canadian Naval Service Natural Corollary Of The Militia

Senator Belcourt, in his excellent speech on the address, quite happily characterized the Canadian navy as a "natural corollary of the militia." Nothing better in the way of description need be attempted or could be invented. It has been so for more than fifty years in fact and for more than forty by express statutory enactment of the Dominion Parliament. Apparently Mr. Belcourt was speaking as both jurist and historian; at least what he said was perfectly justifiable on grounds of law and history alyike.

In a letter to La Presse some days ago Sir Wilfrid Laurier recalled that the Canadian navy had its origin in the early fifties, more than a dozen years before Confederation, and the fact that Dr. Fortin, its first commodore, was a Conservative member of Parliament; did not hinder the Liberal Premier for in giving that historic veteran of the Gulf of St. Lawrence his meed of well-deserved appreciation for the invaluable service he then rendered to Canada at the expense of his comfort and the risk of his life. Dr. Fortin will be remembered as the real founder of the Canadian navy, and Sir Wilfrid's tribute to him will be quoted to the credit of both, when no one will be able to recall the fact that there ever was a bye-election in Drummond and Arthabaska.

There is a large, but lessening, number of Canadians who remember the "Trent affair" of 1861. The captain of the United States armed vessel took from a British merchant ship, the Trent, on the high seas, Mr. Mason and Mr. Siddell, who had embarked on her at a British West Indian port as passengers to Europe. With the utmost promptitude and the most unmistakable firmness the British Government demanded the restoration of the two representatives of the southern confederacy to the British and European Governments, for that was the mission of Messrs. Mason and Slidell. Ultimately they were given up and war was thus averted, but the incident gave a great impulse to the Canadian volunteer movement by land and to the gradual strengthening of Dr. Fortin's gallant little gulf fleet. During the Trent Excitement British regiments, sent to Canada in winter, had to be transported by sleighs a large part of the way from the city of St. John to the city of Quebec. That impulse has never ceased to be practically operative, and from 1861 till now volunteering has been as popular among the French as among the English in the Province of Quebec.

It was quite natural that this impulse should find expression in the proceedings of the Canadian Parliament of the time. In 1863 two militia acts were passed under the regime of John Sandfield Macdinald, one dealing with the general militia and the other providing for the enrolment and regulation of a "volunteer militia." In this statute provision was made for "naval" corps as well as land corps. In 1868 immediately after Confederation these acts were remodelled, emended, and consolidated, the various classes of the militia being included in the same statute, two of them being the active militia land service and the active militia naval service, respectively. This classification was retained in the Militia Act, which forms part of the Dominion Revised Statutes of 1886, so the militia organization remained, under the Minister of Militia until by the Act of 1910 the naval service was separated from the land service and committed to the administration of a department and a Minister of Marine.

The absolute continuity of the legislation regarding the militia naval services easily traced from 1863 to 1910, without a break in the chain. A policy that has not only endured but undergone a natural and obvious evolution for several years more than half a century and has survived so great a constitutional change as Confederation cannot properly be regarded as having been sprung on the country or its people. In addition to being continuous in itself the naval policy has been during that long period developed side by side with the militia land service policy, so that Senator Belcourt is perfectly accurate in speaking of the two as having been concomitant all the way. We may add an expression of opinion, which may prove a true forecast, that by the time the general election comes around, after this and two more sessions, the naval service will be the more popular of the two. Certainly it will not be a service of which any Canadian need be ashamed.—Globe.

REV. FATHER McCOLL REFERS TO LECTURES OF MR. J. H. BURNHAM

Says That it is Beneath Their Dignity to Argue With a Man Who Makes Such Statements, Which he Says are Not Only Absurd But Positively "Idiotic."

Peterborough, Nov. 28.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Some people have asked me, why we do not refute the calumnies against the Catholic church, contained in the lectures of J. H. Burnham. My answer is, that we consider it beneath our dignity to argue with a man who makes statements, that are not only absurd, but positively "idiotic."

Permit me to give a couple of examples. In an editorial of the Peterborough Review, October 28th 1909, Mr. Burnham attacked Christians in general. He accused them of "critting to the questionable rich," of being "very inconsistent," of "believing one thing and persistently doing another," of being "irredeemably stupid." We believe every reasonable man will admit, that these allegations are not only notoriously false, but ridiculously absurd. It is, therefore, no surprise to us to find the man, who a year ago censured all Christians, to-day abusing Catholics. The question naturally arises. Is J. Hampden Burnham himself a Christian?

Example No. 2. I take from a letter I wrote to the Examiner November, 1909.

Not long since Mr. Burnham delivered in several places a lecture on Indian women. From what he said one would conclude that he believed Indian women occupied a sort of ideal state in life. He expatiated on their freedom, and the high place of honour they held among the people of their tribe. In proof of this high honour, he adduced the fact, that Indians trace their descent of all rank, titles and possessions, not through the father, but through the mother. Francis Parkman in his works (Frontenac Edition, Vol. III, page 41-42) mentions this fact, but draws therefrom a very different conclusion. His words are "This rule of descent was noticed by Champlain, among the Hurons in 1615. That excellent observer refers it to an origin which is doubtless the true one. The child may not be the son of his reputed father, but must be the son of his mother—a consideration of more than ordinary force in an Indian community."

In his lecture at the Conservative Club, Nov. 19th, Mr. Burnham said, "I think I have some degree of knowledge of the history of Canada." But in the above instance we have him giving a positively idiotic interpretation of a simple fact of history. But idiotic as his interpretation of this plain and simple fact of history evidently is, it is our opinion that he knows much more about Indian women, than he does about either the church, the state or politics in Canada or any other country.

Therefore we wish to have nothing to do with a man of his calibre. If we are obliged to deal with bigots, give us a Margaret L. Shepherd, in preference to a J. H. Burnham. We refuse to recognize people of their stamp. We detest ignorance, imbecility and prejudice, especially when accompanied by conceit and pomposity. If we are to have opponents, let them be men able and capable of reasoning.

W. J. McCOLL.

Our Elevator

Our elevator is one of the wonders of the age. It cannot possibly fall. The ordinary elevator is held up by ropes, and these ropes often wear out and their connections often break loose, and then—disaster.

Our elevator is exactly like the Lift Lock. It is built on a great steel piston that rises and retires into an equally strong steel cylinder. There are no ropes to break and wear out. The elevator sits directly on its strong steel column.

It gives a comfortable feeling to the shopper when she enters an elevator like ours. All the new elevators that are now being built in the large cities are on this plan. It is quite an interesting machine.

Let us show it to you.

"THE BETRAYAL"

BY A. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

"Will you have Mr. Ducaine's things packed and sent across—did you say to your house, Lord Chelsford?"

"To my house," Lord Chelsford assented.

"To No. 19, Grosvenor Square," the Duke ordered. "Mr. Ducaine will not be returning."

Lord Chelsford rose. I followed his example. Neither the Duke nor Ray attempted any form of farewell. The former, however, laid some notes upon the table.

"I believe, Mr. Ducaine," he said, "that there is a month's salary due to you. I have added something to the amount. Until to-day I have always considered your duties admirably fulfilled."

I looked at the notes and at the Duke.

"I thank your Grace," I answered. "I will take the liberty of declining your gift. My salary has been fully paid."

For a moment I fancied I caught a softer gleam in Ray's eyes. He seemed about to speak, but checked himself. Lord Chelsford hurried me from the room, and into his little brougham, which was waiting.

"Do you really mean me to go to China, sir?" I asked him, anxiously.

"Not I!" he answered. "I am going to send you to Brasier."

CHAPTER XXXVII.

LORD CHELSFORD'S DIPLOMACY

I dined alone with Lord and Lady Chelsford. From the moment of our arrival at Chelsford House my host had encouraged nothing but the most general conversation. It happened that they were alone, as a great dinner party had been postponed at the last moment owing to some Royal indisposition. Lord Chelsford in his wife's presence was careful to treat me as an ordinary guest; but directly she had left the room we were alone and he abandoned his reticence.

"Mr. Ducaine," he said, "from the time of our last conversation at the War Office and our subsequent tete-a-tete I have reposed in you the most implicit confidence."

"I have done my best, sir," I answered, "to deserve it."

"I believe you," he declared. "I am going now to extend it. I am going to tell you something which will probably surprise you very much. Since the first time when you found your documents tampered with, every map and every word of writing entrusted to the safe, either at Brasier House or Cavendish Square, has been got at. Exact copies of them are in Paris to-day."

I looked at him in blank amazement. The thing seemed impossible.

"But in very many cases," I protested, "the code word for opening the safe has been known only to Colonel Ray, the Duke, and myself."

"The fact remains as I have stated it," Lord Chelsford said, slowly. "My information is positive. When you came to me and suggested that you should make two copies of everything—one correct, one a mass of incorrectness, I must admit that I thought the idea far-fetched and unworkable. Events, however, have proved otherwise. I have safely received everything which you sent me, and up to the present, with the exception of that first plan of the Winchester forts, our secrets are unknown. But now we have come to a deadlock."

"If you do not mind telling me, Lord Chelsford, I should very much like to know why you did not explain the exact circumstances to Ray and the Duke this afternoon."

Lord Chelsford nodded.

"I thought that you would ask that," he said, "It is not altogether an easy question to answer. Remember this. The French War Office are to-day in possession of an altogether false scheme of our proposed defences—a scheme which, if they continue to regard it as genuine, should prove nothing short of disastrous to creb at present. Positively I did not ret at present. Positively I did not feel that I cared to extend that knowledge to a single other person."

"But you might have told Colonel Ray and the Duke separately," I remarked. "The Duke has never been my friend, and Ray has other causes for being angry with me just at present; but between them they rescued me from something like starvation, and it is terrible for them to think of me as they are doing now."

Lord Chelsford poured himself out a glass of wine, and held it up to the light for a moment.

"Mr. Ducaine," he said, "a secret is a very subtle thing. Though the people who handle it are men of the most unblemished honour and reputation, still the fewer they are, the safer the life of that secret."

"But the Duke and Colonel Ray!" I protested.

"I might remind you," Lord Chelsford said, smiling, "that those are precisely the two persons who shared with you the knowledge of the word which opened the safe."

I laughed.

"I presume that you do not suspect either of them?" I remarked.

"The absurdity is obvious," Lord Chelsford answered. "But the force of my former remark remains. I like that secret better when it rests between you and me. It means, I know, that for a time—I promise you that it shall only be for a time—you must lose your friends, but, the cause is great enough, and it should be within our power to remind you later on."

"Oh, I am willing enough," I answered. "But may I ask what you are going to do with me?"

Lord Chelsford smoked in silence for several moments.

"Mr. Ducaine," he said, "who is there in the household of the Duke who opens that safe and copies those papers? Who is the traitor?"

"God only knows!" I answered. "It is a hopeless mystery."

"Yet we must solve it," Lord Chelsford said, "and quickly. If a single batch of genuine maps and plans were tampered with, disparities would certainly appear, and the thing might be suspected. Besides, upon the face of it, the thing is terribly serious."

"You have a plan," I said.

"I have," Lord Chelsford answered calmly. "You remember Grooton?"

"Certainly! He was a servant at Brasier."

"And the very faithful servant of his country also," Lord Chelsford remarked. "You know, I believe, that he was a secret service man. He is entirely safe, and I have sent for him. Now I imagine that the Duke will wish our new secretary to live still at the 'Brand'—he preferred it in your case, as you will remember. Our new secretary is going to be my nephew. He is very stolid and honest, and fortunately not a chatterbox. He is going to be the nominal secretary, but I want you to be the one who really does the work."

"I am afraid I don't understand!" I was forced to admit.

"It will mean," Lord Chelsford said, "some privation and a great deal of inconvenience for you. But I am going to ask you to face it, for the end to be gained is worth it. I want you also to be at the 'Brand,' but to lie hiddden all the day time. You can have one of the upstair rooms fitted as a writing room. Then you and my nephew can do the transposition. And beyond all that I want you to think—to think and to watch."

My heart leaped with joy to think that after all I was not to go into exile. Then the quiet significance of Lord Chelsford's last words were further impressed upon me by the added gravity of his manner.

"Mr. Ducaine," he said, "you must see for yourself that I am running a very serious risk in making these plans with you behind the backs of the Duke of Rowchester and Colonel Ray. The Duke is a man of the keenest sense of honour, as his recent commercial transactions have shown. He has parted with a hundred thousand pounds rather than that the shadow of a stigma could rest upon his name. He is also my personal friend, and very sensitive of any advice or criticism. Then Ray—a V. C., and one of the most popular soldiers in England to-day—he also is quick-tempered, and he also is my friend. You can see for yourself that in acting as I am, behind the backs of these men, I am laying myself open to very grave trouble. Yet I see no alternative. There is a rank traitor either on the Military Board or closely connected with the Duke's household. He does not know it, nor do they know it, but everyone of his servants has been vigorously and zealously watched without avail. The circle has been drawn closer and closer, Mr. Ducaine. Down in Brasier you may be able to help me in narrowing it down till only one person is within it. Listen!"

Lady Chelsford entered, gorgeous in white satin and a flaming tiara. She looked at me, I thought, a little gravely.

"Morton," she said, "I want you to spare me a minute. Mr. Ducaine will excuse you, I am sure."

Lord Chelsford and she left the room together. I, feeling the heat of the apartment, walked to the window and raising the sash looked out into the cool dark evening. At the door drawn up in front of Lord Chelsford's brougham, was a carriage with a tall footman standing facing me. I recognized him and the liveries in a moment. It was the Rowchester carriage. Some one from Rowchester House was even now with Lord and Lady Chelsford.

Fresh complications, then! Had the Duke come to see me off, or had his suspicions been aroused? Was he even now insisting upon an explanation with Lord Chelsford? Ten minutes passed, and I began to get restless and anxious. Then the door opened, and Lord Chelsford entered alone. He came over at once to my side. He was looking perplexed and a little annoyed.

"Ducaine," he said, "Lady Angela Hurberly is here."

I started, and I suppose my face betrayed me.

"Lady Angela—here?"

"And she wishes to see you," he continued. "Lady Chelsford is chaperoning her to-night to Suffolk House, but she says that she should have come here in any case. She believes that you are going to China."

"Did you tell her?" I asked.

"I have told her nothing," he answered. "The question is, what you are to tell her. I understand, Ducaine, that Lady Angela was engaged to be married to Colonel Ray."

"I believe that she is," I admitted.

"Then I do not understand her desire to see you," Lord Chelsford said. "The Duke of Rowchester is my friend and relative, Ducaine, and I do not see how I can permit this interview."

"And I," said a quiet thrilling voice behind his back, "do not know how you are going to prevent it."

She closed the door behind her. She was so frail and so delicately beautiful in her white gown, with the ropes of pearls around her neck, the simply parted hair, and her dark eyes were so plaintive and yet so tender, that the angry exclamation died away on Lord Chelsford's lips.

"Angela," he said, "Mr. Ducaine is here. You can speak with him if you will, but it must be in my presence. You must not think that I do not trust you—both of you. But I owe this condition to your father."

She came over to me very timidly. She seemed to me so beautiful, so exquisitely childish that I touched the fingers of the hand she gave me with a feeling of positive reverence.

"You have come to wish me Godspeed," I murmured. "I shall never forget it."

"You are really going, then?"

"I am going for a little time out of your life, Lady Angela," I answered. "It is necessary," Lord Chelsford broke in. "But I am not going in disgrace. I am very thankful to be able to tell you that."

"It was not necessary to tell me," she answered. "Am I not here?"

Your Time Is Not Yours

It Belongs to Those Depending on You. For Their Sakes Preserve Health and Strength.

You never thought of it just this way before. While not feeling well you have neglected to take active means of restoring health, thinking all the time that you were the only one to suffer by delay.

Not so. For who among us has not someone depending on him for comfort, happiness or the means of livelihood?

When you lie awake nights, worrying over little things, get nervous and irritable, have indigestion and headaches, you may be sure the nervous system is becoming exhausted.

Time is not yours to delay. You must call a halt to the wasting process. Otherwise you will have a rude awakening some day, when prostrations, paralysis or locomotor ataxia lays you low. For such is the natural and inevitable result of neglected nervous diseases.

You can restore the nervous system by using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food. Being composed of Nature's most potent nerve restoratives, it cannot fail to benefit you. Each dose must of necessity bring you nearer to health, strength and vigour.

Mr. William Brandon, Victoria street, Strathroy, Ont., writes: "Before using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food my nervous system seemed all unstrung. I could not sleep, had no appetite, hands and feet were cold, my digestion was poor and I had jerking of the limbs. The first box of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food helped me, and I continued until I had taken twenty-four boxes. This treatment has made a radical change in my condition, building up the system and strengthening the nerves."

Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 5 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Suffered for Years From Constipation and Sick Headache.

Headache seems intimately with many people; indeed, some are seldom if ever free from it, suffering continually, and wondering why they can get no relief. The most frequent of all are bilious or sick headaches, and are caused by some derangement of the stomach or bowels, or both.

Burdock Blood Bitters regulates the digestive and biliary organs, removes acidity of the stomach, improves digestion, regulates the constipated bowels, and promotes a perfect circulation of pure blood to all portions of the body.

Mrs. C. Hazlewood, Chatsworth, Ont., writes: "For years I was troubled with sick headache and dizziness, and was also constipated. I was advised to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I only took three bottles of the medicine, and now feel like a new person, as I am completely cured. I can truthfully say that B.B.B. is the best medicine I have ever used."

Burdock Blood Bitters, has, during the last 35 years, built up an unrivalled reputation as a cure for all troubles arising from a constipated condition of the bowels.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

The lady who came to spend the day with mother yesterday brought her little grandchild. And at four o'clock, when school was out, the little girl next door and the little girl from two doors down the street came over to play dolls with her.

Mother produced some of the old family playthings in the way of doll's furniture for them, and for awhile they played most happily in the next room to my study. And then, all at once, I was conscious of a discord. The dispute concerned the arrangement of the furniture.

"But they never have bureaus in parlours," I heard.

"Yes they do. When we lived in the boarding house we had a bureau in our parlour behind the screen."

"But we haven't got a screen."

"I don't care. We've got to have the bureau in the parlour because if we don't there'll only be a piano and a chair, and you can't have a parlour with just a piano and a chair."

"But you can't have a bureau in a parlour, and I won't."

"Then I won't play, and I don't like you, and I'm going down and get grandma to take me home. I don't want to play with you. So there!"

This last remark delivered in a shrill tone, audible all over the house, brought grandmother to the scene of action.

"Madeline, don't you dare say that naughty thing again," she reproved. "Of course you will play with the other little girls and play as they want to. You know you can't have your own way all the time."

"That's the worst thing about Madeline," she explained to me subsequently, when comparative peace had been restored. "When she can't have her own way she sits down and says 'I won't play.' I think that's a terrible trait in a child. If she were my child I'd break her of it no matter what I had to do."

With difficulty I repressed a smile. Not because I don't agree with grandmother. I do, thoroughly. I don't know any trait I dislike more in a child than the "I won't play" habit. But you see I dislike it even more in grown-ups. And that's why I smiled.

For once on a time Madeline's grandmother used to be a very active member of a certain club. She isn't any longer because the club voted to change its place of meeting to one more generally accessible. Madeline's grandmother vigorously opposed the move, but lost. Therefore she said the grown-up equivalent to "I won't play," and left the club in wrath.

There is a woman in our neighbourhood who used to be a strong church member but who hasn't been inside the church this year. She thought the society needed a change of ministers. The trustees thought differently. So she said, "I won't play until you do what I want," and hasn't been inside the church since.

Two of my neighbours, who are usually active workers in the church fair, are doing nothing this year. Why? Because they wanted the church to hire a larger hall for the sale, and the majority of the worshippers deemed that unwise. So these highly charitable and religious folks said, "We won't play" and retired into their respective corners to sulk and hope that the fair would be a failure.

But why multiply instances? You know the "I won't play" folks as well as I do.

And hate them as much, I have no doubt.

So, of course, I don't need to suggest that you be sure not to resemble them in the slightest degree.

Ruth Cameron

North Hastings Mines Are Very Active

Very satisfactory news has been received as to the mining industry in the northern townships, of Hastings county, which, particularly as to the iron and pyrites propositions, was never before in so good a state as it now is. While there is no boom, nearly all the various lines of mining are busily employed and some important additions, as the result of extensive prospecting during the summer, are likely to be made.

Work has been commenced on the big deposit of hematite iron ore recently made by Mr. Longnecker near Madoc village, and as soon as the necessary machinery can be installed it will be operated on an extensive scale.

The Seymour iron mine — a very fine magnetic ore — which has not been worked for many years—is again to be operated.

The two properties named, being close to the long discussed Eldorado-Madoc branch of the Belleville & North Hastings Railway, may not improbably lead to the reopening of that line for traffic, a consummation which would be warmly welcomed by the people of the district as well as by those of this city, as connection with the far northern townships would thus be afforded to Madoc and Belleville.

Payments on the Coe and Rankin magnetic iron mine in Mayo township have, it is understood, all been made and some work is being done on the property.

The pyrites mine recently purchased by the O'Brien Mining Company from Mr. D. E. K. Stewart of Madoc is being worked extensively. It has proved to be a very fine proposition.

The marble quarry at Bancroft and the talc mine and mill at Madoc are being operated briskly.

Favourable reports have also been received from the corundum and lead mines, also from the Nichols chemical works at Sulphide.

W. Hungerford, mining engineer, Madoc, has discovered in Madoc township the largest deposit of white talc as yet found on this continent. It is situated near Eldorado, and Mr. Hungerford will install a mill of large capacity in the spring.

Blot-Out Sunday At Park Street Baptist Church

Blot-out Sunday was a great success yesterday at the Park Street Baptist church. The object of the day was to solicit voluntary subscriptions to clean off a current account debt.

There was a most generous response the collections of the day running up very close to two hundred dollars, and some yet to hear from.

The special speaker for the day was Dr. Sam Luttrell, and the esteem in which he is held as an Evangelist, with a plain gospel message, was shown by the large and appreciative audiences that gathered to hear him. It was a day of great spiritual blessing. At the evening service a number came out for Christ.

At the afternoon meeting for men the doctor spoke on "The two voices". The voice of Christ calling men to the higher and nobler things; the voice of the devil and his imps, calling men to the lower."

It was a day long to be remembered by all present

She was attended by Miss Lillian Smithson, sister of the groom, who looked very pretty in a dress of cream with lace trimmings. The groom was supported by Mr Herb Batman, brother of the bride. After the ceremony hearty congratulations were bestowed on the young couple and the guests sat down to a sumptuous wedding repast. Many handsome presents were received by the young couple among which was a handsome clock from the employees of the Central Milling Co. also one dozen silver forks from the Methodist Sunday school. The groom's gift to the bride was a signet ring to the bridesmaid a scarf pin, and to the groomsman a stick pin.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES OF SPRINGVILLE PRESBYTERIANS

Rev. J. D. Morrow Preached at Both Services Yesterday to Very Large Congregations---Diplomas Were Presented.

SPLENDID MUSIC

The anniversary services of the Springville Presbyterian church, the fourth since Rev. Dr. Marsh has been pastor, were celebrated yesterday in a very fitting manner. Rev. J. D. Morrow, of Dale Presbyterian church, Toronto, was the special preacher at both morning and evening service and there were very large congregations present, the capacity of the church being severely taxed on both occasions. The music supplied by the choir was a feature of the day. At the morning service they splendidly sang the anthem, "There is a Lord.' During the service Rev. Mr. Morrow sang the solo, "Happy in Him." His subject in the morning was "Fight the Good Fight," and his sermon was most eloquent. A special feature in the morning was the presentation of the diplomas given by the Presbyterian General Assembly for memorizing verses. Among the children, Marion Clarke, Donald Clarke, Janet Sanderson, Ina Marsh, Robb Whitfield, Grace Whitfield and Ethel Reynolds received diplomas. For the recitation of the shorter catechism without a mistake, diplomas were given Miss Vilda Trew and Mr. Harold Whitfield. Miss Lillian Hooten who recited four hundred verses, received a red seal of the General Assembly. Miss Nellie Wilkinson, who had already been presented with a diploma for reciting verses, was also given a red seal.

Rev. Mr. Morrow preached a powerful sermon in the evening on the subject, "What must I do to be saved." The church was crowded to the doors. The music was supplied by the young men of the congregation, who furnished a choir of thirty voices, which gave a sacred concert before the service with the following sacred numbers, "O'er Jordan's Dark and Stormy Waters," sung to the tune of "The Old Folks at Home," "Sometimes the Sky is Overcast" to the air of "Auld Lang Syne." Solo, "O'er My the Wings of Faith" by Mr. Fred Wilson, to the tune of "Resting To-night." Duet, Messrs. Jas. Fowler and Thos. McConnell, "Only a Beam of Sunshine."

During the evening Mrs. Esson and Mrs. Pryce, of Keene, sang a duet, "Sun of My Soul" and Rev. Mr. Morrow sang several solos.

The offerings for the day were very satisfactory. The entire services will never be forgotten by the congregation.

A great gathering is expected to-night when the annual concert will be held.

Another In The Series Of Popular Band Concerts

The next in the series of popular concerts under the auspices of the 57th Regimental Band and the last before the New Year, will be given in the market-hall on Friday evening of this week and the Band has arranged a special programme that promises to be of unusual merit. The band has been hard at work for weeks upon new music and will feature new numbers in Friday's programme. The biggest number will be the grand patriotic fantasia "Under the British Flag," giving the songs and dances of Great Britain and her colonies. Miss Julia Choate, violinist, will be the soloist for the evening. Miss Choate has been in the many concert engagements and is playing in splendid form. The Band will hold a rehearsal to-night and another on Thursday evening.

REVIVAL MEETINGS AT THE GOSPEL HALL

A spirit of revival has come over Peterborough and last night some good meetings were conducted. Several special evangelists are here. At the Gospel Hall R. McMurdo and D. Walker have been preaching for two weeks, with good results. Yesterday A. McMurdo assisted them. He arrived from New York, and is here to take up children's work. He is an artist evangelist of great ability, and has worked around New York with large success. Yesterday afternoon he gave a chalk talk on the gospel hadder, which interested the children. He will speak at the Gospel Hall every night at 7 p.m. except Saturday, to the children. His subject will be Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress and illustrated with rapid blackboard sketches. A gospel meeting follows at 8.

MISSION WAS COMMENCED AT ST. LUKE'S YESTERDAY

Rev. J. Bennett Anderson, the Diocesan Missionary, Began a Series of Special Meetings Yesterday.

AN ELOQUENT SPEAKER

What promises to be a most successful mission was commenced in St. Luke's Church yesterday, when Rev. J. Bennett Anderson, the diocesan missionary, began a series of addresses, which will be continued all this week. Rev. Mr. Anderson is a fascinating and eloquent speaker whose sermons are forcible and convincing, and he made a deep impression upon the large congregations which heard him at the morning and evening services yesterday. There will be special meetings each night this week, with the exception of Saturday evening and no doubt there will be a large attendance at each meeting throughout the week. The mission will be concluded on Sunday. The public is cordially invited to attend an dto hear Rev. Mr. Anderson.

Baldness and Itching Scalp

Caused by Microbes

There is no doubt about it. Dr. Sabouraud proved it when he infected a guinea pig with dandruff germs and all its hair disappeared in a short time. The entire medical world has accepted Dr. Sabouraud's discovery as final. Ask any worthy physician.

Paris leads the world in knowledge of diseases of the hair and remedies for the same and Parisian Sage is the one great remedy that kills the dandruff germs.

Dandruff is the forerunner of baldness. Take care of your hair while you have hair to take care of. Kill the dandruff germs now before the dandruff germs kill your hair.

Parisian Sage, the guaranteed dandruff cure and delightful hair dressing, is used extensively by ladies of refinement because it keeps the scalp absolutely clean and gives a bewitching lustre to the hair. Price 50 cents at leading druggists. Girl with Auburn hair on every package. Made in Canada by The Giroux Mfg. Co., Fort Erie, Ont. Mail orders filled, all charges prepaid. Sold and guaranteed by Wm. The Wide Scope Of "Farm And Dairy" Is Strikingly Illustrated

Not many Peterborians realize the wide scope and circulation of the agricultural paper, Farm and Dairy, which has now been located in this city for the past three years. Farm and Dairy is printed by the Examiner Printing Company each week, and its circulation is fast reaching a wide mark, in the distribution of the paper. The Circulation Manager of Farm and Dairy reported to the Examiner to-day, that in one mail received to-day, subscriptions were received for Farm and Dairy, from Ontario, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, The Transvaal, South Africa, and Scotland. This shows the wide scope of the circulation of our local farm paper, which should be patronized by all the farmers in Peterborough County.

Allowed To Go On Suspended Sentence But Must Pay The Costs

The altercation between two farmers who reside in the vicinity of Young's Point that culminated a few weeks ago in assault upon one by the other, inflicting actual bodily harm, was finally settled on Saturday afternoon. The case was heard in the County Court two weeks ago by Magistrate Edmison and judgment reserved until Saturday, when the accused and the complainant appeared before the magistrate. His Worship found the accused guilty, but stated that he was inclined to be lenient as he understood that the parties were amicably settling the long standing feud. He allowed him to go on suspended sentence and ordered that he pay the costs of the court, which is a considerable sum, amounting to about fifty dollars.

PALE, ANAEMIC GIRLS

The languid, semi-invalid girl is no longer popular. Firm flesh, rounded form and a healthy glow to the complexion are the results of using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food. Mrs. Goodson, 100 Sebastopol St., Montreal, Que., writes: "My daughter's appetite was bad and she was pale and bloodless. Since using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food there is a marked change in her condition. She is stronger and healthier in every way."

Y.W.C.A. "AT HOME"

The beautiful, home-like drawing rooms of the Young Women's Christian Association looked unusually bright and attractive on Saturday afternoon, the occasion being the third annual reception to the faculty and students of the Normal school. A cheerful grate fire in the reception hall conveyed a warm welcome to one hundred and fifty guests, who were cordially received by members of the social committee. An impromptu musical programme, given by Misses Leary, Campbell and Rannie and Miss Laura Logan, violinist, was greatly enjoyed.

The tea room was tastefully decorated in the school colours. Yellow chrysanthemums and foliage and yellow and green tapers were artistically used. The "At Home" seemed to be equally enjoyed by guests and hostesses. The Association again extends to the Normal students a cordial invitation to the building, with the hope that they may often call in and as often feel that it is their Association home during their sojourn with us.

SPECIAL MEETINGS IN ST. PAUL'S CHURCH

Large congregations assembled in St. Paul's church yesterday for the first of the Evangelistic services which are to continue every night this week. The interest at both services was manifest and deep. The pastor will be his own evangelist, and will preach every night. He will be assisted by the choir, Miss Davies and Mr. Mulligan, in the service of song. The Torrey-Alexander hymn books will be used. The subject of yesterday morning's sermon was taken from the text: "Prepare to meet Thy God." He drew a parallel between conditions in Israel in the time of Amos and those which exist in many places to-day. It was a time of great onward prosperity, and hence a time of great wickedness, licentiousness and forgetfulness of God. A rich luxury prevailed among the higher classes. Society from the highest to the lowest had become corrupt. Even the women were given to their cups. Sensuality and profligacy were everywhere to be found. And yet, through it all they kept up a form of religion. But it was only a form. The picture which Amos draws is a "sanctuary hot with religious zeal, and hot, too, with passion and the fumes of wine." And what was the message of the prophet of God to a people like this? He called upon them to repent. He pointed out the doom and destruction that awaited them if they failed to repent. He showed them the meaning of the judgments of God which had fallen on the nation, and that the end of all was to recover Israel from her sin and folly. But as Israel refused in response to either mercy or judgment to return unto the Lord, God gave them up, saying as He did so: "And because I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel." The pastor closed his sermon with an earnest appeal to the people to repent and accept the mercy of God, while yet it is offered. If a man will not meet God at the mercy-seat, he must meet Him at the judgment seat.

Mr Pogue will take for his subject to-night: "The Joy of Salvation."

THE LORDS LACK SYMPATHY SAYS CHANCELLOR LLOYD-GEORGE

Male Suffragette Attacks the Home Secretary With a Whip—Welshman Vigorously Arraigns the Lords for Their Lack of Knowledge of the Misery and Squalor to Be Found on Every Side.

CHURCHILL ASSAULTED

London, Nov. 28.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Right Hon. David Lloyd-George, the itinerant storm centre of the struggle, addressed several meetings at Edinburgh on Saturday. He declared that the referendum would be a prohibitive tariff against Liberalism, and again attacked the House of Lords with a vigor which will earn for him additional titles to those he already possesses, such as Limehorser, Mile-end Mobmonger, Specialist in Offal.

He denied that the Liberal policy was revolutionary. Even the members for Wales, the most radical portion of the kingdom, had no interest in overturning institutions or assailing property. He declared that the brilliance of the sunshine of the peers' lives blinded them to the squalor around them. They could not legislate because, while sympathy without knowledge was impossible.

F. E. Smith, in the course of a speech at Burnley, made reference to Redmond's "American dollars," and said he wanted no foreign country to help redress the constitution. "Let them keep their breath to cool their own porridge."

Lord Hugh Cecil emphasized the danger of unchecked tyranny of chance majorities in the Commons.

T. P. O'Connor, speaking at London, stated that if the Tories could get a subscription from Laurier for tariff reform, there would be nothing heard about dollars.

The Tories are making urgent appeals to the moderate man among the Liberals, and profess to be afraid of apathy on this occasion, but nothing else. The Opposition expect to win half a dozen seats on the balance in London, but are looking with hope, rather than confidence, to Lancashire.

The Stock Exchange wagering shows that the opinion of the brokers is that the Radical chances are declining.

Winston Spencer Churchill, Home Secretary, returning to London Saturday night, after a speech at Bradford, was attacked in the train by a male suffragette with a dog whip, who cried out "Take that, you cur!"

Two detectives who accompanied Mr. Churchill, parried the blow and overpowered the Secretary's assailant, who is believed to be a man who interrupted Mr. Churchill during his address and was expelled from the meeting after a violent struggle.

When the train arrived at London three women tried to assault the Home Secretary, but the detectives drove them off.

A little more than a year ago—Nov. 13, 1909—Mr. Churchill had an adventure with a suffragette and a dog whip, not unlike the one on Saturday except that the suffragette was a woman. As the Minister was descending with his wife from a train at Bristol a well-dressed woman broke through the crowd and lashed at him with a dog whip. "Take that, you brute," she cried.

The election address of Arthur J. Balfour, leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, is a brief document. It declares that the Unionist program of legislation is practically the same as the last general election, and asserts that behind the single chamber conspiracy lurks socialism and home rule.

"It is because both Nationalists and Socialists are aware that their darling projects are not in harmony with the considered will of the people," says Mr. Balfour, "that they press for the abolishment of the only constitutional safeguard, which at critical moments will enable that will to prevail."

The Opposition leader also refers with the greatest brevity to the alternative scheme for the reform of the House of Lords, which Lord Lansdowne proposed.

Now Post Is After Asquith.

London, Nov. 28.—William Watson, who obtained great notoriety by his attack on Mrs. Asquith in "The Woman With the Serpent's Tongue," came out this past week with some verses directed against that lady's husband. The Morning Post accorded the hospitality of its columns to the poem, which is entitled "The Chief."

Socialists Get Little Support In Condemnation Of Kaiser

Berlin, Nov. 28.—The Reichstag debated on Saturday a Socialist interpellation on the Kaiser's famous divine right speech at Koenigsberg on August 25. In this address the Kaiser arrogated to himself the office of a divine delegate, and in that character avowed his determination to rule in his own way, regardless of the views or opinions of the hour.

On the whole, the events of the day denote a victory for the Kaiser and the failure of the Social-Democrats to arouse the press or popular enthusiasm against the monarch on account of the speech. To a certain exent, also, it established the fact that the largest proportion of the national representatives are still strong supporters of the monarchic system, and are willing to accept, although perhaps with some reluctance, the doctrine of divine right claimed by the Kaiser. At the same time, if they accept this claim, they do so on historical grounds, and with the proviso that the Kaiser shall not employ it to override or modify the constitution.

Herr Ledebour, the Socialist leader, opened the discussion. He charged the Kaiser with breaking the promise which he solemnly gave the nation in November, 1908, when, after the national agitation caused by the interview with him published in The London Telegraph, he announced through the Imperial Chancellor that he had become convinced that the greatest reserve on the part of the crown was indispensable to the interests of German policy.

Herr Ledebour declared that the Kaiser was hereditarily afflicted with the same illusions which destroyed the Stuarts and the Bourbons, and he warned the sovereign that the Hohenzollerns were heading in the same direction.

The Socialist leader concluded with the defiant assertion that the German Social Democracy avowedly aspires to establish a republic, and will bend all its efforts to that end. This statement was greeted with prolonged Socialist cheers.

Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the Imperial Chancellor, responded on behalf of the Government. He declared that never before had the Social Democracy of Germany so openly unmasked its revolutionary objects. Here the speaker was interrupted by Socialist cries of:

"Is that anything new?"

To this the Chancellor replied: "No; it's nothing new, but the country will be glad that its eyes have now been fully opened."

The remainder of the Chancellor's speech was a vigorous defence of the Kaiser's actions since November, 1908. He said that none of the alleged breaches of the imperial word had violated the constitutional prerogatives of the crown. Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg closed by declaring that he not only defended the Kaiser as Imperial Chancellor, but also because of his own honest political convictions.

The most notable utterance was made by Dr. von Heydebrand, the leader of the Government Conservative party, who is sometimes called the "uncrowned King of Prussia."

Pointing his finger at the Chancellor, who was seated only a yard away, Dr. von Heydebrand declared that the bold avowal of the Socialists in favor of a republic, which the country had heard, made it imperative that he (the Chancellor) should not wait for the arrival of the revolution, but should take immediately such steps as would nip it in the bud.

The appeal of the Conservative leader to the Imperial Chancellor is regarded as forecasting an attempt to secure the renewal of Bismarck's anti-Socialist laws, for the purpose of suppresing all forms of the Socialist propaganda.

Comment of Vatican Organ.

Rome, Nov. 28.—The Osservatore Romano publishes comments, evidently inspired by the Vatican, on the discussion Saturday in the German Reichstag of the speech made by Emperor William at Koenigsberg on Aug. 26, pointing out that the debate furnished proof of the irrefutable truth, contained in the Emperor's speeches both at Koenigsberg and Beuron, that the throne and altar cannot be divided in Germany, religion being necessary in the struggle against error in modern times.

In addressing the abbot and a number of Roman Catholic dignitaries in the Benedictine Monastery at Beuron, the Emperor said: "The Governments of Christian princes can only be carried on according to the will of the Lord. The altar and throne are closely united, and must not be separated."

The Vatican official organ, in the course of its comment, says: "The two finest speeches of the German monarch were noble, just and constitutionally correct. While irreligion and demagogy imperil the principles of authority and order, it is a relief to hear certain truths nobly vindicated by the authoritative and august lips of a powerful sovereign."

LETTERS TO LENEVE

Dr. Crippen's Last Words Are Published In London.

London, Nov. 28.—The last statement of Dr. Crippen, who was hanged on Nov. 23, at Pentonville Prison, is published in a Sunday paper, in the form of two final letters, written to Ethel Leneve, one of which is dated Nov. 22. The letters are not reproduced in their entirety, it being explained that they contained certain personal confidences, but nothing in in the nature of a confession.

Crippen throughout declares his innocence, and hope that it will one day be revealed. The letters, which are printed as one, begins with protestations of passionate love for the girl, and repeats constantly the phrase: "God help us to be brave in the face of the end, now so near." Crippen continues:

"How can I endure to take a last look at your dear face. What agony must I go through at last, when you disappear forever from my eyes. I am comforted in thinking that, throughout the years of friendship, never have I passed one unkind word, or given one reproachful look to her whom I loved best in life, to whom I have given myself heart and soul, wholly, entirely, forever."

Crippen asks that Leneve have his body cremated, and, if possible, obtain the ashes, and dispose of them as she deem best. He complains that his statement, published on Nov. 20, omitted his criticisms of the crown's evidence, with reference to the scar and the absence of the navel, which he considered most important, and proceeds exhaustively to analyze the evidence on these points. He asks that Miss Leneve goes to no further expense in trying to secure further evidence, adding: "I can safely leave further evidence to a just God."

He expressed the hope that Miss Leneve will go to "Mrs. H." where she will be free from the lying tales of newspaper men, and concludes:

"To-morrow I will be in God's hands. I have perfect faith that He will let my spirit be with you always."

The paper prints a fac-simile of Crippen's will, bequeathing everything to Miss Leneve.

Put Poison In Water Tank.

Macleod, Alta., Nov. 28.—Henry Adams of Nanton, Alberta, was convicted in the Supreme Court of the attempted murder of F. C. Hunter of Nanton, and sentenced by Justice Stewart to ten years' imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary at Edmonton.

The jury decided that he was guilty of placing poison in the family water tank.

500 Fliers In the World.

Paris, Nov. 28.—Prof. Soreu, lecturing before the civil engineers, said the dangers of aviation should not be exaggerated. The Aero Club of France has issued over 270 licenses and the total number of aviators in the world is about five hundred. The deaths have been about six per cent. The total distance flown may be estimated at 125,000 miles, or one death for 4,166 2-3 miles.

A movement for an international exhibition in Paris in 1920 was started this week by a number of senators, acting in behalf of the commerce and industry group in the Senate, who visited the Minister of Commerce, and urged that such exhibitions ameliorate international relations and stimulate the prosperity of the country.

No Tariff Changes.

Washington, Nov. 28.—The probability of President Taft recommending any tariff legislation in the coming session disappeared Saturday when Chairman H. C. Emery of the tariff board called at the White House. Mr. Emery told the President that it would be practically impossible for the board to get data ready to submit to Congress for several months. The board is now at work on pulp and paper and the woollen schedules.

Had Severe Pains In His Back.

Could Hardly Work.

Mr. Alfred E. Davis, Gorrie, Ont. writes:—"For some years I suffered from severe pains in my back and could hardly work at all, and when I stooped down to pick up anything felt as if my back must break. I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills, and after taking two boxes I was entirely cured, and feel that I cannot speak too highly in their favor.

"This was nearly four years ago and I still remain cured."

Those who have never been troubled with kidney trouble do not know the suffering and misery which those afflicted undergo.

Weak, lame or aching back comes from the kidneys, and when the kidneys are out of order the whole system becomes deranged.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a specific for all kidney troubles.

They help the kidneys to flush off the acrid and poisonous impurities which have collected, thus clearing out the kidneys, bladder and urinary passages.

Price 50c per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Owen Moran Puts Battling Nelson To Sleep Britisher Easy Victor

SAN FRANCICO, NOV 26.—"Battling" Nelson of Hegewisch will no longer menace the lightweight belt. For the first time in his fighting career, the "Durable Dane," a shell of the once great pugilist, was knocked out to-day beyond all dispute. Owen Moran, a sturdy lad from Birmingham, England, did the feat in the presence of one of the largest crowds that ever assembled at a glove contest in this city. Moran knocked Nelson out in the eleventh round of a scheduled twenty-round bout, his victory being clean and leaving no room for argument as to his complete mastery over the one-time champion. But he was compelled to drop Nelson five times in this round, for despite the force of the Briton's right hand punches on the point of the chin, the wonderful fighting spirit of the Dane was ever present.

One second after the final count had been tolled off and Referee Benjamin Selig above the din shouted: "You're out, Moran wins." Nelson was on his feet with blood streaming from his mouth and nose, loudly importuning the referee to allow him to continue. Moran from the first tap of the gong proved himself the complete master of the situation. There was not the round of the eleven that could be credited to Nelson. The Dane was always the aggressor, his evident intention being to force Nelson to fight close. In this he was accomodated, but the fight was scarcely two rounds old, before Moran showed that he too, could fight at the Battler's old game. Round after round, Moran would side step and dance around the agressive Nelson, all the while shoting in straight, forceful punches to the jaw and head. He seldom suffered a punch in return. The eleventh and final round opened with neither fighter perceptibly in distress. Moran, who apparently had been biding his time for a finishing blow, got his chance when Nelson, with bowed head, rushed into close quarters. Moran flung his right forward, catching Nelson flush on the jaw. Down the Dane went to his haunches for the count of nine. It was the same kind of a blow which several months ago caught Tom McCarthy off his guard. He subsequently died as the result of the fight, and the ousting of the Jeffries-Johnson bout from California followed.

Nelson tottered to his feet, bleeding and dazed. Moran stood back waiting for him. Again the Briton's powerful right shot out and Nelson dropped to the mat once more. The performance was thrice more repeated, Moran each time reaching Nelson's unprotected jaw with his right. With the last knock-down the referee and the timekeeper counted the fateful ten.

When Referee Selig declared Moran the victor, Moran turned a handspring into the arms of his seconds and dashed from the ring without a mark to indicate that he had been in a fight.

"I always knew I could turn the trick," the latter declared, "and you bet I feel proud to have been the first man to put Nelson out. Now I want Wolgast. The sooner the match can be made the better."

Local Fans Wanted Tigers To Win For Simpson's Sake

For Ben Simpson's sake most Peterborough people would have liked to have seen the Tigers beat Varsity on Saturday. The Peterborough veteran was making probably his last appearance in uniform and his host of friends here would have liked to have him wind up his long and glorious career as a member of the Canadian champions. He had expected to stay out of the game this year and told friends here when leaving for Hamilton, after the holidays, that he would not play unless his team needed him badly. They evidently did so, and they would never have captured the Big Four championship had they not gotten him into the game. His great punting and generalship were all that won for Tigers in Montreal, the victory that gave them the championship. Although his team lost Saturday, Ben played one of the best games in his career, and that is saying a whole lot for he has any number of star games to his credit. When with Queen's he was the star of the Inter-Collegiate, before Galt, Dixon and Company were being initiated in the rudiments of a Collegiate Institute training.

New Floor Manager At George Street Roller Rink

Mr Jack Erz, formerly of the Riverside Rink, Toronto, has accepted a position as floor-manager of the George Street Roller Rink, and has taken hold of his duties in a manner that has made a most favourable impression upon the patrons of this popular amusement place. Mr. Erz knows his business thoroughly, and under his direction the George St. Rink will be even better patronized than it has been in the past. A big programme has been arranged for this week, including two carnivals, for which splendid prizes are being offered. It is the intention of the management to keep the Rink open for roller-skating all season, so that there is no need of roller skaters giving up their pastime even when the cold weather comes.

Gompers Re-elected.

St. Louis, Nov. 28.—Samuel Gompers was Saturday afternoon re-elected president of the American Federation of Labor.

James Duncan, John Mitchell And James O'Connell were re-elected as first, second and third vice-presidents by unanimous vote.

John P. Lennon of Bloomington, Ill., was re-elected treasurer, and F. Morrison, Washington, D.C., re-elected secretary.

D. A. Hayes, Philadelphia; William D. Huber, Indianapolis; James P. Valentine, Cincinnati; John R. Alpine, Chicago; H. B. Perham, St. Louis, were re-elected fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth vice-presidents by unanimous vote.

The proposition to grant the Western Federation of Miners a charter in the American Federation of Labor, was referred to the executive council. President Gompers overruled the point of law raised by James O'Connell of the machinists.

The convention by unanimous vote endorsed women suffrage, and placed itself on record as favoring the organization of all classes of labor in the country, including negroes. Some of the Pacific coast delegates objected to the proposition to include the Asiatic races, and it was suggested that the remedy was the exclusion of Orientals from the United States.

New B. C. Legislator.

Vancouver, B.C., Nov. 28.—Alex. Lucas, formerly Conservative organizer in British Columbia, was Saturday elected by acclamation in a bye-election in Yale, a constituency made vacant by the resignation of Premier McBride, who also sit for Victoria City. The Liberals decided not to contest the seat, which at the general election gave the Premier a majority of over 100 against Stuart Henderson, the sitting member.

Lucas is about 60 years of age, was born in Ontario, and was the pioneer newspaper man of Calgary.

Killed by Yard Engine.

London, Ont., Nov. 28.—Ira B. Harris, aged 54, a machinist, was instantly killed at the Wellington street crossing of the G.T.R. by a yard engine Saturday night. The crossing is a dark one, and it is thought that he must have disregarded the gates being down, and walked directly in front of the engine. He was badly mutilated, the left foot and the top of his head being cut off. His hat was found later on the pilot step of the yard engine. He leaves a wife and three daughters.

Secretary of Union to Die.

Paris, Nov. 28.—A jury in the court of assizes at Rouen has imposed the death penalty upon Secretary Durand of the Coal Handlers Union, who was convicted of instigating the murder of Fogeman Donge, during the strike on the docks at Harve in September. Donge abandoned his comrades and returned to work. Soon afterwards he was beaten to death in the streets. The actual participants in the crime were condemned to terms of from 8 to 15 years' imprisonment at hard labor.

The evidence introduced showed that on the day preceding the murder, Secretary Durand introduced a motion "to get rid of Donge," and that the union adopted the motion with but a single dissenting voice. The leaders of the general confederation of labor in Paris charge that the verdict was inspired by Premier Briand's recent attitude toward trade unions, and have called a public meeting to protest against the sentence.

CANADIAN GIRL IS CHARGED WITH MURDER

Examiner Special.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., NOV. 28. — Sensational developments are expected at the trial commenced to-day of Hattie Leblanc, aged seventeen, of Cape Breton, Canada, for the murder a year ago, of Clarence Glover, in whose home she was employed. Canadians are here to assist in the defence of the girl.

CONVINCING SERMONS AT MURRAY STREET CHURCH

Dr. E. N. Keirstead of Toronto, preached at Murray Street Baptist church yesterday at both services and was listened to by very large congregations. Dr. Keirstead, it will be remembered, preached at Murray Street church some three years ago, and yesterday deepened the favourable impression he made at that time. He is a forcible, eloquent speaker, with the power of convincing his hearers and his two addresses yesterday were masterpieces of eloquence.

A MYSTERIOUS AGREEMENT FOUND ON CHARLOTTE STREET

We, the undersigned, hereby agree to the following: Should the lady get married on or before her 22nd birthday, she agrees to present the man with a dress suit and vice-versa, supplanted by a silk dress.

This somewhat mysterious agreement was found on Charlotte street and is signed by two persons whose names are withheld. There is a strong flavour of romance about the document in question, and no doubt it is highly prized by the two who signed it. They will therefore be relieved to learn that it is being carefully preserved at the Examiner office and will be turned over to the proper parties on proof of ownership being given.

REVIVAL SERVICES AT MARK ST. CHURCH

The evangelistic services yesterday in the Mark street church, were in some respects quite remarkable. In the morning, practically the entire Sunday school made covenant with God to live the better life, also a number of other adult people, under circumstances that were profoundly affecting. The meeting for men in the afternoon was well attended and helpful. In the evening the large congregation was greatly stirred by the evangelist's appeal to reason and faith, a number again being led to yield themselves to the Saviour. These meetings will continue all this week, the concluding service of the series to be held next Sunday night.

For Governor of Manitoba.

Winnipeg, Nov. 28.—It is rumored here that D. C. Cameron, defeated Liberal candidate for the House of Commons at the last general elections, will succeed Sir Daniel McMillan as next Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba. Mr. Cameron has had considerable legislative experience in Ontario, and it is expected that the announcement of his appointment will be approved by all. He is manager of the Rat Portage Lumber Co., one of the biggest lumber companies in the west, and is prominent in the business, social and political life of the province.

Stenographer Suicides.

Toronto, Nov. 28.—"My head is burning now, and I was never properly asleep or never awake."

Leaving this message, Donald A. Graham, aged 25, a stenographer in the "head office of the department" of the Imperial Bank, ended his lif in his room, 9, Homewood avenue, Saturday night. Duncan J. McLellan found him dead in bed at 11 o'clock and summoned the police. An empty carbolic acid bottle was found in the room.

Michael Cudahy Dead.

Chicago, Nov. 28.—Michael Cudahy, founder of the packing firm bearing his name, died last night at a hospital here of pneumonia. He had been ill for five days.

Mr. Cudahy was born in Ireland, Dec. 7, 1841. He came to the United States with his parents in 1849, the family settling at Milwaukee, Wis. When a boy of fifteen, he became an employe in a Milwaukee packing house.

Infants Are Starving.

Chicago, Nov. 28.—The citizens' strike committee, which has investigated conditions in the families of striking garment workers, reported yesterday that 5,000 babies are starving here, as a result of the labor war. The report was made at a meeting at Hull House, and a special babies' milk fund was started at once by members of the committee.

Rebels Routed.

Mexico City, Nov. 28.—An engagement took place at Chihuahua yesterday between 600 federal troops and 400 Maderistas, in which the rebels were routed, with a loss of 13 killed and many wounded. A number of federals were wounded, including one officer. The revolutionists were driven into the mountains.

San Angelo, Mexico, Nov. 28.—That 50 insurgents were ordered shot by the Government at Puebla, instead of forty, as told in press despatches, is the assertion made in letters received yesterday.

Jap Premier May Resign.

Victoria, Nov. 28.—Count Komura's health, according to Japanese papers, received here, is such that his resignation as Prime Minister is expected at any moment. Numerous suggestions are made as to a probable successor, the names of Baron Kato and Baron Motono being suggested.

When the count underwent a surgical operation a few weeks ago the physicians thought he would recover quickly, but it is feared that the operation was too great a tax on his strength.

Solemn Mass Meeting Is Held, at Which Representatives Promise to Refuse to Pay Taxes to an Irish Parliament — British House of Commons Is Dissolved and Election Fight Is Now On.

London, Nov. 29 With the dissolution of Parliament yesterday all formalities preliminary to the election of a new Parliament were completed. The proclamation of dissolution summoned the new Parliament to assemble on Jan. 31, 1911.

Among the first of its members to be elected unopposed will be Arthur J. Balfour, the Opposition leader, the Liberals having decided not to contest his seat for the City of London. On the Stock Exchange, where regular dealings have been instituted in bets on the election, the feeling yesterday seemed to anticipate a reduction in the Liberal majority.

In Ireland the struggle is growing more bitter every day. A meeting of delegates representing every Ulster county constituency was held in Belfast yesterday, at which a resolution was adopted, on motion of a Presbyterian minister, to draw up a solemn declaration refusing to pay rates or taxes imposed by a Dublin Parliament, or obey its decrees, while $50,000 was subscribed on the spot to organize the Ulster men into regiments and purchase arms.

At night a monster union demonstration was held at Ulster Hall, Belfast, an overflow meeting of 20,000 people being held in the open air. Both aroused the greatest enthusiasm. Lord Londonderry declared the American dollars enabled John Redmond to hold Asquith in the hollow of his hand. If a home rule Parliament were established, he said, it might be found that Ulster would utterly decline obedience to the law.

Sir Edward Carson, former Solicitor-General, now Conservative M.P. for Dublin University, said they never would consent to their country being sold for American dollars. Walter Hume Long, Unionist M.P. for Strand, spoke in the same strain, and other speakers advocated stern resistance to the law, if home rule was forced upon Ulster.

The first independent woman suffrage candidate is announced in the person of a prominent advocate, W. Mirlees, who will contest a division of Glasgow. The Socialist party has decided to run a third candidate in Battersea, thus seriously endangering John Burns' chance of re-election.

Yesterday's dissolution of Parliament brings to a crisis the supreme struggle now in progress to limit the legislative powers of the House of Lords, and thereby permit the elective branch of Parliament, the House of Commons, to exert larger powers in effecting legislation, more particularly measures relating to Irish home rule and the financial budgets.

The House of Commons has a Ministerial majority of 124, and the present standing of the various elements is a follows: Liberals 275, Labor members 40, Nationalists 71, Independent Nationalists 11, Unionists 273.

Of the foregoing, the first four groups are generally counted as supporters of the Ministry, giving a Ministerial strength of 397, as against the Unionist strength of 273, or a net Ministerial majority of 124.

Arrest on Serious Charge.

Goderich, Nov. 29.—M. O. Johnston, a prominent lawyer of this town, was arrested Saturday night on serious charges preferred by John Hummel, a mason. The arrest comes as a sequel to the story of the livery rig which was brought to light at the time of the Anderson murder investigation. Johnston kept the rig out till a late hour, and it is alleged that Mrs. Hummel was his companion.

The other day Hummel returned from Vancouver and gave Johnston a very severe thrashing, injuring his head in the process. He threatened to kill Johnston when his head got better, if he did not leave town, but was persuaded to let the law take its course.

Policeman Missing.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 29.—Strangely missing since Friday morning, the disappearance of Policeman Charles Brown yesterday created a sensation here when it became known. Brown returned home from duty Friday morning, changed his clothes and left the house without breakfast. No cause is known for Brown's disappearance. He has spent five years on the force and has never once been on the carpet. He has a wife and three small children.

Believed to Have Suicided.

Niagara-on-the-Lake, Nov. 29.—Following a family quarrel, Mrs. John Davis left her home early Sunday morning and the police believe she committed suicide by jumping into the river. The river about Niagara wharf was dragged without success yesterday. Early Sunday the woman's husband reported to Chief Reid that his wife had threatened to kill herself.

Deserted by Bandit.

Tampico, Mexico, Nov. 29 Miss Grace Rolf, the 17-year-old Nebraska girl, who disappeared from a ranch near Tampico several weeks ago in company with Segundo Selivero, a noted bandit, has been found and brought here. She claims she suffered indignities at the hands of Selivero and was almost exhausted from the ill-treatment and exposure, when found. Miss Rolph was found Saturday about fifty miles inland from Tampico, deserted.

Still Gathering Supporters

His Friends Deny That He Was Wounded as Government Reports Claimed, and Word Is Sent Out That the Centre of Revolt Is Growing Stronger Day by Day —Fortifying Their Position.

San Antonio, Texas, Nov. 29 That Francisco I. Madero, leader of the Mexican revolution, is safe and uninjured, is the news brought direct from Madero to San Antonio. The courier said that Madero is now gathering his forces in the Laguna district, near Lerdo and Parral. Madero was not wounded at any time, said the messenger. He is constantly gathering allies to his standard.

As far as the confiscation of the Madero estates was concerned, the courier said that Madero was not much concerned, since the bulk of his interests were in the hands of friendly Americans.

Insurrectionists Fortified.

Chihuahua, Nov. 29 Government troops have returned to Chihuahua from their fight with the revolutionists, four miles west at Fresno on Sunday. Two thousand reinforcements are expected before the Government resumes its attempt to reopen the Mexican and Northwestern Railroad, which is tied up as a result of the fight.

The insurrectionists are said to have been reinforced by a band from Parral. They now number 1,000, and they have fortified positions at various points.

Sunday's fight was the first real fight of the insurrection in this part of Mexico. Three hundred insurgents attacked the Government's rear guard of 400 troops, who were marching along the Mexican and Northwestern (Chihuahua and Pacific) Railroad. Seven dead insurrectors were brought in Sunday night. The Government lost one killed and seven wounded. The fight lasted three hours, both sides taking shelter behind boulders and in ditches.

R. G. Hervey Dead.

Brockville, Nov. 29 At "The Point," Maitland, the death took place yesterday afternoon of R. G. Hervey, a well-known railway contractor, who built the Brockville and Westport, recently purchased by Mackenzie and Mann. He also constructed a line in Nova Scotia, which too, is a part of the Canadian Northern system. His work stands at many points in the United States.

Mr. Hervey is credited with having made a proposition to Sir Alexander Mackenzie, then Premier of Canada, to build the transcontinental line subsequently completed as the Canadian Pacific Railway. Mr. Hervey was assured of the necessary financial assistance in England, but the Government of the day had no faith in his scheme and turned it down.

He leaves three daughters and one son, Chilton Hervey, consulting engineer, Montreal.

Trunk Murder Mystery.

New York, Nov. 29. A new turn was given the trunk murder mystery yesterday by statements of witnesses who declared that Albert Callier, the supposed victim, was seen alive in 1905, three years after the crime was supposed to have been committed.

The trunk containing the body, recently found in a tenement basement, is declared to have been left there in 1902, by William Lewis, waiter, for whom a widespread search is now progressing. The investigation of the mysterious crime is turning to-day largely in the direction of enquiry whether the murder may have been committed in a later year than 1902, and if the trunk was empty when left by Lewis. New enquiry into the identity of the victim was also undertaken.

Will Be Rigid.

Newark, N.J., Nov. 29 "If I find any city or state official guilty of negligence in the inspection of this building," said Prosecutor of County Mott yesterday, as he stood by the ruins of the factory in which 24 girls lost their lives by fire last Saturday, "there will be the bitterest sort of prosecution."

Accordingly, a coroner's jury of six was sworn in, the first of its kind that has sat here in twenty years. There will also be separate enquiries by the grand jury, which visited the scene yesterday; by the State Labor Department, and the city building department.

Funeral of many of the victims were held yesterday afternoon. Many of the girls and women killed were supporting their families, in part or in whole. One woman left a blind daughter almost penniless, and there is much actual want in other households. A relief fund, started Sunday, has now reached $2,000.

JEWISH HISTORY USELESS.

Pres. Schurman Says It Is Not Needed for Soul's Salvation.

New York, Nov. 29. "To make belief in the history of the Jews a condition of the salvation of the human soul is, in this scientific age of the world, not only a physical impossibility, but an intellectual absurdity and an outrage on true moral personality," said President Jacob S. Schurman of Cornell University, in an address here last night. Dr. Schurman was speaking at the dedicatory exercises of the new buildings of the Union Theology Seminary in this city. He declared that the buildings are a striking expression of the spirit of religious progress," which, he said, is however, "larger than any institution."

"Whether we like it or not," he said, "a change is taking place in the attitude of religious men. It may certainly be claimed that in their solicitude for improving the condition of the poor they may cite the example of the founder of the Christian Church. Not apart altogether from history, we cannot imagine that the condition of the poor is always to remain what we see it today in any civilization calling itself Christian.

"A theological student, therefore, who wants to improve the condition of society, must master the social sciences, and especially the sciences of economics and government. As time goes on, I expect to see some of the tasks which now find a place in the theological curriculum, and which are the mere survival of problems that our age has grown, eliminated, and in place of them there will be substituted subjects dealing with the problems of our own age, and from our modern scientific point of view.

"The only way that some clergymen can say to improve the condition of society is by the adoption of socialism. I believe, however, that with a thorough training in the social economic and political sciences the evils complained of can be abated under our present industrial system of government."

The Struggle Bitter

Ottawa, Nov. 29 Further bitterness has been introduced into the struggle between the two political parties here by the fact that the Government on the occasion of R. L. Borden's speech last Thursday deported from the usual Parliamentary courtesy of thanking the Premier or a Minister of the crown to follow the leader of the Opposition, and instead put on H. H. Miller of South Grey. In Parliamentary practice this is regarded as a deliberate insult.

"THE BETRAYAL"

BY E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

I bent low over her hand which rested still in mine.

"Mine is not a purposeless exile—not altogether an unhappy one now," I said. "I have work to do, Lady Angela, and I am going to it with a good heart. When we meet again I hope that it may be differently. Your coming, the memory of it will stand often between me and loneliness. It will sweeten the very bitterest of my days."

"You are really going to China?" she murmured.

I glanced towards Lord Chelsford. His back was turned to us. It he understood the meaning of my pause he made no sign.

"I may not tell you where I am going or why," I answered. "But I will tell you this, Lady Angela. I shall come back, and as you have come to see me tonight, so shall I come to you before long. If you will trust me I will prove myself worthy of it."

She did not answer me with any word at all but with a sudden little forward movement of both her hands and I saw that her eyes were swimming in tears. Yet they shone into mine like stars, and I saw heaven there.

"I am sorry," Lord Chelsford said, gravely interposing, "but Lady Chelsford will be waiting for you, Angela. And I think that I must ask you to remember that I cannot sanction, or appear by my silence to sanction, anything of this sort."

So he led her away, but what did I care. My heart was beating with the rapture of her backward glance. I cared neither for Ray nor the Duke nor any living person. For with me it was the one supreme moment of a man's lifetime come too at the very moment of my despair. I was no longer at the bottom of the pit. The wonderful gates stood open.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

A TERRIBLE DISCOVERY

I called softly to Grooton from my room upstairs.

"Grooton!"

"Yes, sir!"

"You are alone?"

"Yes, sir."

"Is Mr Hill still up at the Court?"

"He will be there until midnight, sir."

A gust of wind came suddenly roaring through the wood, drowning even the muffled thunder of the sea below. The rain beat upon the window panes. The little house, strongly built though it was, seemed to quiver from its very foundations. I caught up my overcoat, and boldly descended the narrow staircase. Grooton stood at the bottom, holding a lamp in his hand.

"You are quite safe tonight, sir," he said. "There'll be no one about in such a storm."

I stood still for a moment. The scene and bearing of the sea below had momentarily triumphed over the earth wind.

"The trees in the spinney are shaping like twigs, sir," Grooton remarked. "There's one lying right across the path outside. But you'll excuse me, sir, you're not going out?"

"I think so," I answered, for a few minutes. Remember that I have been a prisoner here for three days. I must get some fresh air."

"I can't think it's a fit night, sir," he protested, dispassionately. "Not that there's any fear, I guess, being as the wind's enough to carry you off the cliff."

"I shall risk it, Grooton," I answered. "I think that the wind is going down and the rain too, in a few hours. It's too good a chance to miss."

I waited for a momentary lull, and then I opened the door and slipped out. The next breath of cold strong air was like wine to me after my confinement, but a moment later I found my breath taken away and I was lifted almost from my feet by a sudden gust. I linked my arm around the trunk of a swaying pin tree and from there till the lull came. Up from the darkness from that unseen sea below came showers of spray, white as snow, falling like rain all about me. It was a night to remember.

Presently I turned inland, and reached the park. I left the footpath so that I should avoid all risk of meeting any one, and followed the wire fencing which divided the park from the belt of fir trees bordering the road. I walked for a few hundred yards, and then stopped short.

I had reached the point where that long straight road from Brasier turned sharply away inland to the second time. At a point about a quarter of a mile away, and rapidly approaching me, came a twin pair of flaring eyes. I knew at once what they were—the head lights of a motor car. Without a moment's hesitation I doubled back to the "Brand."

"Grooton!" I called sharply.

Grooton appeared.

"Is any one at Brasier Grange?" I asked.

"Not that I have heard of, sir," he answered.

"You do not know whether Mrs Smith-Leering is expected back?"

"I have not heard, sir. They left no servants there not even a caretaker."

I stepped back again into the night and took the shortest cut across the park to the house. As I neared the entrance gates I left the path and crept up close to the plantation which bordered the road. My heart gave a jump as I listened. I could hear the low level throbbing of a motor somewhere quite close at hand. The lights had been extinguished, but it was there waiting. I did not hesitate any longer. I kept on the turf by the side of the avenue and made my way up to the house.

The library alone and one small window on the ground floor were lit. I crept up on the terrace and tried to peer in, but across each of the library windows the curtains were too closely drawn. There remained the small window at the end of the terrace. I crept on tiptoe towards this, feeling my way through the darkness by the front of the house. Suddenly I came to a full stop. I flattened myself against the stonework and held my breath. Some one else was on the terrace. What I had heard was unmistakable. It was the wind blowing amongst a woman's skirts, and the woman was very close at hand.

I almost felt her warm breath as she crept past me. I caught a gleam of a pale face sufficient to tell me who she was. She passed on and took up her stand outside that small bow window.

I, too, crept nearer to it. About a yard away there was a projection of the house. I stole into the deep corner and waited. A few feet from me I knew that she, too, was waiting.

Half an hour, perhaps an hour passed. My ears became trained to all sounds that were not absolutely deadened by the roar of the wind. I heard the crash of falling boughs in the wood, the more distant but unchanging thunder of the sea, the sharp spitting of the rain upon the stone walk. And I heard the opening of the window by the side of which I was leaning.

I was only just in time. Through the raised sash there came a hand holding a packet of some sort, and out of the darkness came another hand eagerly stretched out to receive it. I brushed it ruthlessly aside, tore the packet from the fingers which suddenly strove to detain it, and with my other hand I caught the arm a little above the wrist. I heard the flying footsteps of my fellow-watcher, but I did not even turn round. A fierce joy was in my heart. Now I was to know. The veil of mystery which had hung over the doings at Brasier was to be swept aside. I stooped down till my eyes were within a few inches of the hand. I passed my fingers over it. I felt the ring.

Then I remember only that mad headlong flight back across the park, where the very air seemed full of sobbing, mocking voices, and the ground beneath my feet swayed and heaved. I could not even think coherently. I heard the motor go tearing down the road past me, and came to a standstill at the turn. Still I had no thought of any danger. It never occurred to me to leave the footpath and make my way back to the "Brand" as I might well have done, by a more circuitous route. I kept on the footpath, and just as I reached the little iron gate which led into the spinney, I felt a man's arm suddenly flung around my neck, and with a jerk I was thrown almost off my feet.

"He is here, madame," I heard a low voice say. "Take the papers from him. I have him safe."

I think that my desperate humour lent me more than my usual strength. With a fierce effort I wrenched myself free. Almost immediately I heard the click of a revolver.

"If you move," a low voice said, "I fire."

"What do you want?" I asked.

"The papers."

I laughed bitterly.

"Are they worth my life?" I asked.

"The life of a dozen such as you," the man answered. "Quick! Hand them over."

Then I heard a little cry from the woman who had been standing a few feet off. In the struggle I had lost my cap, and a faint watery moon, half hidden by a ragged bank of black clouds, was shining weakly down upon us.

"Guy," she cried, and her voice was shaking as though with terror. "Guy, is that you?"

I lost my self-control. I forgot her sex. I forgot everything except that she was responsible for this unspeakable corruption. I said terrible things to her. And she listened, white—dumb—speechless. When I had finished she signed to the man to leave us. He hesitated, but with a more peremptory gesture she dismissed him.

"Guy," she said, "you have not spared me. Perhaps I do not deserve it. Now listen. The whole thing is at an end. Those ten papers are all we want. Your father is already in France. I am leaving at once. Give me those papers and you will be rid of us for ever. If you do not I must stay on until I have received copies of a portion of them, at any rate. You know very well now that I can do this. Give me those that you have. It will be safer in every way."

"Give them to you?" I answered scornfully. "Are you serious?"

"Very serious, Guy. Do you not see that the sooner it is all over the better the safer up there?"

She pointed towards the house. I could have struck the white fingers with their loathsome meaning.

"I shall take this packet to Lord Chelsford," I said. "I am down here as a spy—a spy upon spies. He is up at the house now, and to-morrow this packet will be on its way. I shall tell him how I came by it. I think that after that you will not have many opportunities for playing your cursed trade."

"You know the consequences?"

"They are not my concern," I answered coldly.

She looked over her shoulder.

"If I—she said, "were as unscrupulous in my duty as you I should call Jeremiah back."

"I am indifferent," I continued. "I do not value my life enough to shrink from fighting for it."

She turned away.

"You are very young, Guy," she said, "and you talk like a very young man. You must go your own way. Send for Lord Chelsford, if you will. But remember all that it will mean. Can't you see that such stern morality as yours is the most exquisite form of selfishness? Good-bye, Guy."

She glided away. I reached the "Brand" undisturbed.

The Kidneys Wear Out

But many people of advanced years have learned how to keep these organs healthy by using

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

The kidneys are often the first organs of the body to cause trouble. Their work of filtering the blood is greatly increased by excessive eating or by the use of highly seasoned foods and alcoholic drinks.

As advanced age comes on most people suffer more or less from derangements of the kidneys. With some there are years of pains and aches, with others Bright's disease is soon developed and the end comes quickly.

Fortunately a great many have learned about Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, and are enabled by their use to keep the kidneys healthy and active.

This medicine is entirely different from ordinary kidney treatments, and invigorates the action of the liver and bowels. To this combined action is attributed its remarkable success.

Mr. Richard Preston, Osborne, Lambton county, Ont. writes: "I want to testify to the wonderful curative properties of Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills. Seventeen years ago I began the use of this medicine, when my back was so bad that to stoop or rise was torture to me. The kidneys were in bad condition, but these pills entirely freed me of back pains. I have used them ever since, whenever the kidneys would get out of order, and now, at eighty years, am well and hearty, thanks to this grand medicine."

THE KING'S REPORT

His Majesty Will Probably do Away With an Old Practice

King George is contemplating the discontinuance of the historic practice of receiving the Prime Minister's nightly report of the proceedings in Parliament.

This report has hitherto taken the form of an autograph letter to the King from the leader of the House. It was the established etiquette for the Minister, in this missive, to use the third person and to address the Sovereign in the second. Thus Mr. Gladstone would begin his written communications to Queen Victoria: "Mr. Gladstone presents his humble duty to your Majesty."

The date of the introduction of this epistolary form is unknown. Mr. Grenville's letters to George III. are in the ordinary form of everyday correspondence, but twenty years later Charles James Fox employed the phraseology which Mr. Asquith now follows: "Mr. Fox has the honor of transmitting to your Majesty," etc.

In days gone by, Mr. Balfour could be seen towards the end of the sitting writing, in the Chamber, his summary for King Edward of the day's proceedings. Other leaders of the House, however, such as Mr. W. H. Smith, Lord Randolph Churchill, Sir Michael Hicks Beach, and Sir William Harcourt preferred to compose their nightly letter to Queen Victoria carefully in their private rooms.

During Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman's illness, King Edward suspended the practice out of kindly consideration. King George will, in future, be content to receive the official report which is issued to members, and he regards the leader's private missive as superfluous.

OLDEST SHIPS AFLOAT

"Polly," 106 Years in the Service, Is Still on the Sea

Much has been said lately of an American vessel, the "Polly," 45 tons, which still keeps to the sea, though she is in her 106th year of service. This is a respectable age for any vessel, but there are older ones on the British register. The oldest, says the Manchester Guardian, is the "Jenny," of Carnarvon, but we know nothing of her except that she is 122 years old. The next in order of age is the "May" of Whitehaven, sometimes called the "Molly Ashcroft," to distinguish her from other "Mays." The "May" was built at Cowes in 1798 so she is 112 years old, six years older than the American vessel. Tonnage is a very variable quantity according to the system of measurement. The "May" was originally rated at 34 tons, but she has been registered by the Board of Trade as 12.76 tons. Visitors to Ramsey had an opportunity of seeing her there on a fishing expedition last summer.

For all her 112 years, the "May" is still capable of coming through an adventure or two. She came from Whitehaven in a gale nine years ago, and was brought there by her present owner, who regularly fishes in her with a crew of three or four. She is a "jigger smack"—that is, she had a small after-mast. She was dismasted in a gale last winter, but she is in first-class trim to-day, and her owner speaks highly of her qualities. Of course, the question is always asked how far an old boat has been patched up and how much of the original fabric remains. As a matter of fact, the "May" was practically rebuilt 18 years ago but a boat must be sound to stand extensive repairs, and the fact, therefore, does not really detract so much as one might think from the wonder of her immense age.

LIFE OF ADVENTURE

Navy Man's Experiences in Greenland, the Crimea, and China

Few men have been fated to have a more thrilling life of adventure than Tom Grant, gateman, diver, and crossing keeper at Buness Dock, who died at the ripe age of seventy-eight.

Son of a whale harpooner, he had an inbred desire for the sea, and at the age of eleven was bound for four years as an apprentice to the whaling trade. His ship was ice-bound off Greenland, and ultimately became a total wreck, and many were the dangers he passed through before landing with the rest of the shipwrecked crew in a boat on a Danish settlement.

On the completion of his apprenticeship he entered the merchant service, and later joined the Royal Navy. He was present at the blockading of the Baltic on the outbreak of the Crimean war in 1854. Three years later he was at Calcutta during the Indian Mutiny, and subsequently he was sent to Hongkong on the outbreak of the disturbances in China in 1869, playing a conspicuous part in the cutting of the heavy chains and hawser which blocked the progress of the British Fleet. He was also present at the burning of Pekin Palace.

USES OF A MOUSTACHE

Dr. Paul Klager, the famous Vienna physician, declares that the growing fashion of shaving the moustache is responsible for the growing number of patients suffering from head aches and diseases of the respiratory organs. Among 500 cases of serious headaches and diseases of the nose and throat he had counted 420 patients who had their moustaches shaved off. The moustache is of course a natural protection for the nose against the invasion of cold air, dust, and microbes. Women are not so often in the streets and wear veils to protect themselves, and their nostrils are narrower than those of men.

ALLIGATOR SHOOTS CHUTES

The very last creature that the average man would select as a frisky animal is the alligator, yet even that deliberate brute can sometimes hit a swift pace. It has even been trained to shoot the chutes with easy grace. This feat is performed regularly at an alligator farm in California, the big saurian waddling up the incline at the other side and sliding down the water chutes at express train speed. At this novel farm there are five hundred or more specimens, ranging in size from the huge bull to the newly hatched, lizard-like youngsters. They are raised for their hides, although the sale of little fellows for "pets" and the admission to the grounds help to swell the profits of this unusual business.

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Did We Give Thanks? To Whom Did We Do So?

Celebrated Brooklyn Bastor Back From Britain.

Oklahoma City, Nov. 27.—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle addressed large audiences here twice today in our principal auditorium. We report one of his addresses from the following text:

"O, give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever."—Psalm cxvii, 1.

Thanksgiving Day appeals to all of us, and we are glad that the Pilgrim Fathers long years ago started the custom. They placed it at the end of the harvest and in recognition of the same. The keeping of such a day appeals to all civilized mankind in a considerable degree, because our Great Creator so organized us that the quality of reverence, of worship, lies prominently on the top of our heads. The man or woman, rich or poor, educated or ignorant, bond or free, who has not this organ of veneration developed in considerable measure cannot be appreciative and deferential toward his Creator, and hence would not enjoy Thanksgiving day. We are glad that these are comparatively few. We are glad to suppose that the majority of this great nation of civilization looked up to God with grateful hearts and rendered him thanks for blessings manifested.

Nevertheless, the numbers increase yearly of those who are losing their reverence for the God of the Bible and vaguely turning towards a God of Nature, of whom they profess to know comparatively little. These irreverent and unthankful fellow-creatures are not generally the most ignorant of our race, nor the least favored in temporal mercies and blessings. Among them are many learned, wealthy, influential. Their condition is well represented by that of a young woman who called at my study recently. In substance she said, "I have lost my God. I am unhappy. I am hoping that you will be able to assist me in finding him again." Thank God, we were able to assist her, and now she is able to give thanks to God in all sincerity.

I am not speaking to the irreverent in this audience, nor to those of this class in my larger audience of millions all over the world, to whom I speak through the public press. I am speaking to others who, while not yet fully in the faith, are still disposed to give thanks. I speak to these because I realize that each day is bringing to the world greater intelligences, more independent thoughtfulness, in a wider use of reason. I speak because my experience teaches that unless these be fully armed with the Truth and awakened to independent thought, they are almost certain to fall into unbelief—Evolution, Higher Criticism, and a mere form of godliness, which denies the real power thereof.

The Great Teacher prayed for his followers, "Sanctify them through thy Truth; thy Word is Truth (John xvii, 17). To be forearmed with the Truth is to be safeguarded against the error. To be ignorant of the Truth is to fall a prey to the error especially in this "evil day," when "a thousand shall fall at thy side and ten thousand at thy right hand" (Psalm xci, 7). The difficulty with us has been that many have supposed that the conversion of the world and its sanctification can be better accomplished by misrepresentation of Divine Character and Justice. Unconsciously we have learned to twist and interpret our Bibles to fit the erroneous creeds which were handed to us by our well-meaning forefathers. The Day of Judgment upon these false creeds is upon us. Unless we learn that they do not properly interpret the Bible, we will reject the Bible when we reject the creeds—and that must be very soon for all thinking people. "To the Law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this Word, it is because there is no light in them" (Isaiah viii, 20).

"Come, let us reason together, saith the Lord." If our creeds tell us truly that we were all born damned, either to Purgatory or to eternal torment, should we give thanks on this account? If our creeds tell truly that an elect handful of saints will escape the torture, how do we know whether or not we belong to that elect band?

Suffered Greatly From Heart Trouble.

NERVES WERE VERY WEAK.

Mrs. John Farrell, Rose Hill, P.E.I., writes:—"It is with the greatest of pleasure I write you stating the benefit I have received by using Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

"About five years ago I suffered greatly from heart trouble, and my nerves were very weak. After seeing several doctors and using their medicine, I got no relief until a friend told me of your Heart and Nerve Pills. I took two boxes and they effected a complete cure. I can recommend them highly to all nervous and run down women.

"I have advised many others to try them and they have all been cured of the same trouble."

The proper action of the nerves, so important to the well-being of the heart, depends entirely upon the general condition of the nervous system. If there be nerve derangement of any kind, it is bound to produce heart derangement.

In Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills is combined a treatment that will cure all forms of nervous disorders, as well as act on the heart itself, and in this is the secret of their success in curing so many cases of heart and nerve trouble.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c per box, or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

manifest, "hiding his face" from the few blessed with the hearing ear and the understanding heart and the eyes of faith. These do constitute what the Scriptures designate the true Church of God, including the Apostles and all the faithful throughout this Age—the household of faith, "the Church of the First Borns, whose names are written in heaven" (Hebrews xii, 23). These constitute the Little Flock, to whom it is the Father's good pleasure to give the Kingdom, which shortly (Messiah's Kingdom) is to bless and uplift the world, operating through natural Israel.

Man's necessity became God's opportunity for the display of his glorious character perfect in Justice, Wisdom, Love and Power. While love could not clear the guilty, it could provide a Redeemer to suffer, "the Just for the unjust." But Divine Justice could not allow this, unless with the consent of the sufferer. Hence we read that God set before his only-begotten Son a glorious Plan and invited his co-operation therein. The Son assented, left the heavenly glory, was made flesh and "offered himself" an acceptable sacrifice, "the Just for the unjust"—for the redemption of Adam and his race. The Father honored him by raising him from the dead to a still higher glory and honor than he had before, to immortality—the divine nature. Now, from his glorious station, he is empowered to be the Mediator between God and men—between Divine Justice and fallen humanity. He is empowered to give the earthly rights which he sacrificially laid down for Adam and his race—to so many of them as will accept the perfection of human nature and its rights and privileges upon terms in harmony with the Divine Law—the remainder he will destroy, annihilate "as brute beasts" (II. Peter ii, 12; Acts iii, 23).

As though all this were not sufficiently wonderful; as though with all this the Heavenly Father's Wisdom, Justice, Love and Power would not be sufficiently illustrated, exemplified, God added another feature. Before beginning to deal with the world as a whole, to give back to the willing and obedient of the race human perfection and an earthly Eden Paradise and eternal life; before commencing this work of restitution (Acts iii, 19), the Father made known to the Son another feature of his Plan. He would give to the Son a Bride, a class selected from amongst the fallen race—called, chosen, faithful overcomers. These, as the Joint-Heirs of the Second Adam, will share with him in the uplifting of those of Adam's race who will become the children of Christ through obedience and adoption.

The trials and testings of all those who will become the Bride of Christ must be similar to those of the Redeemer. They must suffer with him if they would reign with him. As he sacrificed his earthly life and rights and interests, so must they. He exhorted them, "Present your bodies living sacrifices, holy and acceptable to God, a reasonable service" (Romans xii, 1). True, there is a difference between these followers of Jesus and the Captain of their salvation. He was brought into the world holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners; hence his sacrifice was a perfect one. Those accepted as his members, as his Bride, belong to the race of sinners. They were "children of wrath even as others" (Ephesians ii, 3). Their acceptance as sacrifices, therefore, was not possible except as the great Captain of their Salvation imputed to those sacrifices a sufficiency of the merit of his sacrifice to compensate for their defects and to make their sacrifices acceptable to the Father with his and as a part of his—they being counted in with him as "members of his Body."

My dear friends, those of us who have the eye of faith and the hearing of faith to appreciate this, the Message of God's Word, may surely be thankful to the last degree. What more could our Heavenly Father do for us than he has done—redeeming us, inviting us to a new nature, giving us the aids by the way, and making us sharers in the Kingdom glory of his Son? More than this, he has been blessing our friends, our children, our parents, our neighbors, the heathen—all of mankind, of one family.

"O, give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever." During this Gospel Age his mercy has been manifest to all those who take up their cross and follow Jesus. By and by these will be glorified by the "First Resurrection." Then his mercy will return to natural Israel, under the New Covenant (Jeremiah xxxi, 31), of which Christ and the Church are "Able Ministers," Servants, Priests and Kings. Could all the world discern, through the trials and tears and sorrows and imperfections and dying of their present experience, the glorious outcome which God is providing the whole world, they would be filled with praise to him who loved us and bought us back from the penalty of death and who ultimately will complete his glorious work through Messiah's Kingdom.

Have we not, as followers of the Lord, as Christians, misrepresented the facts of the case and endeavored to have people give thanks to God for unkindness, injustice, lovelessness—to a God whose mercy never reached us and would never reach any but a small proportion of our race through the knowledge of Christ; to a God whose mercy, even to the one-tenth of those who had ever heard of him, he said, would endure only for the present life and even among these bring a blessing only to a mere handful of the elect!

Let us go back to the Word of God and free our minds of the prejudices of superstition and misinterpretation handed down from the Dark Ages. Let us see the glory of our God, as revealed in the Bible. Let Christians give thanks that, by the grace of God, their eyes and ears of understanding are opening to a better knowledge of him. Let them give thanks, not only for redemption from the death sentence, but also for their call to sainthip and its consequent suffering in this present time and its promise of reward of glory on the spirit plane by and by!

Let the world give thanks in proportion as it is able to discern God's goodness and mercy for Adam's race—that eventually through the channel of the glorified Church the Divine blessing will be extended to every member of Adam's race, giving opportunity to all to attain life everlasting with full human perfection and an everlasting Eden upon this now sin-cursed earth.

The New Stamps.

The new Postage Stamps are to be ready in May. The colors are to be practically the same as those during the last reign, but the design will be different. They will, of course, be submitted to the King for approval before being finally passed for circulation, and as His Majesty is a great authority in philately, he will doubtless take great interest in the matter, and give it very careful consideration.

The Old Temeraire.

[He jests at scars that never felt a wound.]

We drove among the untrodden ways
Beside the springs of Dove
A car which there were few to praise
And none at all to shove

She bumped upon a mossy stone
Half hidden from the eye
Fair as a car can spin she spun
And leapt toward the sky

We were alone, and few could know
When we two crossed to cross.
Ten miles we hauled her home, and, oh,
The difference to us.

ALL DRUGGISTS

New York and the Surf.

Few New Yorkers ever stop to think that one of that city's chief attractions is the surf. Philadelphians must go fifty-six miles to the ocean. Though the folk of Baltimore and Washington live on tidewater, they must travel for surf bathing to the capes. Boston is the only other large town on the Atlantic seaboard besides New York that has the ocean at its back door. San Francisco and Los Angeles are the only Pacific coast cities within trolley ride of ocean beach. None of the Mexican gulf cities can be compared to New York as a seaside resort, and as to New Orleans, another Mecca of the pleasure seekers, that lies more than 100 miles above the mouth of the Mississippi. But, including Coney Island and Rockaway, a good many miles of Greater New York are bounded by the ocean. This fact, just to consider the money making side of it, means an enormous revenue to the metropolis from the inland parts of the country. It is an advantage other great world centers, such as London, Paris and Berlin, do not enjoy.—Argonaut.

The Short Step Between.

"I was on an ocean liner when she ran on the rocks off the English coast some years ago," said a traveling man, "and in the panic that ensued there is one incident that stands out in my memory, illustrating the slender thread between the tragic and the ridiculous. We had a fellow on board who had managed to keep pretty well loaded all the way across, and when we struck the rocks he was in his usual condition. When everybody thought for sure we were going to the bottom he sat down at the piano in the saloon, and what do you suppose he began playing? 'Home, Sweet Home.' Somebody went to him and he cut him to stop. Immediately he scratched off from the doleful strains of the old song to the rollicking measure of 'Down Went McGinty.' The absurdity of the thing seemed to strike everybody at once, and a general laugh followed. The tension was relieved, and there was good order after that."

The Restaurant Piccolo.

Writing from Dresden, an American says: "There is at least one thing in a German restaurant for which one would look in vain in our country. That is the piccolo. You may think that I mean a musical instrument and that any orchestra in any country might have one of these, but you are wrong. My piccolo, the one at the restaurant, is a human being. He is a boy twelve to fifteen years old, who assists the regular waiters. He wears the regulation waiter's costume and looks funny in his spiketail coat. He is as solemn as a funeral, knows how to extract a tip and for the high privilege of retaining his place and taking his first degree as a waiter must endure much abuse at the hands of the head waiter and his underlings. He is a funny little fellow, this piccolo, who because of his appearance could never prosper in our country."—New York Tribune.

Created a New Word.

It was the third Earl Spencer who added a word to the language in consequence of a wager. The bet was that by cutting off the tail part of his overcoat he could bring into fashion overcoats so short that the skirts of the undercoat would show beneath. He won his wager, and "spencer" became the name both of that garment and of the feminine one afterward constructed in its likeness. The peerage has added more than one name to the terminology of costume. Everybody knows "Wellingtons," and the billycock hat is said by some to be really "Billy Coke," from Coke of Norfolk, earl of Leicester. But none of these examples in the sphere of clothes rivals what the Earl of Sandwich did when he contrived the slice of meat between bread as a device to enable him to go on gambling without leaving off for a meal.—London Chronicle.

Maple in the Days of Old.

Scarcely any wood was considered more valuable in the "days of old" than maple wood, tables constructed from a mottled variety being particularly favored. Such a table, according to Evelyn, was Cicero's, costing 10,000 sesterces—about £82. Another was estimated at £875, and yet another, belonging to one of the Ptolemies, is said to have been sold for its weight in gold. There was, in fact, such a craze for tables of the rarest maple among the male sex in Rome and so wildly extravagant were they in this respect that when they reproached their wives for lavishness in pearls and other valuables the ladies would remind them of their costly maple hobby, thus "turning the tables on them," hence the phrase. Virgil represents Evander, who was a provincial king, as receiving Aeneas seated on a maple throne. Chaucer speaks of the maple as forming a bower for the fair Rosamond. In Evelyn's time the wood of the maple was much esteemed for all kinds of turnery.—Westminster Gazette.

Galileo's Caustic Humor.

In a biography of Galileo some stories are told of the caustic humor of that bold investigator. Lotario Sarsi, a writer on science, having said that the Babylonians used to cook eggs by whirling them in a sling, Galileo replied: "The cause of such an effect is very remote from that to which it is attributed, and to find the true cause I shall reason thus: If an effect does not follow with us which followed with others at another time it is because in our experiments something is wanting which was the cause of the former success, and if only one thing is wanting to us that one thing is the true cause. Now we have eggs and slings and strong men to whirl them, and yet they will not become cooked; nay, if they were hot at first they more quickly become cold, and since nothing is wanting to us but to be Babylonians it follows that being Babylonians is the true cause why the eggs became cooked and not to the friction of the air, which is what I wish to prove."

She Didn't Mind.

A girl with a Gibson face and a green feather in her hat boarded a Chestnut street car the other afternoon. She carried something in a paper sack under her arm. The car was crowded with passengers, and no one offered to rise.

The girl looked worried, but set her lips and grabbed at a strap. Just then the car lurched, the girl made a wild effort to keep on her feet and threw her bundle straight in a large man's lap. There was a peculiar grinding sound in the sack, and then something seeped out that looked suspiciously like the yellow of an egg.

"What in the thunder is this stuff?" he started to say, when she sweetly remarked as she clung to the strap:

"Oh, never mind making apologies. I can get another dozen of eggs at our grocery."

The conductor removed the sack of eggs, and the man looked so savage that no one dared laugh.—Louisville Times.

A Weekly Birthday.

Dr. Marks, who for many years was head of St. John's college, Rangoon, which the young Burmese princes attended, once granted a day's holiday because it was Queen Victoria's birthday. The king asked Dr. Marks what he meant by it. On hearing the explanation he said graciously, "That's all right, but will you give them a holiday on my birthday?"

Dr. Marks said he certainly would if his majesty would inform him what was the day on which the world was blessed by his birth.

"According to Burmese national custom," said the king, "my birthday is every Tuesday!"

Try This Home-Made Cough Remedy

Costs Little, But Does the Work Quickly, or Money Refunded.

Mix two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle; then add the Sugar Syrup. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

You will find that this simple remedy takes hold of a cough more quickly than anything else you ever used. Usually ends a deep-seated cough inside of 24 hours. Splendid, too, for whooping cough, chest pains, bronchitis and other throat troubles. It stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough.

This recipe makes more and better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly and tastes pleasant.

Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and all the natural pine elements which are so healing to the membranes. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

This plan of making cough syrup with Pinex and Sugar Syrup (or strained honey) has proven so popular throughout the United States and Canada, that it is often imitated. But the old, successful formula has never been equalled.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

NEW INFANTRY OUTFIT.

Lighter and More Convenient Than the Old Equipment.

The new equipment for the United States infantry will prove a boon to the soldier in the field. It is the result of the study of the special army board for the several past months, and a practical test at field maneuvering by the soldiers equipped with the new outfit has thoroughly demonstrated its worth.

The equipment has been devised with every consideration of economy in cost and reduction in weight and adds materially to the soldier's personal movements, while at the same time means have been adopted for relieving him of that part of the burden from which he needs to separate himself in the field.

The new equipment accomplishes a saving in weight in the burden of the foot soldier of ten pounds. Its principal feature is the pack, which consists of a cylindrical roll of canvas worn vertically on the back of the soldier. This contains the blanket, poncho, rations, and so on. It is adjusted so as to minimize the weight and is affixed to the body in such a way that the "comforts" may be speedily released by pulling a string and leaving that part of the pack on the field, suitably numbered for subsequent identification. All that then remains on the shoulders is that part of the haversack containing the necessaries in the shape of food and water.

Another feature of the outfit is made up of the surplus kit, one for each squad of a corporal and seven men and containing the extra pair of shoes, a pair of slippers or gymnasium shoes (a new article), the extra blanket and a combination "hussif," instead of the individual article. A new bayonet scabbard has been devised and will be carried on the pack, the idea being to take away from the body all dangling articles. The soldier's blouse is to be abandoned, and in its place is suggested a moderately heavy sweater to be made with an opening for chest exposure. It is claimed that this garment in connection with the short jacket will afford a better facility for marching than does the present uniform.—Harper's Weekly.

A Lincoln Portrait.

A portrait of Abraham Lincoln which has come to public notice through the request of Robert T. Lincoln, son of the great president, for a photographic copy of it has hung for many years in the chapel of Shurtleff college, Alton, Ill. It was painted from life in 1859, when Lincoln was fifty years old, by A. J. Conant, an artist who was then connected with Shurtleff college, and was sold to the college in 1868. Mr. Conant wrote to the college authorities from New York in 1902, giving some facts about the picture and saying that it was the first of several pictures he had painted of Lincoln, and he believed it was a good one.

Railroad "Terminals."

The term "depot" used to designate a railroad station seems to have fallen into disuse, except as applied to the insignificant structures of the small towns, and the word "terminal" has the present approval. It has been recently decided that the new Grand Central structures in New York city shall be officially known as the "Grand Central terminal," and the new Pennsylvania railroad plant has been known as the "Pennsylvania terminal" since the work began. A great railroad station is being seriously considered at Tacoma, Wash., and it will also be known as the "terminal."—Indianapolis News.

Old and New Barcelona.

Barcelona is divided for administrative purposes into the old Barcelona of the middle ages and the new Barcelona, with its wide streets and beautiful residences. The public works of the old and new parts are intrusted to separate Spanish officials and paid for out of separate funds, and the problems are entirely distinct. In the new town the sum of $6,500,000 is being expended on a sewerage system, while the old town is mediaeval in this as in other respects and even has a bit of sewer built in Roman times.

A Moroccan Punishment.

We have heard of many atrocities in Morocco, but Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett mentions a new and peculiarly horrible variety of torture which was inflicted on a man who had espoused the cause of the defeated sultan. He was sentenced to have the palms of his hands cut open, filled with salt and his clinched fists sewed up in leather gloves, so that as the wounds healed they would grow together.

Getting equainted.

"We hesitated bout renting this place," said the woman who had just moved in, "until we learned that the families on both sides of us owned their houses. It is so unpleasant to live where the people next door are always changing and you never know what kind of neighbors you are going to have."

"Yes," responded the woman on the other side of the fence. "That's one reason why we're tryin to sell our house."—Chicago Tribune.

The Waiting Championship.

An Atchison woman who looks for good in everything is glad she married. "It has taught me patience," she said. When a girl she flew into a temper if she had to wait five minutes for something she wanted, but now she waits and waits and waits and says nothing. She waited nine years for her new front porch, six years for her husband to take her to the theater and eleven years for him voluntarily, when there was no company around, to rock her a rocking chair. "This," she said recently to a friend who heard she was sitting up half the night waiting for her husband to come home, "is nothing. I can wait longer and say less about it than any woman who ever lived. I am glad I married; otherwise I could never claim the waiting championship belt."—Atchison Globe.

A STRANGE RECOVERY

How a Gentleman Came into Possession of an Ancient Clock

A gentleman who occupies a responsible position under the Birmingham City Council is responsible for the following story: "Some time ago business took him to Sunderland where circumstances brought him into a side street. Here his attention was attracted by a small clock of unusual design exhibited for sale in a second hand shop. An irresistible impulse prompted him to stop and examine the clock, vainly trying to recall where he had seen it before. As he did so, the vigilant tradesman came forward. The clock was produced, and upon opening the door the strange interest the clock possessed for the Birmingham visitor was explained. Inside was a brass plate, which the prospective purchaser instantly recognized as bearing the name of his grandmother. As a boy visitor to his grandmother's house some forty-eight years ago, the clock had always exercised a peculiar fascination for him, and upon the death of the old lady he understood that it had been claimed by some relatives of her husband. How it found a place in the Sunderland second-hand shop is a mystery, for the old lady had died in her quiet native Devonshire village. The clock now adorns my informant's Edgbaston residence."

ALCOHOL FROM SAWDUST

A Story About Mark Twain and the Table-leg

There is a story of Mark Twain to the effect that he was once asked whether he was in favor of Prohibition, and he replied that he was not, adding, "What is the use of Prohibition when a man can saw off the leg of a table and get drunk on it?" He was, of course referring to the fact that alcohol has been made from sawdust.

For quite a century past chemists have been experimenting with a view to seeing whether alcohol could be obtained from wood and other cellular substances in commercial quantities. Despite the many experimenters who have engaged in the task with a zeal worthier, perhaps, of a better cause, their efforts have been hitherto unsuccessful. All they have been able to do has been to transform the wood into sugar by hydrolysis, and to convert the sugar thus obtained into alcohol by fermentation; but these processes are too costly to render them practicable from a commercial point of view.

RAISING SUNKEN SHIPS

Filled with Air Which Drives Out the Water

The French submarine boat Narval, which was wrecked and sunk some time ago, has been raised, and has served for some interesting experiments which prove the unreliability of the often recommended method of raising sunken ships by filling them with air. The Narval was sunk by admitting water, and was then filled with air under pressure by the torpedo pumps of two other submarines. Before sufficient water could be expelled the cover of the manhole, which was connected with a view of resisting external pressure alone, was forced open, and the water rushed in. The cover was then made fast by divers, and air was again pumped into the hull. Suddenly the stern of the boat appeared above the surface of the water, while the bow still touched the bottom, so that the boat assumed an almost vertical position. Finally the bow was also raised from the bottom by pumping in still more air. In contrast with this the process actually used in the practical raising of the vessel was far simpler and easier. A scow was anchored over the sunken boat, to which it was attached by chains at low tide. The rising tide lifted the scow and the submarine, and at high tide they could be towed to port. It was shown that it was possible to raise the submarine without making use of the tide by sinking the scow to a certain depth by means of water ballast, making it fast to the submarine, and then pumping out the water.

MANUEL'S CHARACTER

The Ex-King Said to be Cast in a Lefty Mould

King Manuel has not been given much chance of showing the mettle of which he is made. But those who profess to know, describe him as a youth of high character and affectionate disposition, anxious to do his duty as a constitutional sovereign. "Vera city," says a writer in the Star "I would almost call truthfulness personified—is a good description of the king. He is too courageous to prevaricate even. He is a sincere friend of his friends; most liberal in religious matters; no bigot, and respects all who live up to their religion. In this he is exactly like his mother, the Queen. His tastes are decidedly artistic; literature, music and painting he revels in. In personal habits he is most simple, scrupulously methodical and punctual, an early riser, a keen observer and reader of character. He has an unfailing memory, and recalls faces and names marvellously. I believe him to be pure-minded, moral, straightforward, amiable and affable. He is lovable and amiable, and no one I know comes nearer to my definition of 'a perfect gentleman.'"

A SPORTING CHANCE

The sun was just rising above the eastern horizon when Thomson inserted his latchkey in the front door. Slowly and carefully he picked his way upstairs, but his efforts at quietness were of the loudest possible description, and the inevitable occurred. Mrs. Thomson thrust her head over the banisters. "Well," she said, with deep sarcasm, "are you just coming home from the club, or going out to business?"

"I'm not sure, love," replied the erring one, "but—hic—I'll toss you for it."

USING PIGEONS

Carry Messages in Australia for Lighthouses

Pigeons in Australia are used for carrying messages between Hobart and Maatsuyker Island lighthouse, a distance of about seventy-five miles. Last winter the birds called a physician for a lighthouse attendant and undoubtedly saved his life. Three birds are liberated with messages every three weeks, and when accidents occur, three additional birds are set free. Twelve birds in all are used for the service.

While messages have not always reached their destination the service has been highly satisfactory. The Marine Board has in view some collapsible cases which may be adjusted under the bird's wing, and in which considerable information might be carried.

The birds are fed on peas, given plenty of gravel and fresh water, and kept thoroughly clean, with plenty of exercise.

The raising of pigeons as carriers in Australia has become quite a thriving industry, there being at present about 20,000 of the birds on the Australian continent.

SEATS OF SOVEREIGNS

The Coronation Chair at Westminster Is the Most Interesting

We often hear people talk about "the King upon his throne," but does it ever occur to us to ask, "Which throne?" There are five in London alone; so this question is not so unnecessary as might at first appear.

The most magnificent throne of the British Sovereigns is that at Windsor Castle. This throne was presented to Queen Victoria by an Indian maharajah, and is of carved ivory inlaid with various costly jewels.

The throne from which the King opens prorogues, and dissolves Parliament, is made of teak, and has a gilded canopy. It occupies a raised position in the House of Lords.

There are three thrones in the London palaces, that in Buckingham Palace being especially remarkable for the sumptuous dais on which it stands.

But of all the throne, or coronation chair, in Westminster Abbey, is by far the most interesting. It is solidly put together, and is made of oak. Placed under the seat is the famous Coronation Stone of Scone, at which town generations upon generations of Scottish kings were crowned before the union of Scotland and England on the accession of James I. This is a large slab of sandstone and, according to the old Scottish legend it is the identical stone upon which Jacob laid his head when he dreamed of the angels and the ladder to heaven at Bethel, and which he afterwards anointed with oil.

In striking contrast to the costly throne at Windsor Castle is the throne of the Dutch kings at the Hague. It is a comparatively simple piece of furniture—a kind of glorified armchair with drapery. The throne in Amsterdam is more majestic. Over the seat is a crown, supported by ornamental lions studded with jewels. The canopy of this throne is exceptionally fine.

The Czar of Russia and the Sultan of Turkey each have a large number of thrones. But it is doubtful if there exists in the whole world one superior to the silver throne of the German Emperor in Berlin. This magnificent piece of workmanship has an enormous shield, also of silver, over the seat, and the canopy is profusely decorated with eagles and crowns.

BABY PRISONERS

Infant of Eighteen Months Charged as a Wanderer

A baby of eighteen months, Frank Warwick, was charged in London, England, under the Children's Act, with wandering, and was carried into court by the matron. The magistrate remarked that it seemed ridiculous to charge one so young, but the police inspector replied that he had had to charge babies under twelve months old. A further remand was ordered.

When taken into court on a previous occasion young Frank caught sight of his mother, who is charged with exposing her children in a manner likely to cause them injury, and there was no further peace until he was allowed to cling round her neck.

The magistrate thought it absurd to charge children of that age, and ordered them to be sent to the workhouse.

There was another scene when an attempt was made to separate little Frank from his mother. Both mother and child had to be taken out together and when the actual separation took place the little boy's sob could be heard throughout the court.

THE LEANING TOWER

The Famous Structure is in Dange of Collapding

Unless remedial measures are taken it is possible that the famous leaning tower of Pisa may ultimately collapse as did the Campanile at Venice a few years ago. Measurements taken by an English engineer in 1829 showed the tower to be 16½ feet out of the perpendicular. Measurements taken recently show that the divergence has increased to 16½ feet. It should be within the resources of modern engineering to excavate below the tower bring it gradually back to the vertical, and place beneath it an absolutely secure foundation.

GAY GOWNS IN PARIS

A Startling Evening Dress—Aigrettes, Plumes, and Imitation Gems on Shoes

The latest play, "The Marionettes," just produced at the Comedie Francaise, in Paris, brought forth an exhibition of delightful frocks by the young beauties of the company, including Mlles. Pierat, Robinne and Provost, all well known in the French capital for their charm of face and figure.

Very noticeable was the new line of decollette, quite off the shoulder, or at least simulating that effect by means of flesh-colored drapings, extremely low at the back, and V-shaped back and front. It is a bit startling at first view, it must be admitted, but is most attractive. Mlle. Prevost wore a fascinating toilette with a very fish-tailed train, the skirt, cherry-colored velvet, fitting closely, while the corsage was of the design described and of flesh-colored chiffon.

Gabrielle Robinne's gowns are simply exquisite. That for the afternoon scene was a saphire blue velvet, as soft as silk. The yoke and sleeves were in one piece and were of Venetian lace, bordered with skunk skin. The ball gown was of emerald green, embroidered in jet and gold.

Huge aigrettes and bunches of ostrich plumes set well at the back of the coiffure were worn with all these costumes. Martial and Armand, who created these gowns for Mlle. Robinne, are showing some very smart models of the new skirt, which, by the way, is shorter in front and back than at the sides. Some are simply shorter in a straight line, others are cut up about four inches and rounded in a curve. Tailor-made gowns show these latter effects, while some afternoon and evening dresses have a piece of embroidered net or lace inserted in the open space.

Period toilettes are at present accompanied by the pretty fashion of wearing lace fichus. Striped taffeta silk is the material chiefly used for these costumes. Elbow sleeves and black velvet sashes are also distinguished notes.

Evening wraps continue to grow in beauty and gorgeousness. A lovely example was seen at the Cafe de Paris recently, and was of bronze green trimmed with motifs of velvet to match and with deep braids of mink.

Another, a new Soeur model, was of cerise colored velvet, the deep yoke and the sleeves being in one piece, sown, or rather worked, in every conceivable way, lengthwise, crosswise and in squares, which give almost a quilted effect. A very deep band of the fur finished the wrap at the bottom.

Pollin shoes for afternoon wear are as dainty as they are desirable in other ways. The dull-ribbed stik certainly make the feet look small. The shoes are trimmed with round slides of sparkling simili diamonds.

HAVE YOU ACROMEGALY?

This Rare Disease Causes an Enlargement of Various Parts of the Body

A demonstration was given by Professor Arthur Keith, at the Royal College of Surgeons, London, on a disease known as acromegaly.

Men and women who are the subjects of this disease find that their hands and feet increase slowly in size, so that large fittings in boots and gloves are required from time to time. The face also grows, especially the lower parts, and the ridges over the eyes become more prominent. Larger sizes in hats and collars may draw the patient's attention to these changes, but the enlargements usually occur so gradually that the subject is unconscious of them. There are probably fifty or more subjects of this disease in London at the present time.

The prototype of "Punch" is supposed by some to have been the subject of this disease, the diagnosis, however, is evidently wrong, says Professor Keith, for, although the ample nose, the massive lower jaw projecting chin, and dorsal "hump" bear some resemblance to the real disease, yet the lively humor, small hands, thin lips, and well-fitting teeth, are against "Punch" being a subject of acromegaly.

Acromegaly is usually accompanied by an enlargement of a small gland at the base of the brain—the pituitary body—supposed by the ancients to be the seat of the soul, and by many modern persons as a functionless structure. The observations of Dr. Marie, a French physician, have, however, led to a renewed interest in the pituitary gland.

Its form, use, and diseases, have been the subjects of many inquiries, and it is becoming evident that its secretion is closely concerned in regulating and co-ordinating the growth of various parts of the body; and a study of the effects produced by overgrowths of this gland will probably provide a key to many of the factors which determine the physical conformation of the body, and lead to the establishment of physical anthropology on a scientific basis.

LIVING PICTURES THAT TALK

After months and months of experimenting Mr. Thomas Edison, the famous inventor, has perfected the "Kinetophone," or talking picture-machine. According to the inventor himself, it has proved one of the most difficult problems he ever tackled. Before a specially invited audience, the other day, he gave an exhibition. On a screen appeared a lecturer, who described the new machine. In the synchronization between his words and his gestures there was no flaw. Then came a frock-coated juggler. He threw an iron ball on the floor, and there was an accompanying crash. He dropped a plate, and one heard it smash; and when he pressed the bulb of a motor-horn, it "honk-honked."

A Frigid Greeting

Hon. Mr. Paterson Makes Effort to Find Out, But Cannot—They Were All Excited a Year Ago and Now They Call For Delay — Monk and Paquet Introduce Gilbert of Drummond-Arthabaska.

Ottawa, Nov. 29.—An incident unique in Parliamentary practice, and quite without precedent in the history of the House of Commons, occurred yesterday afternoon when Arthur Gilbert, Nationalist member for Drummond and Arthabaska, was introduced to Mr. Speaker. Speculation as to who would escort Mr. Gilbert to the House was relieved when F. D. Monk (Jacques Cartier) and Dr. Eugene Paquet (L'Islet) retired from the chamber before the orders of the day were called.

Amid a silence more ominous than accidental Mr. Gilbert shook hands with the Speaker, and proceeded slowly to his seat on the back row farthest from Mr. Speaker. If Mr. Gilbert was welcome, nobody tried to make him feel so. There was not a sound, and it is significant to note that the occupants of front seats on both sides of the House found it convenient to be otherwise engaged while this interesting ceremony was in progress. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Borden found something interesting in the memoranda on their desks. George E. Foster was in a brown study, hat pulled well over his eyes, and Hon. Wm. Paterson seemed to be counting squares on the ceiling. The Nationalist, if there were any, were not conspicuous by their presence or demonstration. P. E. Blondin, J. A. Lortie and W. B. Nantel, the three followers of Mr. Monk, were not in the House.

Apart from the introduction of Mr. Gilbert, member for Drummond and Arthabaska, the feature of yesterday's sitting of the House of Commons on the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, was Hon. Wm. Paterson's vigorous onslaught on the position of the Conservative party in the light of Mr. Borden's amendment offered in lieu of that by Mr. Monk. Mr. Paterson persistently asked the question, when the Conservative party was anxious for an immediate contribution to the imperial navy a year ago, why did hon. members present a change of front now and urge the delay consequent upon an appeal to the country. He suggested it was due to the influence of Mr. Monk upon that party.

Mr. Borden, he said, had suggested to the Prime Minister the insertion before the word "organization" of some such word as "immediate" or "early" in the original resolution. The Prime Minister acceded to this view, and the word "speedy" was inserted.

Continuing, his voice increasing in volume and raising in pitch, the Minister of Customs, said: "Mr. Borden made a suggestion and wanted one word inserted, that would indicate that they were to act promptly. Now the whole tone of the Opposition is, 'Do not go into the creation of a navy; ask the people.'"

In conclusion, he said, that if the Government would build a Canadian navy in close co-operation with the Admiralty, the Conservative party would endorse it.

Continuing after recess, Mr. Paterson asked what position would Canada occupy if the matter of naval organization were stayed until a general election. Hon. gentlemen opposite, recognizing the need for immediate action last year, were in favor of making a gift of $35,000,000 to the Mother Country. Now they do not propose that anything should be done in the matter of self-defence at all.

"Is it because the member for Jacques Cartier (J. D. Monk), whom they tried to read out of the party, is in the party again, and has assumed the leadership?" (Liberal cheers.)

Dr. Sproule (East Grey) declared there was an absolute need for a plebiscite or reference to the people on the naval question, and described the Government's attitude as "arbitrary, autocratic, tyrannical, and out of harmony with the principles of constitutional government, as known and carried out by the Imperial Parliament and the colonial dependencies of the Empire."

He condemned the Government for its apathetic policy towards the Hudson Bay Railway. The construction of a bridge across the Saskatchewan River at the Pas Mission was poor management, because it was not known whether a bridge at that point would serve the railway when located.

Furthermore, if the Government make no better progress with that bridge than it had done with the Quebec bridge, he was inclined to sympathize with the people of the east.

Discussing the fiscal situation, Dr. Sproule charged the Government with being without a fixed policy of any kind. The feeling of the country, he asserted, was totally against reciprocity, and there was no mandate from the people to warrant the Government entering upon the negotiations.

Further, he chided the Government with not being able to take a licking like real sports. The verdict in Drummond and Arthabaska had not satisfied them. He argued that there was no greater sinner in Canada to-day than the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in raising the race cry. On the same issue the Government would be beaten in seven out of ten constituencies in Quebec.

George W. Kyte (Liberal) Richard Blain (Conservative) and D. B. Neeley (Liberal) also spoke.

W. B. Northrop (East Hastings) moved the adjournment.

Dr. Schaffner, one of the Conservative members from Manitoba, has given notice of the following resolution: "That the present system of operating terminal and transfer elevators is detrimental to the interests of the western grain producers, and that the Government should take immediate steps to operate terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, and the transfer elevators between these terminals and the Atlantic seaboard."

Mr. Armstrong, the Conservative member for East Lambton, will ask if the Government has done anything to put a stop to the use of the mails for the furtherance of "get-rich-quick" schemes, such as Sheldon's, and enquiries further if the Government has made any effort to prosecute the guilty parties.

Dr. Black (Hants, N.S.) introduced a bill to amend the Medical Act. He explained that it contained one provision of more than ordinary importance, viz., the placing in the federal laws an enactment giving to a medical practitioner qualified to practice in any Canadian province, the right to practice in any other province.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier promised that the public accounts committee would be organized not later than Wednesday. Mr. Borden suggested that the auditor-general's report for two years be referred to the committee. Sir Wilfrid promised to look into the matter.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Three more jail guards at Montreal have been suspended as the result of the investigation into the supply of cocaine to prisoners.

Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada, yesterday celebrated his 59th birthday anniversary and received many telegrams of congratulations.

It is rumored that Gen. D. G. MacDonald, quartermaster-general of the Canadian militia, will shortly retire on pension and be succeeded by Col. J. L. Biggar.

The Dominion Government has completed the plans for the new Plaza Laurier, Ottawa, which will make a beautiful square of the Sappers and Dufferin Bridges and the now vacant space between them. The cost will be the neighborhood of $100,000.

Wholesale Thievery In House.

Ottawa, Nov. 29.—Ninety-six dozen towels were stolen from the Parliament buildings while the House was in session last year, was the statement made to-day. The wholesale thievery of brushes, combs, towels, umbrellas, rubbers, walking canes, pocket knives, soap, and a host of other articles have been going on for years, but it has not assumed gigantic proportions.

Dishes have been disappearing from the Government cupboards with consistent regularity. Street car tickets and odd change have been taken from coat pockets, the drawers of desks have been ransacked, and pens, pencils, tobacco, pipes, and cigars abstracted.

One day during the recess an individual who had been ordered by the sergeant-at-arms to remain outside the precincts of the Parliament buildings, was discovered by a newspaper correspondent in one of the lobbies, carrying off a grip which contained some valuable papers.

Nothing whatever in the shape of attempt to stop the petty thievery can be observed. The Dominion police patrol the lobbies, but they cannot see what is going on inside the rooms.

"Bronchitis"
This is an acute inflammation of the mucous membrane lining the air tubes in the lungs.
The disease begins with a tightness across the chest, difficulty of breathing, hoarseness, and there is a dry, harsh, croupy cough.
After a few days mucous begins to be raised. This is at first white, but later of a greenish or yellowish color and is occasionally streaked with blood.
Cure the first symptoms of Bronchitis by the use of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and thus prevent it becoming chronic and perhaps turning to Consumption.
Mrs. D. J. McCormack, Cleveland, N.S., writes: "My little boy, two years old, caught a bad cold which developed into Bronchitis. He was so choked up he could hardly breathe. Reading about your wonderful medicine, Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, I decided to try a bottle, and with such good result I got another which completely cured him, without having a doctor. I cannot say too much in its praise and would not be without it in the house as I consider it a sure cure for Colds and Bronchitis.
Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents.

LOCAL C.P.R. TRAIN WAS VERY LATE

Cars Were Derailed at Claremont and Auxiliary Had to be Sent up From Havelock to Clear the Track

DAMAGE SLIGHT

The C.P.R. local and the midnight were delayed last night owing to an accident which occurred to the former. Owing to some mishaps, unknown to local officials two of the local's cars and one truck of the engine got off the track at Claremount. The auxiliary was dispatched quickly to the scene of the accident, and succeeded in setting the engine on again. A train was made up at Claremount and the same engine continued the journey. It arrived here this morning at 1.55. In the meantime the midnight succeeded in passing the local at Claremount and arrived here at 1.27 this morning. No person was hurt, and little damage was done, except to the derailed cars of the local, which were slightly damaged.

5,000 PEOPLE ARE THROWN INTO PANIC

Bomb Set Off in Front of a Restaurant—It is Thought the Explosion Was Work of Black Hand Men

PLACE WRECKED

NEW YORK, N.Y., Nov. 29.—Five thousand persons were thrown into a panic today when a bomb was set off in front of the restaurant of Francesco Labarber, 258 Elizabeth street. The place was wrecked and Labarber narrowly escaped being killed. Windows throughout the neighbourhood were shattered by the force of the explosion. Larbarber declared to the police he believed a band of black mailers, who had hounded him several years ago, set off the bomb. In 1905 his one year old son, Pietro, was kidnapped and the father received letters demanding $2,500. The letters stated that unless the money was paid the boy would be killed. The letters were turned over to Lieut. Petrosino, who was afterwards assassinated in Sicily. Labarber finally received a letter stating the boy was dead. Nothing further was ever heard from little Pitrio.

SLEIGHING FOR THE FIRST TIME THIS SEASON

Peterborough Has Its First Real Fall of the Beautiful—Heavy Snowstorm Continued Through the Night

THE SWEEPER OUT

Peterborough had its first real fall of the beautiful last night and, as a result, the merry jingle of the sleigh bells greeted the ears of the citizens this morning, a pleasing change to the rattle of wheels over the frozen roads. It commenced to snow heavily a little before 6 o'clock last evening and the storm continued until this morning with the result that the ground was covered with a deep mantle. Last night the Radial Railway Company found it necessary to place the sweeper in commission to keep the lines clear. It is much warmer this afternoon, but the probabilities call for a shift to much colder weather to-morrow, in which case the snow is likely to remain with us for some time.

SLUMP IN LIBERAL VOTE LOOKED FOR

Figures of the Canvassers in the British Elections Would Seem to Indicate That Fact—The Reasons

DIFFERENT POLICY

Examiner Special.

LONDON, ENG., NOV. 29. — That there may be a slump in the Liberal vote from last election owing to the difference in policy advocated by Asquith's following this time, is tartlingly indicated by the first returns of canvassers in London and Southern England. 'Tis found that many who voted Liberal last time on the budget issue, fight shy of the veto and house rule bills. This may have a serious effect on the Liberal majority.

ANOTHER STORY OF THE THOMAS BOOM

Lindsay Man Hastened To Buy Real Estate Near the Site of the Proposed Factory as Speculation

NOW HE'S "STUNG"

(Lindsay Post)

A good story is going the rounds about a well-known citizen. It has to do with a speculative deal in connection with the "Thomas Shoe Co." of inglorious memory.

Now, this citizen, ever alert for a wise speculation hurried to Fenelon Falls during the "Thomas boom" and purchased two lots near the glove factory site from a resident of the Vanroot Village. The poet Burns says: "The best laid plans of men and mice gang aft agley." The puncture of the bubble left two lots on the citizen's hands, which he is anxious to dispose of.

CONTRACT FOR NEW LIBRARY FURNISHINGS WAS GIVEN TO THE LIBRARY BUREAU, OTTAWA

Their Tender Was the Lowest, Amounting to $1073—Will Have the Fittings Ready in Four Weeks.

LOCAL MEN HIGH

The Property Committee of the City Council met last night at the conclusion of the committee of the whole. There were present Mayor Morrow, Chairman Ald. Duncan and Aldermen Batten, Morgan, Graham, and Bradburn.

Tenders for book stacks, chairs, desks, tables, etc., were considered. The local people could not figure on the whole equipment, excepting one, whose tender was too high for consideration.

The tenders received from outside firms were as follows:

The Library Bureau, Ottawa, $1,073.

The Office Specialty Co., Toronto, $1,122.

On motion of the mayor, seconded by Ald. Morgan, the tender of the Library Bureau firm at $1,073 was accepted, the chairman of the Library Board and the chairman of the Property Committee to arrange details as to which of two styles of chairs shall be procured. This however, cannot affect the accepted tender in point of being lower than that of the Office Specialty Co., for the same quality and line of goods.

The stacks are to be of wood. Complete equipment is guaranteed to be delivered in four weeks.

The chairman was instructed to advertise for tenders for blinds for the Public Library and was given authority to purchase same.

NO DYSPEPSIA OR UNDIGESTED FOOD

Heartburn, Gas, Headache and All Stomach Distress Vanishes

There would not be a case of indigestion here if readers who are subject to Stomach trouble, knew the tremendous anti-ferment and digestive virtue contained in Diapepsin. This harmless preparation will digest a heavy meal without the slightest fuss or discomfort, and relieve the sourest, acid stomach in five minutes, besides overcoming all foul, Nauseous odour from the breath.

Ask your pharmacist to show you the formula, plainly printed on each 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin, then you will readily understand why this promptly cures Indigestion and removes such symptoms as Heartburn, a feeling like a lump of lead in the stomach, Belching of Gas and Eructations of undigested food, water brash, Nausea, Headache, Biliousness and many other bad symptoms; and, beside your stomach liver and intestines, you will not need laxatives to keep them clean and fresh.

If your Stomach is sour and full of gas, or your food doesn't digest, and your meal don't seem to fit, why not get a 50-cent case from your druggist and make life worth living. Absolute relief from Stomach misery and perfect digestion of anything you eat is sure to follow five minutes after, and, besides, one case is sufficient to cure a whole family of such trouble.

Surely, a harmless, inexpensive preparation like Diapepsin which will always, either at daytime or during night, relieve your stomach misery and digest your meals, is about as handy and valuable a thing as you could have in the house.

PREMIER ASQUITH MAY COME OUT WITH HOME RULE FOR SCOTLAND AS AN ISSUE

Special Wire to the Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., NOV. 29.—Political meetings held last night here and in many other big centres demonstrate that neither party will leave a stone unturned to gain a victory. The Unionists and Liberals alike realize that to be a victory worth anything, the Liberals must increase the majority in the house. A mere plurality would not suffice to curb the Lords as required to pass the veto and home rule. So far the results of meetings indicate nothing. They are all generally crowded and the orators of both parties subjected to equal heckling. It would not surprise people if Asquith came out with home rule for Scotland as well as Ireland, with the endorsation of some scheme of the provinces of Great Britain. Much depends on the Scottish vote and the Liberals would give a lot to get it. At Edinburgh a strongly Unionist meeting was addressed by Austin Chamberlain last night. The name of Joseph Chamberlain was loudly cheered, but Lloyd George's name was hissed.

HOW WILL HOUSE OF REFUGE BE BUILT?

Will the City Build It and Control It or Give $10,000 to Protestant Home Board and Let Them Erect It?

MATTER DISCUSSED

At a meeting of the committee of the Whole Council last evening, the matter of building a new Protestant Home was introduced by His Worship Mayor Morrow. There were present in addition to the Mayor, Ald. Gilkespie, Duffus, Batten, Phelan, Bradburn, Butler, Duncan, Hicks, Metheral, Graham and Morgan. Mayor Morrow stated that the special House of Refuge Committee had considered the question as to whether to submit a by-law to the people, the city to pay the entire cost of building a home and have it under the control of the Council or to give the Protestant home Board $10,000, and they would build and equip the home, and govern it. It was just a question, he said, as to whether it would be wise to submit a by-law as the tax rate was at present high enough and he did not want to see it rise any higher. If the city built the home, the Protestant Home and the House of Providence would be taxed on the same plan as the schools.

On motion of Ald. Graham and Butler, it was decided to have Mayor Morrow confer with the Protestant Home Board.

The selection of the many polling subdivisions for the coming elections, together with the proposed deputy returning officers were considered in preparation for Monday night's meeting, when the by-law governing same will be passed.

This year candidates for aldermen in each ward must be nominated in the ward for which they are named. This is in accordance with the "ward system," voted for by the people at last election. Nominations for Mayor and school trustees will be recived in the Council chamber as usual.

Ald. Bradburn moved, seconded by Ald. Graham, that the matter of providing a public lavatory beneath the market building, at present under construction, be approved of by council, and the work be proceeded with by the City Trust Commissioners under the supervision of Ald. Duncan.

Ald. Morgan moved, seconded by Ald. Metheral: that the Property Committee be given authority to spend up to $1,400 in fitting the new public library.

Easy To Select Christmas Gifts At Clarke & Son's A Magnificent Assortment

With Christmas less than four weeks away, the great problem before the people of Peterborough is what to buy in the gift line. A visit to the splendidly equipped jewellery store, of Messrs. F. R. Clarke and Sons at the corner of George and Hunter streets will effectually settle this question and at the same time assure the purchaser that his gift will be appreciated. The name of F. R. Clarke and Son upon a Christmas gift is a certain and recognized guarantee of merit. Just now Mr. Clarke is in a better position than ever to meet the demand of the Christmas trade as his store simply teems with gifts in many varieties and at all prices and there should be no difficulty in selecting something for each member of the family from this splendid stock. Among the lines being featured for the Christmas season may be mentioned gold pendants and diamond and pearl set rings. There is a magnificent showing of cut glass and English cutlery, and one of the finest displays of brass goods ever shown in Peterborough. In an article of this length it is not possible to go into details, but it may give the buying public some idea of the vast assortment that Mr. Clarke has to offer. The firm is better prepared for the Christmas season and has better facilities for serving the public than ever before.

There are personal gifts for ladies, home gifts for ladies, personal gifts for men and home gifts for men, even for the little girl and the small boy. If one was to attempt to give a list of the many suitable presents that can be secured at Clarke and Son's, it would require many newspaper columns to set them forth. The best thing for intending purchasers to do is to take the earliest possible opportunity of calling at the store and looking over the stock. Now is the time to buy; not a few days before Christmas when the best lines have been picked up. Mr. Clarke will lay aside anything in the store for you, and you should waste no time in making your purchases. Mr. Clarke informs the Examiner that the rush of Christmas trade has already begun. People have evidently commenced to realize how unsatisfactory it is to postpone the Christmas shopping until the last awful week" and the result is that many are purchasing their gifts now. You had better get in line with the rest and don't fail to pay a visit to Messrs. Clarke and Sons.

Cigar Store Changes Hands Messrs. Yeotes Bros. Purchase

Mr. M. Pappas has sold his cigar store at 337 George street to his nephews, Messrs. Louis and George Yeotes, who will take possession to-morrow. Mr. Pappas is moving across the road to his other store, occupied by Messrs. Kingdon and Spence, barbers. He will enlarge the establishment as far as Gordon's butcher shop, and will carry on a wholesale and retail tobacco business there. Extensive improvements will be made and the store will be one of the finest cigar stores in the city. Mr. Pappas is going to enlarge the barber shop conducted by Spence and Kingdon and add two more chairs, making five in all. He will carry a complete stock of everything required in the tobacconist line and expects to have a magnificently equipped and furnished store.

The fact that his present premises were not large enough to permit him to carry on a wholesale business as well as retail, influenced Mr. Pappas in making the change. His nephews, Messrs. Yeotes Brothers are well and favourably known in the city and no doubt will receive a liberal share of patronage. Their sole aim will be to give satisfaction to their patrons and their new enterprise should meet with success. They are now in complete charge of the establishment, including the cigar store, pool room, shoe shine parlour and shooting gallery.

A Disciple Of Izaak Walton Comes To Defence Of The Carp

"Give a dog a bad name and then hang him," or, rather, "give a fish a bad name and then destroy it," is a proverb that can be applied to the carp, judging from the condemnatory remarks passed upon this species of fish by "Deckhand," in a recent issue of the "Examiner." Were there a piscatorial court where this much maligned fish could enter an action for defamation of character, I think it would stand a good chance of securing heavy damages. As, however, Mr. Carp is unable himself to clear the stigma attached to his name, I should like to take up the cudgels in his defence.

The carp is an herbivorous fish, and came originally from Asia. In very early times it was introduced into Europe, where it is extensively reared in artificial ponds. The monks probably brought it over to England, by whom it was highly esteemed as an article of diet, as is evidenced by its being found in the moats surrounding the ancient monasteries. "From Europe it was introduced into America some years ago, and has been widely distributed by the Government." It is remarkable for its longevity (it is believed to attain the age of 100 years or more) and also for its cunning. Izaak Walton, that great authority on the gentle art of angling, called it the Freshwater Fox, because of its cleverness in evading capture. How the idea of its being destructive to other fish originated I do not know, but some two or three years ago, if my memory serves me right, (I stand open to correction) the question was raised in the United States, and a commission was appointed to investigate the matter. As no scientific evidence of its destructive qualities could be secured, and as it was looked upon as a valuable marketable commodity, (some hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth being sold annually) no action for its extermination was taken. The origin of the appearance of the carp in Lake Simcoe is generally accepted locally as this: A gentleman, not a hundred miles from Newmarket, procured some a few years ago, which he kept in a private reservoir. Somehow, or other, the reservoir burst and the fish escaped, making their way into the Holland River, and Lake Simcoe, and so travelling south on to the Trent Canal. I don't think there is the slightest danger of the stock of fish in these waters becoming depleted by the advent of the carp. Being herbivorous, the wild rice may probably suffer. The carp is only at home in muddy, stagnant waters, and I venture to assert that it will not be found in appreciable numbers except where these conditions prevail. It will not thrive in clear or running water. I have caught many carp but never found them except in stagnant ponds and ancient moats in England, where they were probably placed hundreds of years ago by the monks. Rice Lake, with its beds of wild rice and reed will be an ideal breeding place for this species of fish. As to its excellent qualities, about which there is considerable prejudice, that is merely a matter of individual taste. Properly cooked the carp is "O.K." The monks of old—traditional epicures as they were, evidently did not despise it. It is largely eaten by the Jews, and its marketable value in Toronto is, I am told, somewhere in the neighbourhood of 10 cents per lb. From a sportsman's point of view, too, the pleasure of having a battle with this Reynard of the water, will give as great a thrill of excitement as a 'lunge or bass. They often attain a weight of 8 or 10 pounds, or more, and I did hear of one being killed at Bolsover, below Kinsfield, that weighed 28 lbs. This, however, like most fishermen's yarns, should, I think, be taken "cum grano salis." Until positive evidence is produced of the carp's guilt, let us adjudge him innocent of the criminal propensities with which he is charged.

"A Disciple of Izaak Walton."

A PLEA FOR EARLY SHOPPING

Now is the time to do your Christmas shopping—not the last day or two before Christmas, when the stocks have been picked up and the weary clerks have no opportunity of looking after your wants properly. The best Christmas present that you can give the clerks of the city is to buy your gifts now. The advantage is yours, too, as you have a better selection and will receive more careful attention later on.

LET IT LIE.

There are, in every community in Canada, persons who are ready, from conviction or vanity or innate spirit of contention, to take up the religious challenge, that may, in a moment of weakness or misjudgment, be thrown down. Don't take it up; let it lie. The result can only be injurious, can and will lead us to no good end. The pages of history are drenched red with the blood of men and women, spilt over religious controversies that have settled nothing, and had no issue more definite than sowing strife and dissension. Men differ in religious belief. Let them differ; let them agree to disagree. Men differ in tastes and appetites, but these are never made the subject of bloody controversy. All religions in Canada hold the grand essentials of Christianity in common; it is only in details that there is difference. Our beliefs upon these points differ; but is affects our faith not a fig's worth if anybody questions or even denounces them. But resentment of criticism, which in effect does not affect the essence of things, is a deplorable evil. Canada is a country of mixed races and creeds. All races and creeds are equal under the law; all have the same toleration. One creed is no better than another, except in the way it is lived. Disputation and controversy are as nothing compared with a silent rivalry as to what faith shows best in the life lived.

ASSIMILATION OF POPULATION

Conservative speakers and journals, feeling that they cannot successfully criticise the immigration policy and practice of the Laurier Government, assail it on the score that we are receiving dangerous foreign elements. They assert that both in numbers and character this foreign element will have dangerous results; that this foreign element will be difficult of assimilation, and that Canadian institutions stand to suffer from their influence. In the House Hon. George E. Foster, the chief, as well as the ablest, critic of the Opposition, emphasized this view. And, from a party standpoint he was justified in taking such a course, no matter how little facts tend to sustain his contention. He knows, and all the Government's enemies know, that on the merits of the Government's policy there is no ground for attack. They realize how strongly it contrasts with the achievements of the Conservative party when that party was in power. Then the West was dead and unsettled, in a double sense—unsettled by the resentment at Conservative misgovernment, and unsettled as to population. The Liberal Government, the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, when it came to power, opened up the country to settlement, and, by a wise and energetic policy, poured in population. In the past ten years the Laurier Government has brought into the country a million and a half of immigrants—1,453,391. How many of these were of the dangerous foreign element? From the mother country, our own kith and kin, came 502,054. From the United States, not through the States, but directly from that country, came 497,390; and from other quarters of the globe, including South Africa, Australia, and other British countries, 363,497. Of the total immigration 75 per cent. was British, or to the same effect—people accustomed to governmental conditions based on the British model. Only five per cent. is partially foreign, that is, needing any assimilating influences to put them in line with Canadian civil conditions and institutions of government. In the seven months, up to the end of October, 1910, the immigration was 227,-969 and of this 77 per cent. was British or Anglo-Saxon, so that the process of assimilation, making good Canadians, applies to only 23 or 25 per cent. of our immigration. This is a problem we must meet if we would fill up our country and develop its resources. The responsibility of the Government in respect of the assimilation of our new population is naturally shared by the citizens of older Canada, and especially by the churches. No matter what nationality our new citizens are of, no matter how high the status of civilization, there is need to provide against deterioration, by supplying the highest civilizing influence, that of Christianity, through the establishment of religious privileges, religious culture. Without these there will be deterioration and the better element of our immigration will be unfitted to exercise the assimilating influence it is capable of doing under favourable conditions. The problem thus presented throws a tremendous responsibility upon the Canadian Church and gives strong emphasis to the cause of Home Missions.

FOR BETTER CITY GOVERNMENT.

There seems to be a pretty general feeling amongst those who consider the subject, that the unsatisfactory conditions of city government and municipal government generally, arise from lack of continuity in office of our mayors, aldermen and other members of a council. It will be admitted by everybody that satisfactory municipal government cannot be had without the adoption of some fixed and suitable policy in regard to the management of municipal affairs; without it we cannot have system, and without system we have purposeless and haphazard administration. Every business, every great industry, is managed by a system, more or less perfect, and the greater the perfection the better the results. Without system, the Electric Works of this city would become a hopeless tangle in a week; as would a great department store like Simpson's or Eaton's of Toronto. In these cases thousands of individual agents are units in a system with a central directing authority. Each act of every employee is only a step in carrying out the unity of plan.

Can anybody claim that we have any system directed to any definite end, with every representative and city official working in harmony to some fore-planned and foreseen end and with an eye to the future in regard to undertakings that require years for their accomplishment? To have good results we must have system; to have system we must have reasonable continuity in office, to have reasonable continuity in office we must have some change that will be improvement of our form of city government.

We might have three year terms for aldermen, so many retiring in rotation each year. But we adopted a two year term for aldermen and without even giving it a trial, the people in their blindness, voted for a return to the worst possible form of election, the ward system. It is suggested that we try the plan of government by commission, government on business principles, a system that will continually retain in office some members trained in city government principles, the administration of some definite system, designed to carry out a fixed policy.

The essence of government by commission would be continuity in office, not so much of the body as a whole, but the presence always of a majority of commissioners who know their work and are, to that extent equipped for doing it satisfactorily.

In this regard, the Guelph Mercury printed in a city that is seriously considering the great problem of government by commission, in regard to continuity of office has something pertinent in a recent issue. It says that in some of the English towns they partially arrive at continuity of office through their municipal councils, as we are aiming to do by means of Commissioners elected for one, two and three year periods. The Mayor of Bacup has recently been elected for the twelfth time, the Mayor of Montgomery for the twelfth time, and the Mayor of Dover for the thirteenth time. In most Ontario cities, after a two year term, either the Mayor is tired of the position or the people are tired of him. A Mayor repeatedly elected should have a pretty thorough grasp of the conditions and requirements of all civic departments, but in few cases could he afford the time to give close personal attention to them all. Then he would only count one in a council of changing aldermen, each of whom would be apt to feel that he knew as much about how things should be done as His Worship. Besides, there can never be the specialization of work with each alderman, acting on several committees, which exists under a commission selected to govern one department. Objection to commission management seems to be that it is getting away from representative government, and that there is safety in numbers. This is met by the fact that commissioners are elected, as well as aldermen, and that it is easier to select a few than many good men. As a Guelph alderman stated the other day, all commission proceedings should be reported by the press. It is the public business these commissions are transacting, and the public has a right to know what is being done.

The whole solution of the difficulties of good city government rests with the people. They must take an interest in the election of representatives or we cannot get good representatives. The people must wake up to their responsibility; they must come to realize that an alderman, to be worth his salt, must be elected as a business matter, in the same manner and on the same principle as the manager of a private business enterprise elected because he knows his work and will do it—not elected because he represents some church or lodge or some special interest entirely unconnected with the management of the city's business. When the people become alive to their own interests members of Councils will have a wholesome fear of the people before their eyes and will be more likely to attend to the business of the people than to busy themselves with the promotion of some special and aside interest.

Mr. Borden's Crooked Steering On Canadian Naval Question

(London Advertiser.)

Mr. Borden devoted much of his speech in the House of Commons yesterday to affirming that the Opposition would stand by its naval policy—the latest one—regardless of the attitude of the Nationalists. He concluded by moving an amendment, studiously worded so as to enable the Nationalists to vote with the Conservatives. It reads:

"We beg to assure your excellency of the unalterable attachment and devotion of the people of Canada to the British crown, and of their desire and intention to fulfill all just responsibilities devolving upon this country as one of the nations of the empire. We desire, however, to express our regret that your excellency's gracious speech gives no indication whatever of any intention on the part of your excellency's advisers to consult the people upon the naval policy of Canada."

This is almost identical with Mr. Monk's amendment, which reads:

"The House regrets that the speech from the throne gives no indication whatever as to the intention of the Government to consult the people on the naval policy and general question of the contribution of Canada to the imperial armaments."

The Blondins, the Monks and the Gilberts pretend to assent to the general principle that Canada ought to fulfill all "just responsibilities" as a nation of the empire, but they deny that those responsibilities include naval defence, if their speeches in Drummond and Arthabaska had any meaning. They can vote with a show of consistency for Mr. Borden's amendment, as Mr. Borden was aware when he framed it. This was his motive for omitting a reference to his own policy a money contribution to Great Britain. His trickery is emphasized by the gratuitous "consulting the people." The Government must face its responsibility to the people in due time. It is very easy for an Opposition to demand that Parliament be dissolved when the Government brings forward an important measure, and then accuse the Government if it refuses to allow the Opposition, at its pleasure, to plunge the country into a general election. This is not the British way of doing things. It would make parliamentary government impossible if the precedent were established, in this case the alternative of the referendum would be practicable. Those who favour a money contribution to Great Britain, those who favour a Canadian navy, but think the Government's plan does not go far enough, and those who object to any expenditure whatever, would unite in opposition to the present naval law. A plebiscite would not be a clear test of public opinion. Mr. Borden himself does not say whether he would consult the people by means of a general election or a referendum. He is purposely vague on this as on other aspects.

Today Mr. Borden talks of the Opposition standing firmly by its policy of a year ago; but why did it not stand firmly by its policy of eight months ago? Then it was unanimous for the immediate construction of a Canadian navy. No one stated the case for the Canadian navy project more convincingly than Mr. Foster who said on March 29, 1909:

"Canada should no longer delay in assuming her proper share of the responsibility and financial burden incident to the protection of her exposed coast line and great seaports.

The first and greatest objection which I have to a fixed money contribution is that it bears the aspect of hiring somebody else to do what we ourselves ought to do; as though a man, the father of a family, in lusty health and strength should pay his neighbour something per month for looking after the safety and welfare of his home, instead of doing that duty himself. That seems to me, when you work it out, to be a basic objection to that form of aid. It goes further than that. Suppose you contribute this year your sum, and next year your equal sum, and thereafter year by year. After ten or twelve or twenty or thirty years you will have put out an immense amount of money. You will have been protected in the meantime; but in Canada itself there will be no roots struck, there will be no residue left, there will be no preparation of the soil or beginning of the growth of the product. These words rise to confront Mr. Borden and his followers. They have played fast and loose with a vital question.

AFTER EFFECTS OF THE GRIP

It is fortunate that the Grip epidemic this year is milder in its action than in previous years. This does not mean that it is less dangerous.

The after results of the Grip are apt to be exceeding serious. Do not take any chances,—for the general weakness, and to allay all bronchial irritation after the fever has passed, nothing equals Vinol, which is a delicious combination of the health-giving properties of the cod's liver, with the grease eliminated and tonic iron added.

A lady from Long Branch, N. J., writes: "The Grip left me in a nervous, weakened, run-down condition. After taking three bottles of Vinol I am better and stronger than I have been for years, and I cheerfully recommend Vinol to all who have been ill and need strength." (Name furnished on request.)

After Grip or any severe illness try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not restore your vitality and strength. McDermid & Jury, druggists, Peterborough, Ont.

Dramatists and Children.

According to an observer, writers of plays are generally childless. He says, "It seems that the successful dramatist is at the end of a series and never leaves a successor." Look down the list of them, from Gilbert to Shaw and you will find never a child. Further search brings up Thomas Hardy, Barrie, Maeterlinck, Pinero, Cecil Raleigh, Maugham, Locke, Granville Barker, Frederick Fenn, Louis Napoleon Parker, and only Henry Arthur Jones and Hall Caine are dramatists with children.

Lightning Victims.

Lightning sometimes merely stuns and apparently kills without actually destroying life. In addition to the use of artificial respiration, it is necessary to provide for the restoration of the natural flow of the electric currents, which is done by placing the patient in a good conductor. A warm bath has always the surest.

Buried Landscapes.

One of the most curious results of geological exploration is the discovery of "buried landscapes," by which is meant parts of the former face of the earth now covered under later deposits, but yet retaining so many of their original features that the geologist can ideally reconstruct the scenes that would have been presented to the eye of man if he had been present among them. Sometimes buried landscapes exist in countries now densely inhabited. Investigation has shown that one lies beneath the region in England known as Charnwood forest. The rocky projections seen there are the peaks and crests of a buried mountain chain belonging to the old red sand stone period. Several different phases in the history of this landscape have been traced. At one time it contained salt lakes and desert expanses. In its modern form it is a pastoral region with batters, stony tracts and rocky eminences where the ancient mountains project through the soil.—Detroit Free Press.

Our Elevator

Our elevator is one of the wonders of the age. It cannot possibly fall. The ordinary elevator is held up by ropes, and these ropes often wear out and their connections often break loose, and then—disaster.

Our elevator is exactly like the Lift Lock. It is built on a great steel piston that rises and retires into an equally strong steel cylinder. There are no ropes to break and wear out. The elevator sits directly on its strong steel column.

It gives a comfortable feeling to the shopper when she enters an elevator like ours. All the new elevators that are now being built in the large cities are on this plan. It is quite an interesting machine.

Let us show it to you.

STRATHCONAS OUT OF THE CITY LEAGUE

Commissioners Have Decided to Drop Out to Give Their Players a Better Chance in the O.H.A.

CHANCE FOR THE REST

It will be somewhat surprising news to the fans that the Strathconas have decided to drop out of City League hockey, and that the City League games will not be marked by the red and white of the Commissioners for the first time in six seasons. The Strathconas announced their intention to retire at the meeting of the City League last night, giving as their reason the fact that they do not want to place any handicap in the way of the Peterborough O. H. A. team. Most of the players whom the Strathconas had counted upon to represent them in the City League this season are expected to catch places on the O. H. A. team, and the management of the Strathconas have come to the conclusion that the players will be in much better shape to play their best for Peterborough if they are not handicapped by playing City League hockey as well. For the last two seasons it has been felt that some of the players got too much hockey and could not do themselves justice, and the Commissioners have come to the conclusion that it would be in the best interests of hockey in general and of their players in particular if they gave up their City League franchise. The withdrawal of the Strathconas at last night's meeting resulted in the postponing of the annual meeting for a week, and it will be held next Monday night at 8 o'clock in the Oriental Hotel parlours. With the Commissioners out the League will be better balanced than before and there should be no difficulty in securing enough teams to form one of the best Leagues in the history of the organization. The Straths have always had a team of O. H. A. calibre, reaching the finals each year for the last four years and capturing the championship three times. Their strength has caused other teams to be backward about entering and now that this strong opposition is out of the way there should be a rush of teams eager to get in. The West Ends and T. A. S. teams will be in line as usual and a cordial invitation is extended to any teams in the city who want to play City League, to be represented at next Monday's meeting, when officers will be elected and arrangements made for the coming season.

Through a misunderstanding the T. A. S. Club was not represented at last night's meeting, the clubs to have representatives present being the Strathconas and West Ends. President Graham occupied the chair.

A CHECKER BET

Sporting Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—Will you kindly settle this argument. A bets B that he can defeat him two out of three games at checkers. In case one of the three games is a draw game, does not that count in favour of B?

CHECKERS.

The matter of course hinges upon the result of the other two games. A would have to win both to win his bet. If he lost one, won one and the third was a draw it would win.

Simpson Star Of The Game Best Man On The Field

Peterboro' Boy Wound up his Football Career in a Blaze of Glory...Critics in Hamilton, Toronto and Ottawa Admit That He Played the Game of His Career and Shone in all Departments.

There was one player on the field who stood out more prominently than all the rest, and he was that grand old man of Rugby, Ben Simpson, his playing throughout the afternoon being nothing short of phenomenal. It was not in his kicking that Benny shone, but in running back punts, he invariably making large gains, and but for his stellar work the Tigers would have been swamped worse than they were. Ben was practically the whole back division, for while Moore got away for several sensational runs he did not accomplish them in the same manner Simpson did, as the latter had to run through a broken field, while the Tigers' interference came to the aid of Moore nearly every time he started.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

While the glory must naturally go to the victors there was one man on the Tiger team who must be heralded as the real hero of the game. That man was Ben Simpson, who for the last six years has been recognized as one of Canada's greatest halfbacks. Ben did not play to his usual form in the game against Argonauts at Toronto, and as a result came in for a great deal of adverse criticism at the hands of the Toronto sporting writers. He was referred to as an old man, a "has been," and other uncomplimentary names, but he was without doubt the best man on the field on Saturday. Gall outpunted him all right, but he was not called upon to do nearly as much work as the famous schoolmaster. The Varsity backs had orders to kick to Simpson, for it was thought after the game in Toronto that he would fumble everything which came his way. But he showed his real form on Saturday and made only one fumble all day. After they had kicked to him during the first half and he caught everything in sight, the bombardment started on Art Moore, but Art was also equal to the occasion and seldom let anything get away from him. Now, that it is all over, there is no person on the Tiger team who can be blamed for the defeat. While there may have been mistakes made, every man on the team fought such a hard uphill battle in the last half that there was no chance to kick at any errors which may have been made. As previously stated, Ben Simpson was the hardest worked man on the whole field, and as it was Ben's last game of football, he rang down the curtain with a blaze of glory and made a very creditable exit. He worked like a Trojan from start to finish and he certainly had plenty of work to do for the Varsity backs kicked to him at every opportunity in the first half, expecting him to blow up, but he fooled them badly and played the greatest game of his career. To Ben must go a great deal of the credit for the Tigers making as good a showing as they did, for he carried the ball out of danger time after time and saved what looked like sure scores for the students.—Hamilton Herald.

The sensational star of the Hamilton team was Ben Simpson. It was the schoolmaster's last game, and he certainly made a glorious exit as a fitting climax to his brilliant career on the gridiron. He stood the smashing tackles of the Varsity wings without once wincing. Several times he evaded them behind his own goal, and booted out when a score seemed inevitable. Time and again he ran the ball out from behind his own when surrounded by Varsity wings, and on a couple of occasions he kicked when being pulled down. He was the one man on the team who tackled in brilliant style, and more than once he nailed Dixon, Gall and Maynard when they had cleared the Tiger wings, and were busting for the yellow and black line with almost a clear field before them. Simpson put up about as good a game as he ever played in his life, and that the Tigers were defeated was no fault of his.—Hamilton Times.

Dr. W. B. Hendry: "The result is no surprise; the best team won. Tigers played up to their tip-top form, with Ben Simpson playing one of his best games. It was a wonderful game but Varsity won on dash and play of the whole team, particularly the backs. The passing was accurate, the running fine and the kicking of the best. Ben Simpson was the best player on the field.

The sensational star of the Hamilton team was Ben Simpson. It was the old schoolmaster's last game and he certainly made a glorious exit as a fitting climax to his brilliant career on the gridiron. He stood the smashing tackles of the speedy Varsity wings without wincing. Several times he evaded them behind his own goal and booted out when a score seemed inevitable. Time and again he ran the ball out and saved with his beautiful tackling, when Gall, Maynard or Dixon had cleared the Tiger wings.—Montreal Herald.

Schoolmaster Ben again exploded the "can't come back" theory. Simpson was head and shoulders over every other man on the Tiger team, running and punting with all his old time strength and cleverness and repeatedly darting through broken fields for big gains. It is doubtful, in fact, if the old warrior has ever played in better form.—Ottawa Citizen.

After Saturday's exhibition you've got to hand it to old Ben Simpson. The veteran divided honours with Gall. They were the finest men in the game.—Ottawa Citizen.

Hamilton, unlike Varsity, adhered to the four back combination practically throughout, but, taking the play for it, they might as well have had only one man on their rear division—Ben Simpson. The old warrior was responsible for saving the Tigers from an ignominious defeat. He was energy personified, also sureness. With few exceptions the "Schoolmaster" handled all the punts directed to the Tigers' back field, and only once did he make a slip, and on that occasion he was interfered with by Burton. His booting kept Hamilton in the game. He showed great judgement in placing his kicks, and frequently gained thirty and forty yards by skilfully dropping his drives just outside the chalk mark. Not only did he excel in punting, but he showed his class by running back kicks through a broken field. The Varsity wings were on top of him most of the time, but he always struggled on until overcome by force of numbers. Simpson was as game as a pebble and though many another man would have stopped, he stayed until the end, despite the many hard tackles he was subjected to.—Toronto News.

Captain Gall, Varsity:—We got a harder game than we expected. The Tiger back division, especially old Ben Simp on, surprised us.

Referee Phil McKenzie, Montreal: It was one of the finest games I ever saw in my life, especially considering the slippery going. The back division played perfect ball. Varsity's running and passing was wonderful. Gall and Simpson played great ball. Old Ben surprised them. The Tigers were weakest on the wing line, the one department which I thought they would shine in.

FUN IN THE HOME.

Make Life There Joyous and Bar Out Business Worries.

Whatever your lot in life, keep joy with you, says Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine. It is a great healer. Sorrow, worry, jealousy, envy, bad temper, create friction and grind away the delicate human machinery so that the brain loses its cunning.

Half the misery in the world would be avoided if the people would make a business of having plenty of fun at home instead of running everywhere else in search of it.

"Now For Rest and Fun." "No Business Troubles Allowed Here." These are good home building mottoes.

When you have had a perplexing day, when things have gone wrong with you and you go home at night exhausted, discouraged, blue, instead of making your home miserable by going over your troubles and trials just bury them. Instead of dragging them home and making yourself and your family unhappy with them and spoiling the whole evening, just lock everything that is disagreeable in your office.

Just resolve that your home shall be a place for bright pictures and pleasant memories, kindly feelings toward everybody and "a corking good time" generally. If you do this you will be surprised to see how your vocation or business wrinkles will be ironed out in the morning and how the crooked things will be straightened.

THE COTTON GIN.

Whitney Got the Idea From the Work of an Old Negro.

Eli Whitney, the inventor of the cotton gin, got the germ of his great idea from seeing through the interstices of a hut an old negro work a hand saw among the freshly picked cotton stored within.

The teeth of the saw tore the lint from the seed easily and quickly, and young Whitney (he was barely thirteen at the time) realized at once that a machine working a number of similar saws simultaneously would revolutionize the cotton growing industry.

He said nothing to anybody, but set to work building models and experimenting. His difficulties were enormous, for he not only had to make his own wheels, cogs, etc., but he had also first to forge his own tools and even to manufacture the paint wherewith to color his many plans and drawings.

But he succeeded in the end, and, though the outbreak of war and other hindrances prevented the invention from being actually placed upon the market until many years afterward, the first complete cotton gin ever constructed was built from those very models and plans and with scarcely a single alteration.

A Useless Question.

"They have named the baby after Uncle Belshazzar."

"Has Uncle Belshazzar money?"

"Do you suppose they liked the name?"—Pittsburg Post.

Mr. Leader Replies To Mr. W. H. Moore

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.

Dear Sir,—Your correspondent Mr W H Moore, failed to understand my position, and evidently thinks I am against a proper remuneration being given to those who serve the city. What I said was that under the present system of selection, and with an apathetic electorate, the result would be practically the same under a paid commission as under an unpaid Council. I think so still. I would not be against a proper remuneration of the services of good men, but I am against, and would strenuously oppose, the creation of fat positions for inefficients.

Mr Moore asks, would not the works and other departments do as well under separate commission as the Waterworks Department. This is horrible all around with a vengeance. With three or four departmental commissions, each in connection with and yet semi-independent of the Council. I am afraid we should have a very poor system of municipal government. He advocates a three year term but with only five members and I presume, all retiring together. But under this system, where should we get continuity.

Mr Moore also throws cold water on my suggestion of a ratepayers association, on the ground that the Council have for years ignored the suggestions of the Board of Trade; but the kind of body I had in my mind, would not allow the Council to ignore their wishes, at least not for long. I did not claim to have found any novel or utopian scheme that would rectify everything in a day, but gave my suggestions as an honest attempt to help solve the problem of the city's government.

Yours, etc.

RING WORM AND DANDRUFF.

They Are Each Caused By a Pestiferous Germ.

Ring worms and dandruff are somewhat similar in their origin; each is caused by a parasite. The germ that causes dandruff digs to the root of the hair, and saps its vitality causing falling hair, and finally baldness. Without dandruff there never would be baldness, and to cure dandruff it is necessary to kill the germ. There has been no hair preparation that would do this until the discovery of Newbro's Herpicide which positively kills the dandruff germ, allays itching instantly and makes hair glossy and soft as silk. Take no substitutes. There is nothing "just as good." Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

For sale by McDermid and Imy druggists; also Payne's drug store. $1 bottles guaranteed.

Altogether the party enjoyed themselves, hoping for birth days to come oftener. Nine o'clock brought it to a close with a good night all round.

Woodstock's Chimes Are Heard For First Time---Description Of The Event

The Woodstock Sentinel Review of Monday contains the following in reference to the inauguration of Woodstock's first chime of bells:

On Saturday evening for the first time in the history of Woodstock and Oxford County, the chime of church bells was heard. The chime of ten bells, eight of which only were rung on Saturday, has just been installed in the tower of New St. Paul's Church having been provided for in the will of the late William Grey.

Towards eight o'clock on Saturday evening people began congregating about the church, and when the first chime rang out at eight o'clock a large crowd was moving about the corners of Wellington and Dundas street. Changes were rung on 3, 6 and 8 bells, after which many well known hymns, including the National Anthem, God Save the King, and the Doxology were rendered in the most artistic manner. The concert was never one to Woodstock people will be most thankful for, and for about one hour and a quarter.

The bells are very powerful and also perfectly tuned, and the sweet melodious tones as they swell in manipulation of the keys. Rev. J. G. Wallace, the chime was rendered to advantage, and the first two or three bars of each of the selections were rather puzzling to the old melodies familiar to many people, but after the first few bars our ears readily recognized what they were. Very appropriate and exciting about home tunes rang on church chimes, the penetrative sweetness and clearness of the peals seem to have their subtle expressions on the inhabitants even on the streets. (N. B. St. Paul's congregation are to be congratulated on having such a splendid instrument.)

Visitors at Oxford County and the Dominion Exhibition were present in the night to hear the chimes. The concert was a never one to Woodstock people and will be most thankful for, and for about one hour and a quarter.

Clock Is Yours If You Can Guess When It Will Stop

Great interest was taken in the competition at the Brock street roller rink last week in which the competitors had to guess at the number of seeds in a huge pumpkin. There were hundreds of guesses made and when the seeds were counted on Saturday night the correct number was found to be 402. Carl Rose had guessed this figure exactly and as a result was awarded the handsome chair offered for the successful competitor. Tom Pappas with 401 and J. F. Milloy with 403 were the next best guessers. This week there is another still more interesting competition. In the window of Clarke and Sons' jewellery store is displayed a very handsome clock which will be given to the person who guesses the closest to the time it stops. The only condition is that competitors must buy an admission ticket at the Brock street rink.

Big Week's Programme At The George St. Rink

The George street roller rink has a great programme arranged for this week, no less than twenty prizes being offered for the special events scheduled. There will be something doing each night. Last evening there was a skating contest for ladies and gentlemen. To-night there is a competition for the best lady skaters in couples. To-morrow night the bill calls for a block party. On Thursday the big feature of the week will take place in the shape of a grand carnival for which eight prizes are offered. Friday evening there is a skating contest for ladies alone and on Saturday afternoon there will be a children's circus carnival with four prizes offered. The week's programme will be brought to a close on Saturday night with a skating contest for gentlemen alone.

Splendid Display Of Magnificent Furs At Wm. E. Lech's Store

The attention of the early Christmas shoppers, and it is hoped that everyone is taking the advice of the merchants, to purchase early and thus avoid the hurry and bustle of the holiday season, is drawn to the store of Mr. Wm. E. Lech, at 366 George street, where is found a choice array of beautiful furs. To the man at the head of a home, the question is asked, "What would be more suitable for a Christmas gift to the wife and daughter of the house than a nice set of furs or fur jacket?" Certainly there is nothing that would be more highly prized or received with greater appreciation. The young man who intends giving his best girl a present would also do well to look at this up-to-date store before making any choice. Mr. Lech's extensive stock is all new and comprises only the best lines obtainable in the market. There is a good range to choose from, and all the best styles are here shown. There is something to suit all purses, and all are assured of excellent quality.
